That by the alterations made in the law by successive legislative enactments, and changes made in the practice of the different courts, the emoluments of an attorney or solicitor have been very materially reduced.

That your petitioners willingly pay their share of all the taxes imposed on the community at large, but feel that the Certificate Duty levied on their branch of the legal profession, and upon them alone, is not founded on any just principle.

Your petitioners further submit, that as the tax was originally imposed to meet the exigencies of a war, involving the very existence of the State, and in extent and importance unexampled in history, it should now, in a time of profound peace, with commerce and manufactures improving, and a revenue steadily increasing, be abolished; especially, as while the amount produced forms but a very minute fraction of the revenue of the empire, it yet presses severely, exclusively, and invidiously, upon a comparatively few individuals.

Your petitioners therefore humbly pray your Honourable House, that the annual duty on certificates of attorneys and solicitors in Ireland, may be wholly abolished.

And your Petitioners will pray.

EFFECTS OF LORD BROUGHAM'S ACT FOR ABOLISHING IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBTS UNDER 20*l*.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Your insertion of the following letter in your valuable Journal, being one of a large number which I have received from parties to whom I have applied for debts under 20*l*. will serve to shew the disastrous effects of the same to the trading community, and that debtors are not now content with defrauding their creditors, but treat them in many cases with ridicule and contempt. The undermentioned letter was a few days since received by me from a party holding a good situation in this city, in reply to a third application requesting payment of 3*l*. odd, to avoid any unpleasant proceedings being taken against him to compel payment thereof, and after giving him eight months from the date of my first application.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

The following SUGGESTIONS, by "P." are worth consideration. Some of them are excellent, and they are practical.

"If you think the following suggestions worthy a place in your valuable paper, they may lead to a good result. I consider it would be very beneficial to defendants, and not at all prejudicial to plaintiffs, that a full particular of a plaintiff's demand should be given with the writ of summons, instead of, as now, with the notice of declaration; and that defendants should have eight days, instead of four, to settle an action, without further expense. If a party resides at some distance from the plaintiff's attorney, he has scarcely time to inquire what the action may be brought for, or, as is often necessary, to consult with some other person, who may, in fact, be liable over to the defendant for payment; and it would prevent pettifogging or vindictive attorneys from being enabled to put a defendant to further unnecessary expense before the expiration of eight days, and would seldom delay a plaintiff in recovering a just demand, as he cannot now file his declaration before the expiration of the eight days, but may increase the expense by affidavit and instructions for declaration. It would also be a great advantage to both plaintiffs and defendants, that, after a verdict, the judge should be at liberty to issue an order, directing the sheriff to take possession of the plaintiff's or defendant's goods (whichever the verdict may be against), so as to prevent a fraudulent sale, but that the officer should not continue in possession, on having security that the goods should be forthcoming at a certain time, so as to afford an opportunity for a motion for a new trial, &c. I have known sales made immediately after verdicts, before costs could be taxed or execution issued, and parties thus deprived of all benefit of the verdict.

LAW OF SETTLEMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I have to thank you for the able article which appears in your Journal of the 15th inst. on the subject of Sir James Graham's proposed Law of Settlement, and for your own suggestions for abolishing removals altogether.

There can be no doubt as to the extreme simplicity of the plan you propose, but I think you will agree, on reflection, that there would be much injustice in burdening a parish with all the poor who reside within it.

Take, for example, the parishes situated in the outskirts of London and other large towns. The labour of farms is performed by the residents of their outskirts—for instance, the parishes of Shoreditch, Bethnal-green, Stepney, and many others contain an immense population of poor labourers. Would you propose that this poor population should be supported by the rate-payers of those parishes, while the rich residents of the parishes in the heart of the metropolis are to be unburdened with any poor at all?

I think you must give this part of your scheme a little further consideration, whereby you may agree in its injustice with

THE CHANCERY COMPENSATION JOB.

A TIMELY pamphlet has been sent to us, professing to be a statement in aid of Mr. WATSON'S proposed renewal of his motion for inquiring into this most iniquitous affair.(a) Many of the facts set forth in its pages have already appeared in our columns, but there are some novel aspects of the question which may well engage the attention of our readers for a few minutes.

The annual charge imposed partly upon the Profession, partly upon the unhappy suitors, by this monstrous compensation job, amounts, in the whole, to no less a sum than 77,071*l.* 7s. per annum.

From the speech of the Solicitor-General, it appears that the Bill was drawn by Mr. WAINWRIGHT, one of the persons compensated.

It was then submitted to a committee of the Law Institution!!

How was that committee constituted?

It consisted of Mr. FOSS, not then a solicitor; Mr. MARTINEAU, appointed a taxing master under the Act! Mr. FOLLETT, appointed a taxing master under the Act! Mr. EDWIN FIELD, whose elaborate defences of the job cannot be forgotten by any member of the Profession.

Do the annals of jobbing in any country, in any age, record so audacious a job as this; so planned, so executed?

And does it not kindle indignation to reflect that it was perpetrated under the apparent sanction of the very Profession it has so grievously annoyed; that it should have emanated from the rooms of the Institution calling itself the chartered representative of the Attorneys and Solitors of England and Wales?

Let us see precisely what was thus concocted by a person who was to profit by it, and palmed upon the Legislature as having the approval of the Profession.

The 18th section of the Act provided, that if any person compensated should accept office, no compensation shall be reduced so as to make the amount to be received during office in respect of compensation and salary, together less than the full net annual value of the fees and emoluments in respect of which the compensation shall have been awarded.

The effect of this is, that the compensated Taxing Masters receive as follows:—

George Gatty . . .	7,232	19	1	per ann.
Henry Ramsay Baines . .	7,204	3	8	"
Richard Mills . . .	6,580	12	9	"
John Wainwright . . .	6,000	6	9	"
	£27,018	2	3	"

The duties of taxing master(b) (with ten weeks' vacation) are to tax costs from eleven till three, with a further hour's attendance till four, to complete privately the work done.

The present salary of the Lord Chief Justice of England is . . .	£8,000 per ann.
The future salary of the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas	7,000 "

A most suspicious fact is first noticed in the pamphlet before us. In the Bill, as introduced by the Chancellor, the Lords of the Treasury were, as in every other compensation clause, the commissioners for awarding the compensation. In the Commons, this clause was struck out! By whom, when, or how, nobody knows!

Let us now trace, with the author of the pamphlet, some of the more striking details of this gigantic job.

The Act of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 94, had provided that vacancies which occurred in the office of the Six Clerks should not be filled up, and five only were remaining when the recent Act passed. Some of them were willing to have remained and served in other offices, but they were all, together with their subordinates, dismissed, to live in luxurious idleness, and the sum of 19,581*l.* 1s. 1d. per annum was thus saddled in new fees upon the suitors of the Court.

But the most astounding part of the whole affair was the compensation awarded to the Sworn Clerks.

Originally they were the only attorneys of the Court of Chancery; but in 1729 solicitors were admitted to practise in Chancery, though it was still necessary for them to employ the Sworn Clerks as their clerks in court.

By an order of Lord HARDWICKE in 1743, a table was framed of fees which were to be paid to the Sworn Clerks, and office copies were directed to be paid for according to a scale therein ascertained, and also certain other fees on the taxation of costs. For every attendance on a Master on other occasions, by the direction or at the request of the proper client or his solicitor, if together with the solicitor in the cause, there was allowed a fee of 3s. [illegible] But it was expressly declared in a note that the fee is only to be allowed by the Master on taxing costs between the client and his solicitor, or clerk in court; "but on taxing costs between party and party no fee is to be allowed to the Sworn Clerk for any such attendance, together with the solicitor in the cause."

It is clear that these fees were allowed in direct terms, only where the business was done and the attendance actually given.

In 1807 an order was made for an increase of these fees, upon the petition of the Sworn Clerks that they were inadequate to the duties performed.

But gradually the solicitors came to act without their aid, and in 1824 a commission was issued by Lord ELDON to inquire into the office. The evidence shewed decisively that the office was practically a sinecure.

In 1838, Lord LYNDHURST issued an order that the Sworn Clerks and the Waiting Clerks should not "be entitled to receive any fees for attendance in court, except in cases when they shall actually attend, and when this attendance shall be necessary."

This order was, however, of little practical value. The officers continued to charge the fees, always under pretence of their being warranted by some proceeding in the cause; and if it be asked how they contrived this, the answer is—THEY TAXED THEIR OWN COSTS!!

And their compensation has been awarded, not upon the fees they were entitled to, but upon those they charged.

But this is not all! Another iniquity remains to be told: for the unveiling of which the Profession and the public are indebted to the author of this timely pamphlet.

The Sworn Clerks' fees had increased, in the year 1842, to the sum of 77,319*l.* 11s. 1d. for the year, in consequence of the working off the arrears by the appointment of the two Vice-Chancellors; and hence in that year the fees were very much greater than ever they had been before, or could be again.

Accordingly, the gentleman who drew the Act, and the gentlemen of the Law Institution who sanctioned it, fixed the time for estimating the compensation at the value of the fees for three years expiring on any day between the passing of the Act and the 1st of November following; and it was accordingly taken on the last three years, up to 29th October, 1842. The effect of this was, to give a compensation, not upon a fair average of years, but upon a period when the amount was extraordinary.

Thus were the suitors first mulcted of fees which were illegal, then taxed for compensation for those illegal fees, and then the average struck for a season which yielded a sum that a longer and fairer average would not have furnished.

We have already shewn how much of the burden thus created falls upon the solicitor. The above outline of this useful pamphlet shews how Parliament was deceived throughout the whole business. Mr. WATSON promises again to bring it under the consideration of the Legislature; and we trust he will succeed in convincing his audience that justice to the suitor and solicitor demands the rescinding of a bargain so tainted in its inception and progress as the Chancery Compensation Job.

THE ROGUES' INDEMNITY ACT.

FROM all quarters complaints come to us of the mischievous operation of Lord BROUGHAM's Act for the relief of fraudulent debtors and the ruin of honest creditors. Many striking illustrations have already appeared in the columns of the LAW TIMES. But lament and indignation are wasted if they be not brought immediately under the notice of those in whom is vested the power of redressing the wrong complained of. Rulers require to be teased into doing an act of justice; Parliament must be besieged with petitions and remonstrances, and individual sufferers must bawl their wrongs into the ears of individual legislators. Thus only will a bad law be amended by a senate so overwhelmed with business as is ours.

We have in our own case adopted a plan which we recommend to all who have seen or felt the grievance of the cruel law of last session; we have privately addressed to the author of the law a brief epistle, shortly stating the wrong inflicted, and the remedy we would suggest.

The wrong is, that a man who has property that cannot be taken in execution should be enabled to snap his fingers at his creditor simply by living in lodgings or in a furnished house.

The remedy is to enable the creditor, on the return of nulla bona by the sheriff, to summon the debtor before the commissioner, and subject him to the law of insolvency.

We cannot conceive why a man who cannot pay 19*l.* should not be treated as an insolvent equally with the man who owes 21*l.*

The remedy is reasonable, and it would be efficient. It needs but to be named to recommend itself to every practical man.

We, therefore, entreat our readers, whenever a case occurs in their practice in which the injustice of Lord BROUGHAM's law is exhibited, forthwith to address to the noble lord a short statement of the facts, and a demand that he, as the author of the mischief, would provide the remedy above proposed.

And if Lord BROUGHAM be so enamoured of his pet that he will see in it no fault, or only one fault, as he alleges, then let them individually address petitions to both Houses of Parliament, in like manner setting forth the facts and how to amend the evil, and intrust them either to the noble lord himself, or to Lords COTTENHAM or CAMPBELL in the Lords, and to their own representatives in the Commons; and if their injured clients would add their petitions to the number, there can be little doubt that attention will be directed to the mischief, and that the very simple and effective cure we have suggested will be applied, were it only to be rid of a question that must not be permitted to rest until injured creditors be righted and roguish debtors compelled to honesty.

NEW RULES AND ORDERS IN BANKRUPTCY.

THROUGH an accidental error, the price of the two 12mo. sheets containing the New Rules and Orders in Bankruptcy for binding with books on those subjects, was stated last week at 1s. each, whereas it should have been one shilling for the two, or sixpence for either.

The second edition of Mr. HOMER's Insolvent Acts, comprising these New Rules, &c. is now ready.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

A Selection of Legal Maxims, Classified and Illustrated. By HERBERT BROOM, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London, 1845. Maxwell and Son.

THIS is a very ingenious and a very useful work, peculiarly adapted to aid the researches of the student, and even the practitioner will often find his memory refreshed and his knowledge enlarged by reference to Mr. BROOM's pages. It is not, indeed, a mere collection of legal maxims, for that a dictionary will supply; but its chief value lies in its illustrations of those selected. The volume is, in fact, a budget of succinct treatises on curious legal topics—the maxim serving for a text, and the examples and exceptions are brought down to the latest decisions. In the library this work will occupy a place by the side of Smith's Leading Cases.

The maxims are classified to prevent wearisome repetition. The plan adopted is this:—The first two chapters treat briefly of the maxims that relate to constitutional principles, and the mode in which the laws are administered. These are subdivided into sections, severally handling the rules founded on public policy, the maxims relating to the Crown, to the judicial office, to the mode of administering justice. After these come maxims that are rather deductions of reason than rules of law, and which therefore admit only of illustration. Such, for instance, as "Ubi eadem ratio, ibi idem jus." "Cessante ratione cessat ipsa lex." "Utile per inutile non vitiatur." The fourth chapter comprises the principles that may be deemed universal; such as "Ubi jus, ibi remedium." "Volenti non fit injuria," &c. The next chapter treats of those which relate to property, its rights, and liabilities, and to marriage and descent. These are followed by the maxims that concern the interpretation of deeds and written instruments, and the law of contracts; and the volume concludes with the maxims applicable to the law of evidence.

Of the utility of such a work, if well written, there can be no question; and Mr. BROOM has certainly performed his task most creditably. From pages that afford so fertile a field for extract we are perplexed what to take by way of specimen, seeing that this busy season compels us to look for brevity. But perhaps the following may serve to show the reader the manner of the author; and it has the merit of explicitly setting forth a point about which there is much perplexity in the legal mind.

VOLENTI NON FIT INJURIA.

(Wing. Max., 482.)—It is a general rule of the English law, that no one can maintain an action for a wrong where he has consented or contributed to the act which occasions his loss. (a)

In accordance with the above maxim, when an action is brought for criminal conversation, the law is now clearly settled to be, that, if the husband consent to his wife's adultery, it goes in bar of his action:

(a) Per Tindal, C. J. cited Gould v. Oliver (2 Scott, N. R. 257). See Bird v. Holbrook (4 Bing. 628, 639, 640; Plowd. 501).

if he be guilty of negligence, or even of loose or improper conduct not amounting to a consent, it only goes in reduction of damages. (b) So, if a person says generally, "There are spring-guns in this wood," and if another then takes upon himself to go into the wood, knowing that he is in hazard of meeting with the injury which the guns are calculated to produce, he does so at his own peril, and must take the consequences of his own act. (c) So, although the deck of a vessel is primâ facie an improper place for the stowage of a cargo, or any part of it, yet, when the loading on the deck has taken place with the consent of the merchant, it is obvious that no remedy against the shipowner or master for a wrongful loading of the goods on deck can exist. (Gould v. Oliver, 2 Scott, N. R. 257, 264.) In addition to the above and similar decisions, there is an extensive class of cases to which the maxim volenti non fit injuria may be applied, but which will be more conveniently referred to another and more general principle of law; those, namely, in which redress is sought for an injury which has resulted from the negligence of both plaintiff and defendant, and in many of which it has, therefore, been held, that the former is precluded from recovering damages. (d)

Further, the rule has always been, that, if a man has actually paid what the law would not have compelled him to pay, but what in equity and conscience he ought to pay, he cannot recover it back again in an action for money had and received. Thus, where a man has paid a debt which would otherwise have been barred by the Statute of Limitations, or a debt contracted during his infancy, which, in justice, he ought to discharge, in these cases, though the law would not have compelled payment, yet, the money being paid, it will not oblige the payee to refund it. But where money is paid under a mistake, which there was no ground to claim in conscience, the party may recover it back again as money had and received. (e)

There is also a large class of cases in which it has been held, that money paid voluntarily cannot be recovered, although the original payment was not required by any equitable consideration; and these cases are very nearly allied in principle to those which have been considered in treating of a payment made in ignorance of the law.

Thus, an occupier of lands, during a course of twelve years, paid the property tax to the collector under stat. 46 Geo. 3, c. 65, and likewise the full rent as it became due to the landlord, without claiming, as he might have done, any deduction on account of the tax so paid; and it was held, that the occupier could not recover from the landlord any part of the tax so paid, for the payment was voluntary, and, according to the principle above stated, could not therefore be recovered. (f)

The maxim under consideration holds only where the party has a freedom of exercising his will; (g) and therefore, where a debtor from mere necessity, occasioned, for instance, by a wrongful detainer of goods, pays more than the creditor can in justice demand, he shall not be said to pay it willingly, and has a right to recover the surplus so paid. (h)

The plaintiff having, in the month of August, pawned some goods with the defendant for 20*l.* without making any agreement for interest, went in the October following to redeem them, when the defendant insisted on having 10*l.* as interest for the 20*l.* The plaintiff tendering him 20*l.* and 4*l.* for interest, knowing the same to be more than the legal interest amounted to, the defendant still insisted upon having 10*l.* as interest: whereupon the plaintiff, finding that he could not otherwise get his goods back, paid defendant the sum which he demanded, and brought an action for the surplus beyond the legal interest as money had and received to his use. The Court held, that the action would well lie, for it was a payment by compulsion. (i)

It is worthy of observation, also, that there are cases where an intentional wrong-doer will be, to a certain extent, protected by the law through motives of public policy. Thus, a horse with a rider on him cannot be distrained damage feasant, on the ground of the danger to the peace which might result if such a distress were levied; and therefore, to a plea in trespass, justifying the taking of a horse, cart, and other chattels, damage feasant, it is a good replication that the horse, cart, and chattels were, at the time of the distress, in the actual possession and under the personal care of, and then being used by, the plaintiff. The Law of Bankruptcy, Insolvency, and Mercantile Sequestration in Scotland. By JOHN HILL BURTON, Esq. Advocate. Edinburgh, 1845. Tait.

ALTHOUGH treating of the law of Scotland, this work is not without interest to the English lawyer, who has frequent occasion in practice to refer to the Scotch law on an occurrence of so large a range in its effects as insolvency.

Mr. BURTON'S volume is admirably fitted to supply to the Profession south of the Tweed whatever information they may require on this subject. It exhibits extensive learning, is laboriously got up, and printed upon a plan which might be advantageously adopted with our own law books. The principle is set forth in a conspicuous type; the cases that illustrate it follow in a smaller type. The effect is to impress the former more deeply upon the memory, and it materially aids in hasty reference, so often required in court.

INCREASE IN THE VALUE OF PROPERTY IN AYRSHIRE.—It is a gratifying evidence of the enhancement of the value of landed property in Ayrshire, caused by the opening up of mineral fields consequent on the intersection of the country by the Glasgow and Ayrshire Railway, that the estate of Picton, in the parish of Dalry, purchased by Dr. Smith, a few years ago, at 14,000*l.*, was sold within the last twelve months at 18,000*l.*, and has again changed hands very recently at 35,000*l.*—Ayr Advertiser.

INCREASE OF RAILWAY TRAFFIC.—The increase in the traffic receipts of the undermentioned 24 railways for the first six weeks of this year, as compared with the corresponding period of last year, amounts to 63,334*l.*—namely, Birmingham and Gloucester, 2,202*l.*; Chester and Birkenhead, 406*l.*; Eastern Counties, 1,189*l.*; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 1,388*l.*; Glasgow, Paisley, and Greenock, 182*l.*; Glasgow and Ayr, 1,158*l.*; Grand Junction, 3,274*l.*; Great North of England, 1,283*l.*; Great Western, 11,364*l.*; Liverpool and Manchester, 1,904*l.*; London and Birmingham, 3,384*l.*; London and Brighton, 1,409*l.*; London and South Western, 1,757*l.*; London and Croydon, 900*l.*; Manchester and Birmingham, 2,539*l.*; Manchester, Bolton, and Bury, 447*l.*; Manchester and Leeds, 4,189*l.*; Midland Railway, 6,867*l.*; Newcastle and Carlisle, 1,170*l.*; North Union, 2,410*l.*; Preston and Wyre, 600*l.*; Sheffield and Manchester, 872*l.*; South Eastern and Dover, 11,579*l.*; Ulster, 222*l.*—Herapath's Journal.

EXTENSIVE PURCHASE.—It is confidently asserted in this city, that George Hudson, Esq., of York, has become the purchaser of the Duke of Devonshire's Baldersby estate, near Ripon.—York paper.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Friday, Jan. 17.

Re NELSON, a Lunatic.

Commission—Allowance to the alleged lunatic to contest his lunacy.

Taylor supported a petition by the executor of the will of the mother of the alleged lunatic, who had no relations, praying for a commission.

James Parker, for Nelson, said the lunacy, if any, was of a mild form. The party had no funds, and asked that 100*l.* should be allowed him for his defence.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—According to the report made to me he is a dangerous lunatic. It is right, however, that he should have a proper sum to defend himself on this inquiry. 100*l. ordered.*

TULLOCK v. HARTLEY.

Secondary evidence of contents of title-deeds—Second commission to examine witnesses pending an appeal.—Further evidence on rehearing.

Though on a rehearing, documents and new evidence not in the party's possession at the time of the original hearing may be produced, that will not be permitted where such party has been negligent, and might, with diligence, have produced the same evidence earlier.

Mere slips and accidental defects may usually be corrected at any stage of the cause, but where the party mistakes the effect of the adverse case, and deliberately refrains from producing evidence, of the existence of which he was aware, and which on the hearing turns out to have been necessary in his case, he will not be allowed afterwards to correct his miscarriage.

This cause, which is an appeal from the decision of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, involving the title to an estate in Jamaica, having been opened, the defendants presented a petition for a commission to examine witnesses in Jamaica. Various documents were in existence in Jamaica, which the defendants had discovered to be material to their case. The cause had been heard by the Vice-Chancellor in December, 1841; and the defendant's counsel knew of the facts previously to that hearing, but were of opinion that there was enough in the plaintiff's own evidence to make out the defendant's case.

Simpkinson and Rennalls, for the defendants, the petitioners, contended that the omission of the evidence was a mere slip, which the Court would give the parties an opportunity of rectifying.

Cooper, Anderdon, and James Parker for the plaintiff, the respondent.—They insisted that after the opportunities the defendants had of presenting their full case to the Court, they would not now receive aid to enable them to make a new case. Such an indulgence was never granted, except where the evidence could not have been brought forward before. Here the defendants were aware of the existence of the documents, and they deliberately determined not to offer secondary evidence of them.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There were two classes of deeds; some were lost, and others had not been proved in evidence. The defendants might have supplied the defect by application to the Court before the hearing, but they did not then apply. Here not merely production of documents is required, but to prove deeds by means of a second commission. There is no case in which such neglect has been overlooked. They go through all the stages of the suit until they come to a rehearing, and they then ask to supply evidence. There must be commission, and is there any case in which that has been done? I think the rest of the case far more feeble than that of the lost documents. The defendants, knowing of the registry of those patents, do not search; and afterwards, having desired their agent to search, the documents were sent over not authenticated.

James Parker.—After the hearing, the defendants had sent out to their agent in Jamaica, to say that original documents of sufficient age to prove themselves could be heard as fresh evidence upon the appeal; that office copies of such as were registered might be sealed with the official seal and given in evidence; and they sent out a list, in which the documents now stated to be essential were comprised.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—More than the production of the documents is necessary to make them evidence. The question is, whether such steps will now be allowed to be taken. I do not like to pronounce a decree which will have the effect of determining the title to the estate, when I am not sure that I have all the evidence necessary for determining what are the rights of the parties. These documents were produced upon the former commission, but neither the witness nor the commissioners thought them material.

Parker.—The defendants knew of the existence of the documents before the commencement of the suit.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—They must have known what was proved before the commission, and what was the deficiency. They thought their case would do without it.

Parker.—In all the cases in which such indulgence had been granted there had been a slip, by which the party failed in what he intended to prove; such as Hood v. Pimm (4 Sim. 101), and Cox v. Allingham (Jac. 337).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The object is to make a new case, so far as to meet the difficulties of the defendant's case; that is new in point of evidence.

Parker.—In Bingham v. Dawson (Jac. 243), leave to file a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review was refused, where the proper means of searching for it had not been used previous to the decree. (Ord v. Noel, 6 Mad. 127.)

Simpkinson, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In an ordinary case, a slip will be supplied; but the only question here is, whether there is any case in which the Court has afforded that indulgence where there has been delay or negligence on the part of the applicant. An accidental slip is rectified. The mere errors of examiners, commissioners, witnesses, counsel, or solicitors, have been relieved against, and when there has been an accidental defect in evidence, before the hearing, at the hearing, and at the rehearing of a cause, the Court has allowed the defect to be supplied. That is the language of the case in 4 Simons, and the indulgence seems to be confined to cases of mere error. No person can be more reluctant than I should be to shut out further evidence, especially as to title, and I will not do it unless I am obliged to do so.

Simpkinson.—The Court will direct the further inquiry sought by the defendants to satisfy its own conscience; it cannot shut from its knowledge that the documents are in existence.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Where there has been negligence, the Court will not give leave, though it is satisfied of the existence of the deed. This is an application to allow the defendants to let in evidence of which they were apprized in a very early stage of the cause, and which they might have supplied. They directed for a search for deeds in Jamaica, and a list of documents was sent out; some of those documents were proved and returned to this country; some were not returned; and the defendants, having a list of the documents, knew what were proved and what not; and they take no steps. Now they come, on a rehearing, to supply the defect. I cannot interpose to assist them, which I very much regret. They might have applied to the Court before the hearing of the cause, but they make no attempt to do so; and they lie by until they find their case is not sufficiently made out. The only thing the defendants can do is to send out a commission to take evidence in Jamaica; but in the case in 4 Simons it was said that "the instrument proposed to be proved vivâ voce was little more than a mere exhibit. Its due execution, though not admitted by the answer, was not denied. It was not the subject of dispute in the cause. It was merely a formal link in the plaintiff's title, and it happened only through the slip of counsel that it was not duly proved." Now what is asked is the same thing in principle and essence as a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review.

I am sorry to decide this case on insufficient evidence; but there is no remedy, for I am bound to refuse the present application. There is no question that on a rehearing any party may produce a document not given in evidence on the original hearing, and which was not then in his possession, and that without the leave of the Court. But if further evidence is necessary, the Court will not allow it to be adduced where the party has been guilty of negligence. The defendants in this case were aware, long before the appeal, that such documents existed. These are the facts: before the filing of the bill the defendants' agents in Jamaica searched for documents. The solicitors there stated the result of their search, and sent over to this country a list of the documents they had discovered. That list was considered and corrected. Afterwards the defendants sent out the list of these deeds, on the occasion of the commission to examine witnesses; some of the documents contained in it were proved and returned, some were proved before the commissioners, and not returned. A great many of the documents in the list were not produced or noticed in any way. The defendants were fully aware of what had been proved, and they had only to compare their list with what had been returned as proved, to be aware of any deficiency of evidence, and they might have supplied what was deficient. But they took no steps, and went to a hearing without having made any attempt to do so. The cause having been heard and decided against them, they direct inquiry to be made for further evidence. Then they apply, when the cause is in the course of a rehearing, in the very last stage, and ask the Court to grant them the indulgence of a second commission to take evidence of documents which they did not before think proper to give in evidence. I think this is not a case in which such an indulgence can be granted. The delay has been very great. I should run counter to all the authorities upon the subject if I acceded to the present application. I am bound to refuse it, and with costs. My decision is not final; if it is wrong in principle, the defendants have their remedy. No person can regret more than I do the necessity for this decision.

Re LOCKEY, a Lunatic.

Jurisdiction in lunacy—Defaulting committee—Sureties—Costs.

Toller, for the sureties, stated, that they had determined not to contest the question of their liability at law, but submit to the jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor in lunacy.

Elmsley, for the next of kin.—Then the bond will not be put in suit, and the sureties will be liable for all the costs ordered to be paid by the defaulting committee. In June 1844, there was a petition by the new committee and the next of kin, that the sureties should pay in the balance due from their principal by a given day, which they did not do. There was on that occasion no order made as to costs, but in all the other orders against the defaulting committee himself he had been ordered to pay costs.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I was of opinion, that the sureties are liable to pay all the costs to which the late committee was liable. This order was against the sureties, and may be open to a different consideration.

Toller.—The order of January last, by which the late committee was discharged, and the new one appointed, directed costs only to be paid, and the petition asks for costs, charges, and expenses. On that occasion, two orders were taken, when costs were ordered on one only. It was also asked that the sureties should pay the costs of passing the late committee's accounts, whereas, if the accounts had been passed without difficulty, those costs would have been borne by the lunatic's estate. Those costs would have been allowed in the reduction of his balance. The petition also asks for payment of a sum of 3*l.* the costs of next of kin attending the passing the accounts; the sum of 12*l.* the costs of passing the late committee's accounts, which had been allowed to him, but not paid by him to the solicitor of the present committee, who had acted in the matter; and the costs of an order never drawn up. All these sums were asked for by this petition, and it was therefore necessary that the sureties should oppose it.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There was a fair question raised by the sureties upon the construction of the bond; and the effect of their opposition to the petition has been to cut down the demand. I think, under the circumstances, they should not pay the costs of this petition. No costs on either side.

Costs of the petitioner to be paid out of the lunatic's estate.

Re PROSSER'S PATENT.

Re PINKUS'S PATENT.

Caveat—Practice in applications for patents—Atmospheric railway.

There was a petition presented by each of the persons seeking to obtain the above patents, praying that caveats which the other party had presented against the respective patents might be discharged. Both petitions came on together. The facts, as stated by the opposing counsel, appeared to be these:—Mr. Pinkus had obtained various patents for apparatus, by which motive power by means of atmospheric pressure was obtained. The first of such patents was dated in 1834, and the last in July 1843. The last patent, however, he never specified. Mr. Carcano, a foreigner, had also invented a locomotive power by means of compressed air, and some communication took place between him and Mr. Pinkus. At a meeting at Mr. Prince's, on the 13th Sept. 1844, who was the patent agent of Pinkus, it was alleged by Carcano that his plan had been inspected by Pinkus for a sufficient period to enable a person well acquainted with the subject to adopt its principle. This was, however, expressly denied by Pinkus and his agent, who stated on affidavit that he had no knowledge of Carcano's invention. At that meeting Pinkus offered Carcano that if, on disclosure of his invention, there was any thing in his patent, he, Pinkus, would give such a compensation as might be fixed by an indifferent valuer. Pinkus, however, stated that his invention covered the whole ground, and that it would be barely possible to apply atmospheric pressure to railways without infringing some or one of his patents. Carcano declined that proposal, and obtained the aid of Mr. Prosser for introducing his invention. Accordingly, on the 18th of Oct. 1844, Prosser and Carcano presented a petition for a patent, and Pinkus having a standing caveat in the Attorney-General's office, was at once informed of the application. He then lodged a caveat against Prosser's patent. On the 24th of Oct. Pinkus also presented a petition for a patent "for improvements in applying motive power by means of atmospheric compression." This was opposed by Prosser. The Solicitor-General, acting for the Attorney-General, heard the agents of each party separately, and refused to report in favour of Prosser's invention. No ground for the refusal was sealed. Afterwards, Pinkus having heard what had taken place at the meeting on the 13th of Sept. at Mr. Prince's, obtained a rehearing before the Solicitor-General on the 27th of December, when a report in favour of the invention of Carcano was made, and the patent would have been sealed, had not Pinkus lodged a caveat in the Chancery Patent-office against the sealing. Pinkus's application for a patent was heard on the 4th day of December, when, as he said, having voluntarily withdrawn certain parts of his invention, as the other side said having withdrawn them by the order of the Solicitor-General, which were supposed to, or did, clash with that of Prosser and Carcano, his (Pinkus's) patent was reported. Pinkus then proceeded with his patent, and, having lodged a caveat against Prosser's, would have had his sealed first, had not Prosser and Carcano lodged a caveat against it. Each party presented petitions for the discharge of his opponent's caveat.

James Parker and Beale, for Prosser's petition.

Wakefield, for Pinkers's petition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is not a sufficient objection to the grant of Prosser's patent, that he may not be able to use his invention without using also another patent; for he may obtain a license to do so.

Wakefield said the merits of each patent should be heard separtely before his lordship in the same way as before the Solicitor-General.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The only ground must be that it interferes with the other invention. No application has been made to me to hear the merits. It strikes me that Pinkus should have made some petition to the Court, stating that his invention had been pirated, or that he had in his possession some invention with which the other patent applied for would interfere.

Parker referred to Re Fox's patent, before Lord Eldon (1 Ves. & Bea. 67)

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If two persons had been private inventors of the same invention, and one said "I do not intend to get a patent," that will not prevent the other inventor from applying for a patent; that would be no ground to stop the patent.

Parker.—In such a case, the only course would be for the person not intending to patent the invention to publish it.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In Fox's case all the particulars and details were heard before Lord Eldon. Here the caveat was lodged with the Solicitor-General, and Pinkus having notice, was heard against the patent, and the Solicitor-General reported in favour of it. Then a caveat may be entered in the Patent Office in Chancery to prevent the patent passing the Great Seal. Are not the parties in the same situation as when before the Solicitor-General? I do not know that it is an appeal. The application is to discharge the caveat. The question ought to have been granted or refused according to the merits. I consider I am in the same position when a caveat is lodged in the Chancery Office, as the Solicitor-General is when a caveat is lodged in his office. Both parties seem to have mistaken their course. The Chancellor refers it back to the Solicitor-General, and on receiving his report, hears both sides, in the same way as they are heard by the Attorney or Solicitor-General. It is usual to refer to the Attorney or Solicitor-General, not for evidence, but for a special report. That is confirmed by the clerk of the patents. I cannot enter into any of the collateral matters which have been discussed until I have received a report on the nature of the patent. I want a special report from the Solicitor-General, as to what has taken place with respect to both patents. When a party lodges a caveat he is not obliged to say a word, but has a right to be heard against the patent. The way in which the merits of the investigation will be dealt with will be by means of costs. I shall direct the reference in the usual form. It will be merely that the Solicitor-General shall inform me how the matter stood when it left his office. A caveat does nothing more than entitle a party to notice.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Thursday, Jan. 16.

KNIGHT v. MORRELL.

Practice—Examination of a defendant as a witness after replication—Release of defendant's interest.

The plaintiff in a suit having filed his replication to the answer of a defendant, obtained an order to examine him saving just exceptions. The defendant was, under the above order, duly examined, but by some omission did not, prior to such his examination, release his interest in the suit. No rule to pass publication had been entered, but a motion being made for liberty to withdraw the replication that had been filed to the defendant's answer, and that the depositions taken upon the defendant's examination as a witness might be suppressed, and for liberty to examine such defendant as a witness, saving just exceptions upon new or amended interrogatories:

Ordered,—That the plaintiff, upon proving the release to have been executed by the defendant, should be at liberty to use his depositions as if such release had been made prior to his examination, the rest of the defendants being also at liberty to cross-examine such defendant.

The original bill in this suit was filed so far back as August 1830, by James Knight and William Jones, as assignees of the estate of the defendant, Thomas Jones, a bankrupt. The defendants put in their answer about the 20th December, 1830. By an order dated 18th June, 1831, the plaintiffs amended their bill, and added William Morrell as a party to the record. The defendants put in their answer to the amended bill the 12th September, 1831. The object of the bill was for an account of what was due to Thomas Jones, on partnership transactions between him and the other defendants (with the exception of the defendant W. Morrell), also Charles Morrell, the elder, deceased, which partnership ceased in the year 1823. Charles Harrison having been appointed assignee of Thomas Jones, instead of the original plaintiffs, a supplemental bill was filed on the 1st November, 1832. The defendants did not file their answers to the supplemental bill until the 12th June, 1833. On the 26th July following the plaintiffs replied to all the answers, and obtained an order, intituled in the first two causes, for subpœnas to rejoin, returnable immediately, and for a commission to examine witnesses. The subpœnas were subsequently served. The plaintiff obtained an order, dated 22nd April, 1834, for liberty to examine the defendant, T. Jones, as a witness, saving all just exceptions, and notice of the defendant, T. Jones, being examined before the examiner was served on the defendants. The plaintiff entered his rules to produce witnesses in Trinity Term 1834, but did not obtain a rule to pass publication. No further proceedings were taken in the suit, except a motion for the production of certain documents admitted by the defendants' answer to be in their possession, until Feb. 1839, when, by reason of the death of Charles Morrell, the suit again abated, and a bill of revivor was filed on the 17th March, 1843, against his personal representatives, who appeared thereto and put in their answer, and the usual order to revive was obtained by the plaintiff on the 5th June following. No rule to pass publication having as yet been entered, the plaintiff moved "that he might be at liberty to withdraw the replication which had been filed to the answer of the above-named defendant, Thomas Jones, in the first-mentioned cause, and that the depositions taken upon the examination of the said defendant, Thomas Jones, as a witness in the said two first-mentioned causes, might be suppressed, and that the plaintiff, Charles Harrison, might be at liberty to examine the defendant, Thomas Jones, as a witness in all the said causes, saving just exceptions. Upon the interrogatories which had been already exhibited to him in the said two first-mentioned causes, or otherwise, to examine him upon new or amended interrogatories in all the said causes, as the Court should think fit." In an affidavit in support of the motion, it was stated that, pursuant to counsel's advice that it was necessary for the support of plaintiff's case, that the defendant, Thomas Jones, should be examined, the said Thomas Jones was, on or about the 22nd April, 1834, examined upon interrogatories before the examiner, under an order for that purpose obtained, but without having, as was fully intended and had been advised, executed a release of his interest in the said causes previous to such examination; that it had been discovered since the said examination that the replication filed to the answer of the said Thomas Jones to the said original and amended causes had not been withdrawn; that no rule to pass publication in the above-named causes had ever been entered, and that the depositions of the said Thomas Jones have not been seen or heard read by the above-named plaintiff, Charles Harrison, or his clerk in court, or solicitors or agents in these causes, or any or either of them; that the omission to procure from the said defendant, Thomas Jones, such release as aforesaid was entirely accidental, and arose from mere inadvertence on the part of the person at that time conducting the prosecution of these causes, and was not known to the plaintiff, or his solicitors or agents, until long afterwards, when, in consequence of the steps which were taken to prosecute the said causes with effect, after the said bill of revivor had been filed, the state of the proceedings was investigated, and the omission discovered.

Bethell and Milne, in support of the motion, contended that it was the constant practice of the Court, in cases like the present, to relieve, where the application was to get free from the effect of a mere inadvertent slip; that the Court, it is true, would not entertain any application to relieve a party who has wholly omitted to do a something which it was his duty to perform; but the case would be different, where, in the act of performing that duty, he omits some part of it which it was his intention to perform; for there the Court would allow the accident to be rectified.

Cases cited on behalf of the plaintiff: Sandford v. Paul (1 Ves. jun. 398); Hood v. Pimm (4 Sim. 101); Cox v. Allingham (Jac. 337); Cholmondeley v. Clinton (2 Mer. 614); Coffin v. Mines ([illegible] Ves. [illegible]); Holmes v. Corporation of Arundel (4 Beav. [illegible]); Wardle v. Ward ([illegible]).

Stuart, for another defendant, [illegible] the case for which the [illegible] of the Court was asked was one of [illegible] that Sandford v. Paul [illegible] the other side, were not [illegible] the Court being in those cases [illegible] and that the case of Kenyon v. [illegible] (2 [illegible] 398), and Lord Eldon's judgment against such examination, were exactly in point with the present one.

Blossom, for the other defendants.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—My opinion is, that the present application only followed that in Holmes v. The Corporation of Arundel, before the Master of the Rolls. The affidavit of W. E. Jones, the plaintiff's solicitor's clerk, clearly proves that it was the intention of the defendant Jones to release his interest, and that his omission to do so previous to his examination as a witness was purely accidental. I shall make the following order:—That the plaintiff, upon proving the release executed by the defendant, T. Jones, shall be at liberty to use his depositions as if such release had been made previous to his examination. The defendants to be at liberty to cross-examine Jones, and the plaintiff to pay the costs of the present application.

Tuesday, Dec. 3.

PARKINSON v. PIPER.

Defective title—Judgment creditors' priority.

A bill had been filed by simple contract creditors of a testator, wherein certain judgment creditors were made defendants. The decree directed a sale of the testator's estates, subject to the Master's approval. An estate situate in H, being lot 4 in the printed particulars, was sold, and the purchaser objected to the title by reason of certain incumbrances, in the shape of unsatisfied judgments against the testator's heir-at-law, upon whom the estate in lot 4 had descended from his brother, a devisee under the testator's will. Held, that the judgment creditors of the heir-at-law not having been before the Court, such circumstance constituted a good objection by the purchaser.

The testator, Robert Piper, by his will, bearing date the 29th December, 1829, having made several devises and bequests, as therein mentioned, and having given and devised certain estates in fee to trustees upon trust, out of the rents, issues, and profits thereof, or by sale or mortgage, to raise such sums of money as should be necessary for paying his debts, devised to his son John Robert, in fee, all his messuage, farm, tithes, and lands in Hartoft, in the county of York, and all other his moor and lands in Hartoft aforesaid.

The testator died in September, 1830, and his will, with several codicils, was proved by his executors in the Prerogative Court of York, but at the time of his decease the testator was indebted to various simple contract and specialty creditors.

The executors, in March, 1831, filed their bill against Nicholas Piper, the testator's heir-at-law, John Robert Piper, and all the other children of the testator, praying that the will and codicils might be established, and for an account of the testator's personal estate, and that the rents of the freehold and leasehold estates devised to the plaintiffs might be sold, and that his unsold personal estate not specifically bequeathed, and his real estate devised to the plaintiffs in trust for sale, might be sold, and the proceeds of the sale applied in payment of the testator's debts, and that the deficiency, if necessary, should be raised by sale or mortgage of the leasehold tithes and premises by the will charged therewith.

In Hilary Term, 1836 (Parkinson v. Piper) the simple contract creditors of the testator filed a bill against the specialty creditors, and certain other parties interested therein, praying that such simple contract creditors might stand in the place of the specialty creditors for such amount of the testator's personal estate as had been or should be applied in payment of specialty debts as against all the testator's real estate, except the leasehold estate devised to his trustees.

John Robert Piper, the devisee of the Hartoft estate, died in December 1836, leaving Nicholas Piper, his eldest brother and heir-at-law him surviving, upon whom, therefore, the said estate descended, whereupon the proceedings were revived against him in Trinity Term, 1837.

Various proceedings had been taken, and reports made, by which it appeared that the testator's debts exceeded the amount of his personal estate, and the estates devised for the payment of his debts.

By a decree in this last-mentioned suit it was, among other things, ordered that, to the extent of 3,415*l*. 17*s*. 2*d*. paid to specialty creditors, the simple contract creditors were entitled to stand in their place against the real estates not charged with the payment of debts, and the Master was to apportion them as therein mentioned. And it was ordered that the entirety of the estate at Hartoft, and all other the estates in the cause devised to the testator's sons, including the estate in Pickering devised to Nicholas for life, should be sold, and the money arising from the [illegible] the Court [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible].

The estate in Hartoft, being lot 4 in the printed particulars, [illegible] purchaser of [illegible] [illegible] in July 1841, and Mr. George Liddell [illegible] the purchaser thereof; but he [illegible] objections to the title, it was [illegible] referred to the Master to inquire whether a good title could be made to the premises comprised in lot 4 of the estates in question; and it was ordered that the said Master should state the result of his inquiries, with his opinion thereon.

The first objection taken to the title to the premises in lot 4 was, "That by the Master's report in the causes dated May 2, 1838, which was confirmed by an order dated July 4, 1838, he found that certain judgments were incumbrances on (among other hereditaments) the Hartoft estate, devised by the testator, Robert Piper, to his son, the defendant, John Robert Piper, upon whose decease, under twenty-one years of age, in December 1836, the same descended to the defendant, Nicholas Piper, subject as to how far the same were binding as against the creditors of the testator, Robert Piper, and that the same several judgments were still subsisting charges upon the said hereditaments at Hartoft aforesaid, and ought, therefore, to be satisfied before the said George Liddell completed his purchase.

Under an order of the 28th January, 1843, the Master, in June 1844, made his report, wherein, among other things, he stated that he was of opinion that a good title could not be made to the premises comprised in lot 4 of the estates in question, and which were sold to Mr. George Liddell.

To this report the Master annexed the following minute:—"By my report of 2nd May, 1838, which has been confirmed, I found that the judgments in question were incumbrances on the lands purchased by Mr. Liddell. Those judgments were against Nicholas Piper, and the question arose whether they were binding against the creditors of the testator, Robert Piper. I am inclined to think that the specialty creditors of Robert Piper have priority over those judgment creditors, and if the judgment creditors shall attempt to make this judgment available at law against the purchaser under the decree, they would be restrained by an injunction in the Court of Chancery. I think, however, that the purchaser has a right to have the lands exonerated from those judgments before he can be compelled to complete the purchase; by so doing, he would incur the risk of having an elegit sued out, and his only relief would be filing a bill for an injunction in the Court of Chancery. This applies to those creditors by judgment who are not parties to the suit, and who are, therefore, not bound by the proceedings which have taken place in that suit. Those who are parties to the suit would, I think, be compelled to join in the conveyance." The plaintiffs, John Parkinson and Robert Kitching, excepted to this report, because the Master had in his report certified that he was of opinion that a good title could not be made to the premises comprised in lot 4 of the estates in question, and which were sold to Mr. George Liddell, whereas he ought to have certified that a good title could be made to the said premises.

James Parker and Sidebottom, in support of the exception, contended that the judgments did not affect the title in the hands of the purchaser, for the estate being sold under the decree of the Court, for the purpose of paying the testator's debts, neither Nicholas nor his judgment creditors could take any thing till the creditors of the testator were fully satisfied. That the judgment creditors were not in a position to issue out execution against the estates as belonging to Nicholas, for they had commenced their suit pendente lite; and even could they raise a legal claim, it would be subject to the specialty creditors of the testator; so that the judgment creditor of Nicholas could not have sued out his elegit without being liable to be restrained by an injunction of the Court of Chancery, and that the bare possibility of there being any interruption in the enjoyment of the estate is not such as would form an objection to the title.

Bethell and Ellis, for the Master's report, were not called upon.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I do not see in what way you can possibly make a good title to the purchaser without having all the parties claiming a title to the estate under Nicholas before the Court. These are his judgment creditors, who ought to have been parties to this suit. They do not appear upon the record, and this circumstance forms a good objection to the title. If they were here, there might be a decree against them.

Exception overruled. Costs to be paid out of the estate.

GILBY v. GILBY.

A legatee has a right to the inspection of the accounts of a testator's estate, but he has no right to have a copy of them made out to him at the expense of the estate, being insolvent; on the other hand, it is not enough for the solicitors of the executors to say they have administered, and there are no assets for legacies. In case of a bill being filed under such circumstances, both parties are highly reprehensible.

This was a bill filed by the plaintiff, first against Gilby and Shepherd, the executors of John Lockwood, the acting executor of the will of Sir John Mark Sykes, under which the plaintiff claimed a legacy of 1,000*l*. Wilbraham Egerton and Lord Skelmersdale were afterwards made parties, as the executors of Tatton, the other executor of Sir Mark, who died in 1823. The plaintiff was at that time an infant, and came of age in 1833, after the decease of the original executors. In 1835, he made application for the legacy, and he was told by the solicitors of the executors that the estate was administered, and there were no assets to meet his claim. Not satisfied with this, he asked for a copy of the accounts, &c. and several applications were subsequently made, of which no notice was taken; and finally, in November 1837, another application was made, accompanied with a threat of filing a bill. A bill accordingly was filed in December 1837, and an answer put in in January following, in which assets were admitted amounting to 18,000*l*.; but that they had, in addition to 1,200*l*. contributed by Lady Sykes, been distributed, and a balance of 200*l*. was due to the executors. They said they could not comply with the application of the plaintiff as to the accounts, because of the expense, but to prevent trouble, they would give him an inspection. This he refused, if they did not pay the costs of the bill, which they would not do. In the Master's office, an allowance of 100*l*. a year to Lockwood by Sir Mark, for which there was no contract, was struck off, and some other items, so as to make the executors in debt to the estate in 95*l*. instead of the estate to them in 200*l*. The cause now came on for further directions, and the whole question was one of costs.

Lloyd, for the plaintiff, said, the questions will be, first, whether the plaintiff was right in filing the bill; and, secondly, whether the offer made to him was sufficient. As to costs, he cited Sharples v. Sharples (M'Clel. 506); Anonymous (4 Madd. 273). It was a question of conduct, and the point was, where the hardship must fall.

Kindersley (with him Colville), for the executors of Lockwood, cited King v. Bryant (4 Beav. 460); Robinson v. Elliott (1 Russ. 599).

Teed, for the executors of Tatton.

Lloyd, in reply.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—There has been much wanton and improper litigation in this case. The testator died in 1823, leaving the plaintiff a legacy of 1,000*l*. and appointed executors, who died, having appointed as executors the present defendants. The plaintiff came of age in 1833, and his first application for his legacy was in 1835. The solicitors of the executors replied they had administered all the assets, and there was nothing with which to pay the legacy. I hardly think that this short, pithy way of answering a legatee was a fit or satisfactory way of replying by the executors. Another application was made in 1837, to which there was no answer. At last the bill was filed, and the answer to it substantially proves that the assets were distributed, and that the whole, together with Lady Sykes's contribution, were not enough to satisfy the debts. Now, the legatee was not bound to be satisfied with that, nor was he. He had no right, however, to have copies of the accounts furnished him at the expense of an insolvent estate, but he had a right to get a knowledge, through the executors and by inspecting the accounts, how the distribution was made. He says there was no offer before filing the bill to permit the inspection of the accounts. On the other hand, it is said it was not demanded. After the bill was filed, there was an offer of inspection, but the plaintiff refused it unless they paid the costs of the bill. Now, it could not have been prejudicial to him to inspect the accounts; he, however, refused, and went on to compel an answer which made the balance in favour of the executors. On that they come to a hearing, and the accounts are directed to be taken. Certain items are disallowed, and the balance is turned against the executors, but so small as to be of no use in payment of the legatee: so that the only triumph gained is to turn the balance, and we are just in the same condition as in 1838. The investigation is useless to everybody but the lawyers, their only endeavour being to charge each other. Such conduct is highly improper. Gentlemen should consider what is due to their clients, and to the confidence reposed in them; they should also consider what is due to their own station and character before they embark in such a useless course of litigation. The conduct of the plaintiff is such as to entitle him to no costs, and that of the executors of Lockwood is also of the same character. The state of the account has been altered in the Master's office, materially, not for the benefit of the plaintiff, but to shew that it could not have been supported from the first. As to Lockwood's executors, they are to have no costs, except the assets in their hands. The executors of Tatton are to have their costs from the plaintiff; he not to have them over, nor any costs of the suit.

WILDING v. RICHARDS.

Voluntary conveyance—Creditors.

A conveyance of freehold estates, and a covenant to surrender copyhold estates, were made to a person who was surety in some bonds for the party conveying, upon trusts for sale, and the satisfaction of mortgages affecting the estates and the bond debts. No notice of the conveyance was given to the creditors; the trustee was admitted to some of the copyholds, but proceeded no further in the execution of the trusts of the deed. Three years afterwards, the person conveying died, and it was held, that the conveyance was void, but that the trustee could not be called upon to part with the estate (if any) conveyed to him, or give up the deeds, without being discharged from the bonds of which he was surety, and having the costs expended by him as trustee repaid to him.

Samuel Wilding and Henry Wilding, with the defendant, J. W. Watson, who was a solicitor, as their surety, executed two joint and several bonds, dated respectively in the months of April and November, 1828, for securing the payment of two sums of 400*l*. and 500*l*. and interest, and in the month of January, 1830, they executed another joint and several bond, for securing the sum of 600*l*. and interest. Samuel Wilding died on the 30th of July, 1832, intestate as to the freehold and copyhold estates afterwards mentioned, leaving his brother, Henry Wilding, his heir-at law, who thereupon became entitled to the freehold and copyhold estates, subject to mortgages made by Samuel Wilding, and as to the freehold estates, to the specialty debts of S. Wilding. By indentures, bearing date respectively the 13th and 14th of October, 1832, the freehold estates were conveyed, and the copyhold estates were covenanted to be surrendered by Henry Wilding to J. W. Watson and his heirs, to hold the same, subject to the mortgages affecting the same respectively, upon trust to sell and to pay off the sums due upon the mortgages, and out of the surplus to pay the several bond debts then due and owing from Samuel Wilding, deceased, or from Henry Wilding, with interest, and after satisfaction of the mortgages and bond debts, to pay the residue of the proceeds of the sale to Henry Wilding, his executors, administrators, or assigns, and in the meantime to stand seised and possessed in trust for H. Wilding, his heirs and assigns. Shortly after the execution of these indentures, J. W. Watson was admitted as tenant to some of the copyhold estates. It did not appear that notice of the indentures was given to any of the creditors. During the life of Samuel Wilding, and subsequently up to the death of Henry Wilding, which occurred in May, 1835, Watson acted as the agent in the receipt and collection of the rents of these estates. No steps were taken by Watson to carry the trusts of the indentures of the 13th and 14th of October, 1832, into execution. This suit was instituted on the 24th of May, 1836, for the administration of Samuel Wilding's estate, and upon a reference to the Master as to the nature and effect of the indentures of the 13th and 14th of October, 1832, he on the 24th of December, 1844, reported that he found that the indentures were not binding in favour of any parties as between Henry Wilding or his estate and his creditors. To this report Watson filed exceptions, which now came on for argument.

Russell and Terrell, for the exceptions, cited Walwyn v. Coutts (3 Mer. 707); Garrod v. Lord Lauderdale (8 Sim. 1); and Acton v. Woodgate (2 Myl. & K. 492).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—If the authorities of Walwyn v. Coutts downwards, including Walwyn v. Coutts, did not exist, I should perhaps have felt myself bound to give effect to this deed, the trust having been accepted and acted upon, and it not being alleged that the deed was prepared in any manner contrary to the intention of the parties. The state of the authorities, however, binds me to act against my opinion, and it is necessary for me, therefore, to say, that this deed must be considered as a deed not having effect, subject to these qualifications:—all payments made by the trustee before notice of the revocation must be allowed; and as Watson had an interest in respect of the bonds of which he was surety, I wish to hear the other side upon that.

Wigram, Bird, and Rogers, for the plaintiff.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—My previous observations are to be confined to a form of conveyance executed and completed, to a trustee, vesting the legal estate, without communication with the creditors, in favour of creditors—the trustee accepting the trust and acting under it—and there being no other evidence to shew that there was a trust. The aspect of the cases seems to be, that a deed so situated, and purporting to be a trust, is to be considered as something else. I am of opinion that the authorities do not compel me to say that such estate, if any, as became vested in Mr. Watson as trustee or under the surrender, can be taken from him without discharging him from the bonds. He has an equity to say so, and that equity cannot be taken from him.

Declare that, without prejudice to any question of account, and without prejudice to any allowances which ought to be made, the deeds of the 13th and 14th of October, 1832, cannot be considered as effectual or binding, save that Mr. Watson is not compellable to reconvey or re-surrender any freehold property included in those deeds, or any copyhold estates to which Mr. Watson was admitted in pursuance thereof, until the discharge of the bonds executed by Samuel Wilding and Henry Wilding respectively, for payment of which Watson was their surety. Refer it back to the Master, without affirming or overruling the exceptions. Reserve the costs.

ROBERTS v. TUNSTALL.

Devise—Power of appointment.

In this case a testator devised his estate to his wife for life, and after her decease in trust for such of his children as should be then living in such proportions as his wife should, by deed or will, direct or appoint. The testator, at the time of the date of his will had five children, by a former wife, all of whom survived him, and also three other children, by his second wife, to whom the power of appointment was given. The estate devised consisted of three undivided fourth parts, and after the testator's death a suit for partition was instituted in the Exchequer by the owner of the other undivided fourth part, and under which proceedings an allotment was made to the devisees under the will. Afterwards the widow purchased of the five children of the testator by his first marriage, their reversionary interest in the property. The widow died, and by her will gave the estate so allotted and purchased by her to her son Benjamin, subject and charged with a legacy to her daughter.

The husband of a daughter of the first marriage subsequently became insolvent, and his assignee filed his bill against Benjamin Tunstall, as the devisee of the estate, and representative of his mother, to set aside the sale of the fifth share of the insolvent's wife to the testator's widow, on the ground that the power of appointment given to her invested her with the character of a trustee, and that the consideration paid by her for the interest of the five children in the estate was considerably below its real value.

Romilly, Q.C. and Parry, for the plaintiff.

Tinney, Q.C. and Kenyon, for the defendant, contended for the legality of the sale of the interests of the children, they being all of age at the time.

His HONOUR intimated that after so long a period had elapsed the Court would not disturb the transaction. Cur. adv. vult.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Monday, Nov. 11.

PHILLIPS v. SHERVILLE.

Where an insolvent continues on premises after his discharge under the Insolvent Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, the landlord may distrain upon acquired property of the insolvent found there, although the rent for which he distrains had become due before the discharge of the insolvent under that Act, and the sum so due to the landlord for rent was inserted in his schedule.

This was an action on the case for an excessive distress.

Plea—Not guilty by statute.

Verdict for the plaintiff, damages 13*l* 14s. to be reduced to 40s. if the goods were returned, and with leave reserved for the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit.

Platt, Q. C. obtained a rule nisi accordingly.

It appeared that after the rent for which the distress was made had accrued due, the tenant had petitioned the Insolvent Debtors Court, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and that in his schedule he had inserted 10*l.* as due to the landlord for rent. The distress, which formed the subject-matter complained of in the action, was made for 5*l.* part of the sum so inserted in the schedule, and was made some time after the insolvent had obtained his discharge under the Act. It further appeared that the goods seized were after-acquired property, said to be purchased with money that he had earned.

G. Chilton, Q. C. and Hugh Hill now shewed cause.—The landlord had no right to make the distress, as all the property of the insolvent was vested in the provisional assignee of the Insolvent Court by the vesting order made under the 37th section of the Act. It is clear that the landlord could not have maintained an action of debt for his demand; and it is submitted that the effect of the discharge under the Insolvent Act is to protect the person and goods of the petitioner after his discharge from any process to enforce the payment of the debts inserted in his schedule, except by proceedings taken in the manner pointed out by the Act. But then, it is further contended, that this is now a judgment debt, and therefore the landlord is barred by the 91st section of the Act. By the 87th section the insolvent is compelled to execute a warrant of attorney to the provisional assignee to confess judgment for all the debts which he has inserted in his schedule. Now this in effect makes them judgment debts; so that, as in the present case, the rent was inserted in the schedule, the nature of the landlord's demand is changed, and the remedy by distress is merged. Davis v. Syde (4 Nev. & Man. 623), and Newton v. Scott (9 M. & W. 435), will be relied on by the other side as to the landlord's power to distrain; but that case is distinguishable, for there the distress was made before the bankruptcy, while here it was made after the discharge of the insolvent, and the property seized was after-acquired property, which, it is submitted, it was the intention of the Act to protect from all the debtors mentioned in the schedule, except the debtor proceeded against the insolvent in the manner pointed out in the 88th section of the Act.

Cases cited: Buller, N. P. 182; Brodie v. Ball (1 Brown, Chan. Cas. 437); Davis v. Shipley (1 B. & Ad. 54).

Platt, Q. C. Pashley, and Pearson, in support of the rule.—It is clear that the goods of a stranger, if they had been found on these premises, might have been distrained; but it is contended here, that the tenant's own goods are especially privileged; that, it is submitted, is not so. Newton v. Scott is in point, and that case was affirmed in error (10 M. & W. 471). Here the party continues on the premises; the rent remains unpaid, and it is submitted the the landlord had a perfect right to distrain; indeed, constructively, the 58th section of the Act gives him a right to seize, for it merely limits his right to distrain to one year's rent. The statute merely extinguishes the right of action, and not the debt. In Birchon v. Creighton (10 Bing. 13), which was a case under the then Insolvent Act (7 Geo. 4, c. 57), Tindal, C. J. says, speaking of a discharge under that Act, "The discharge is a statutory answer to the plaintiff's demand, and does not go in discharge of the debt." Here there is no merger. The right to distrain is merely a collateral right, and does not merge.

Cases cited: Briggs v. Sowerby (8 M. & W. 729; 2 Ves. 131); Roll Ab. Debt exting. A. P.; Stephens v. Wood (5 Esp. 200); Mavor v. Croome (1 Bing. 261); Jacobs v. Lotour (5 Bing. 130). Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. delivered the judgment of the Court.—The question in this case was, whether a landlord could, after the discharge of the tenant under the Insolvent Debtors Act, distrain for rent due before the discharge. It was said in the argument that, as the person of the tenant was protected against all proceedings, and as his future effects were protected from process, remedy by distress was also taken away; and that by the operation of the Insolvent Debtors Act, the debt was virtually extinguished. It may be so as far as it concerns remedy by action, but not so far as regards the remedy by distress. It was decided in Newton v. Scott (9 M. & W. 435), affirmed in error (10 M. & W. 471), that the discharge of a prisoner under the Bankrupt Act does not take away the right of distress. That applies also to the Insolvent Debtors Act. But it was then contended that the right to distrain was merged in the judgment confessed by the insolvent to the provisional assignee under the 87th section of the Insolvent Debtors Act; but there are two answers to this argument; first, that the judgment is not confessed to the landlord, and secondly, that it is not co-extensive with the remedy by distress. For the goods of the debtor alone could be seized under the judgment, whilst not merely the goods of the debtor, but likewise those of any third person, might be seized under the distress, if found upon the premises. In this case, therefore, the rule will be made absolute to enter a nonsuit. Rule absolute.

Wednesday, Feb. 12.

REG. v. BADCOCK and OTHERS, the Trustees of Taunton Market.

The trustees of a market under a local Act of Parliament, vesting in them the lands and buildings purchased for the purposes of the market, and enacting that, after payment of debts and expenses, "the market-buildings, tolls, rents, &c. were to remain in the trustees in trust as an estate for the benefit of the parish of M.: to be applied by the trustees to the clothing, educating, and apprenticing so many of the children of the poor inhabitants thereof as the trustees should from time to time direct," were held liable to be rated to the poor-rate in respect of such market-buildings, &c.; such a trust not being a trust for a public purpose.

Where two statutes are in pari materiâ, and the latter contains a general clause, providing that all clauses in the former, not by the latter varied or repealed, shall be applied to the latter as fully as if repeated therein, the proper construction of such clause is, that it incorporates into the latter all the general powers and provisions of the former Act only, and not special provisions; such as a provision contained in the former Act pointing out a peculiar mode of rating property vested in trustees by virtue of that Act.

Upon appeal against a poor-rate for the parish of Bishop's Hull, in the county of Somerset, whereby the trustees of Taunton market were rated in respect of the market-house and buildings forming part of Taunton market, and including ten fixed butchers' stalls, the Court of Quarter Sessions ordered the rate to be amended by striking out the assessment upon the trustees for those stalls; but to be confirmed as to the market-house and buildings containing them, subject to the opinion of this Court upon a case; which stated, that by an Act of Parliament passed in the 9th Geo. 3, for erecting a market in the town of Taunton, and preventing the holding of a market in the streets of the said town, &c. power to purchase lands and buildings for that purpose, and to collect tolls, was given to certain trustees, in whom the lands, &c. so purchased were vested, in trust to pay expenses, &c.; and that Act also provided that after the discharge of all debts, expenses, &c., "the market, buildings, tolls, rents, &c. were to remain in the trustees in trust as an estate for the use and benefit of the parish of St. Mary Magdalene, in the said town of Taunton, for ever, and should and might be applied by the said trustees to the clothing, educating, and placing out apprentices, so many of the children of the poor inhabitants of the said parish of St. Mary Magdalene as the said trustees should, from time to time direct and appoint." By that Act it was also further enacted, "that the share and proportion which the several grounds, houses, and buildings, which should be vested in the said trustees by virtue of the said Act, did contribute or pay, or was or were charged with towards the land-tax, the church, and poor rates, in the year 1768, according to the rents of the same as they were then rated, should be for ever paid to the collector or collectors and other proper officers, by the said trustees, &c., and that such payments should be in lieu of all taxes rates, or any impositions of what kind or nature soever, to be paid in respect of the said market-house and other houses and buildings, to be erected by virtue of that Act." By virtue of that Act, in 1768 the trustees purchased ground and buildings and erected a market, all in the parish of St. Mary Magdalene. In 1817, the market being found inconveniently small, an Act (the 57th Geo. 3) was obtained "for enlarging the market-place, &c." which also authorized het trustees to purchase land and buildings, &c., and enacted that the said Act (first above mentioned), and all and every the authorities, powers, provisions, regulations, clauses, matters, and things therein contained, except such of them as were thereby varied, altered, or repealed, or as were repugnant to or otherwise provided for by that Act, should be in full force and effect, and should extend to, and be practised, applied, and put in execution for effecting the purposes of that Act, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if all such authorities, powers, &c. were repeated and re-enacted in the body of that Act with relation thereto." Under that Act the premises in question in the parish of Bishop's Hull were bought and converted into a butchery. The revenue of the market was in most years sufficient to meet the expenses and interest on debts, but no surplus had ever existed. If the Court should be of opinion that the trustees were not liable to be rated, or only liable in the share or proportion which the land taken under the 9 Geo. 3 did contribute to the poor-rate in 1768, then the order of sessions to be quashed; if the Court should be of opinion that the trustees were rateable only in the proportion which the land taken under 57 Geo. 3 did contribute to the poor-rate in 1817, then the rate to be amended by substituting 15*l.* as the rateable value of the market-house and buildings in Bishop's Hull, and 6s. 3d. as the rate thereon; and if they should be of opinion that the trustees were rateable according to the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 96, then the order of sessions to be confirmed.

This case was argued on Saturday, Jan. 18, and Wednesday, Jan. 22.

Moody (Phinn with him), in support of the rate, contended, 1st, that the trustees had such a beneficial occupation of these premises as rendered them liable to be rated, and that the stat. 9 Geo. 3, under which the market was erected originally, recognized that legal liability. The only ground of exemption was where the property was applied exclusively to public purposes. (R. v. St. Giles, York, 3 B. & Adol. 573; R. v. Sterry, 12 Ad. & El. 84; R. v. St. Bartholomew's, 4 Bur. 2435; The Governors of the Bristol Poor v. Wait, 5 Ad. & El. 1; R. v. Wallingford Union, 10 Ad. & El. 259; R. v. Liverpool, 7 B. & C. 61; R. v. Weaver Navigation, 7 B. & C. 70, n.) But here the ultimate trust, which was the material one, was for a private purpose of one particular parish only; and the trustees received a pecuniary return from the property which they occupied, and that was all that was necessary

It was true the market yielded no profit; but that was immaterial. (R. v. Blackfriars-bridge Company, 9 Ad. & El. 828.) Secondly, that the rating clause in 9 Geo. 3 was not re-enacted in 57 Geo. 3; and therefore did not apply to the premises in question. The first Act did not apply to Bishop's Hull at all; Bishop's Hull had no notice of it when it was introduced, and had no opportunity of opposing it in Parliament. Moreover, where the language would lead to so much difficulty, and was so ambiguous as was the language of that rating clause, the Court would not import it into the second Act. (R. v. Monmouthshire Canal Company, 3 Ad. & El. 619; R. v. The Leeds and Liverpool Canal, 7 Ad. & El. 671; R. v. Birmingham Canal Company, 2 B. & Ald. 570.)

Cockburn (with him Kinglake, Serjt., Carey, and Carrow), contrà, contended, 1st, that the trustees had no beneficial occupation of the premises. (R. v. Terrett, 3 East, 506; R. v. Salter's Load Sluice Navigation, 4 T. R. 730.) Here no part of the property could be applied to private purposes; the trustees were to receive and pay as directed by the Act. (R. v. Beverley, 6 Ad. & El. 645; R. v. The Justices of Worcestershire, 11 Ad. & El. 57.) This case fell within the principle upon which corporate property was held exempt. (R. v. Liverpool Mayor, 9 Ad. & E. 435; 1 P. & D. 334; R. v. Exminster, 12 Ad. & E. 2.) And there could be no doubt that this property was as much applied to a public purpose as property occupied for the purpose of maintaining docks or lighting a town. If the ultimate trust here had not been public, it would have been immaterial, because the case found that there was no surplus after the payment of the expenses of the market; but both the maintenance of the market and the ultimate trust for the poor of the parish, were public purposes. (R. v. Waldo, Cald. 358; R. v. Wilson, 12 Ad. & E. 94.) Secondly, that if they were liable to be rated at all, they could only be rated in the proportions in which the property was rated in 1768; all that was not repugnant to the second Act was incorporated into it from the first, the object of the Legislature being to exempt all the property applied to that useful public purpose from any additional burdens; and there could be no difficulty in carrying that into effect. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—One point to be decided in this case is, whether the clause in the 9 Geo. 3 is to be considered as re-enacted by and introduced into the 57 Geo. 3; and if that shall be determined in the affirmative, it will not only settle the question of rateability, but will also determine the principle on which the rate is to proceed. It will be convenient to consider that question first. The latter statute provides that all clauses in the former which are not by the latter varied, altered, or repealed, shall be in full force and effect, and shall extend to and be applied to the latter as fully as if they had been repeated and re-enacted in the body of the latter. Excepting the excepted clauses, the clauses of the former Act not only remain in force, but are extended to and applied in carrying the latter into effect. The clause in question does not fall with in the exception, unless it is repugnant to any thing in the latter statute. In the latter statute there is no rating clause provided, nor any form from which it can be directly inferred that the trustees are not to be rated at all; there can, therefore, be no repugnancy between the two statutes, nor does it amount to repugnancy, though there may be some difficulty in the application. This remark, however, does not conclude the matter upon general principles, and thus it may be open to the respondents to contend that, large as the words are, on the exceptions being examined, still the clause in question is not in the latter Act of Parliament. It provides that the property to be vested in the trustees under the Act shall bear and pay the same share or proportion towards the land-tax, and church and poor rates, as in 1768, according to the amount of the same as then rated. In terms this fixes not the amount of the assessment, but the share and proportion which it is to pay towards the general rate, and this is neither an unusual nor inequitable provision. The occupiers must be taken to agree that the then existing proportion was a fair one, even under any alteration which the statute might occasion; still it is obvious that the provision is of a special and limited kind; for what was fair in reference to one may be most unjust if applied to another property, and some change of circumstances may, and in this instance must, prevent its application with any tolerable accuracy. See the observations of the judges in the similar case, in 3 Ad. & E. 619, the Monmouthshire Canal case. The framers of the latter statute probably intended to do the same which the former Act had done, with regard to those rates. It is a certain rule of construction, laid down in the Second Institute, that in the construction of general references to Acts of Parliament, such reference must be made only as will stand with reason and truth; and where a provision is limited in respect of time and place, it is to give a meaning contrary to reason to extend it to other times and places. In Reg. v. The Justices of Surrey (2 T. R.), the question was, whether an appeal lay against a conviction by two justices, under the 25th Geo. 3, c. 72, s. 9; and that depended upon the construction of the 24th section of the Act. There was no doubt that the words were large enough to incorporate the former appeal clause; but upon a review of all the statutes, the Court thought that it was not intended to give an appeal against the decision of the justices; and Ashurst, J. said,—"The fair construction to be put upon this clause appears to be this; that all the general powers given in Acts, in pari materiâ, shall be virtually incorporated into this; but that such provisions as are always considered as special provisions shall not." Here, there is even a more special provision in the earlier Act; and we think we are justified in putting such a limitation upon these very general words in the latter Act as shall prevent their applying to this provision. It is necessary, therefore, to consider the general question of rateability; and the general principles on that subject are well settled. To make rateability, there must be occupation beneficial in its nature, that is, a subject-matter producing a valuable return. When such an occupation is established, the occupier is rateable in respect of it, unless he is merely a trustee for the public, receiving no individual benefit, except in common with and as one of the public; in such a case the law does not regard him as an occupier, but the public whom he represents. The cases are numerous, and the dividing line not easily drawn. On the one side a dock company, as in the case of R. v. Liverpool (7 B. & C. 61), and the trustees of a river navigation, where all the surplus tolls were applicable only to the repair of bridges and such other charges upon the county as the magistrates should order, as in R. v. Weaver Navigation (7 B. & C. 70, n.), were held not rateable; and with regard to municipal corporations receiving anchorage dues, &c. applicable to specific purposes, with a proviso as to the surplus that it was to be applied under the direction of the council for the public benefit of the inhabitants and the improvement of the borough, as in R. v. Liverpool (9 Ad. & Ell. 435), those dues have been held not rateable, and it was considered as no ground of distinction that the property in respect of which the rate was imposed was held in a parish out of the borough; that was held in R. v. Exminster (12 Ad. & El. 2). On the other hand, the governors of the Bristol poor (5 Ad. & E. 1), and the guardians of the union of Wallingford (in 10 A. & E.), were held rateably liable for their occupation; and the latter case was considered as not distinguished from the former by the circumstance that the property in the former case was situate without the parish for which it was taken, but in the latter was within the union. It is unnecessary to advert to more cases; our business is to see within which class the facts of this case bring it; at the same time we may remark that, in all in the first class, the property, as such, was unlimited by the bounds of the county, borough, or parish, and that the public had a substantial and direct interest in the benefit of the application of the funds proposed to be rated. In the latter, the rate-payers, or at most the inhabitants, of certain parishes, were concerned in the benefit, direct or indirect. It seems to us the facts here fall within the latter class. The proceeds of the property are applicable, after payment of the purchase-money, as an estate to the use of the parish of St. Mary Magdalene, and the mode of benefiting it is directed to be by clothing, educating, and placing out as apprentices the children of the poor inhabitants of the parish. Whether the term "poor inhabitants" is limited to those who receive relief or not, we are unable to say. To the public, properly so called, it matters not by whom the poor children are clothed, educated, and apprenticed. We are therefore of opinion, the order of Sessions must be confirmed. As in the Wallingford case, so here, we think it is not necessary to make any observation on the intermediate cases of property appropriated to religious and charitable purposes; for we decide this case, as that, on the ground that this property, being beneficially occupied and not devoted to a public purpose, the occupiers are subject to be rated in respect of it. The order of Sessions will, therefore, be affirmed.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Thursday, Feb. 13.

BITTLESTON AND ANOTHER, Assignees of WILLIAM TIMMIS v. JOHN TIMMIS.

To an action for money had and received to the use of the plaintiffs as assignees of one T. a bankrupt, the defendant pleaded that before notice of any act of bankruptcy, and before the fiat issued, the defendant gave credit to the bankrupt in the sum of 148*l.* 10*s. by accepting a bill of exchange without any consideration for his accommodation, which bill of exchange the bankrupt negotiated before his bankruptcy, and the defendant paid before the commencement of the suit, whereby the bankrupt became and still was indebted to the defendant in the said sum of* 148*l.* 10*s. being the sum for which he had so given him credit as aforesaid; that before notice of any act of bankruptcy, and before issuing the fiat, the bankrupt delivered to the defendant two bills of exchange, one for the sum of* 100*l. and the other for the sum of* 20*l. for the purpose and in order that the defendant might obtain and receive the respective amounts for and on behalf and for the use of the bankrupt; and that after the bankruptcy, and before the issuing of the fiat, and before the commencement of the action, the defendant received the said sum of* 120*l. being the amount of the respective bills of exchange, and that the defendant was ready and willing to set off the same against the said sum of* 148*l.* 10*s. so due and owing to the defendant, Held, on special demurrer, that this plea was good, as the defendant was entitled to set off against the claim of the plaintiffs as assignees the amount of the accommodation acceptance which had been paid by him, and that such set-off was properly pleaded by way of confession and avoidance; Held also, that the plaintiffs had properly declared as for money had and received to their use as assignees, but that the same was answered by the plea.*

Indebitatus assumpsit for money had and received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiffs as assignees, and on an account stated.

The defendant pleaded, thirdly, as to so much of the cause of action in the said first count of the declaration mentioned as relates to the sum of 120*l.* parcel of the moneys in that count mentioned, and as to so much of the cause of action in the second count of the declaration mentioned as relates to the sum of 120*l.* parcel of the moneys in that count mentioned, that the said sum of 120*l.* in this plea firstly above mentioned, and the said sum of 120*l.* in this plea secondly above mentioned, are one and the same sum of 120*l.* and not different sums; and that the said account in the said second count of the said declaration mentioned, so far as relates to the said sum of 120*l.* in this plea secondly above mentioned, was stated of and concerning the said sum of 120*l.* in this plea firstly above mentioned and not concerning any other or different sum; and the defendant further saith, that before the commencement of this suit, and long before he, the defendant, had notice that any act of bankruptcy had been committed by the said Wm. Timmis, and long before any fiat of bankruptcy issued against the said Wm. Timmis, to wit, on the 4th day of July A.D. 1843, he, the defendant, gave credit to the said Wm. Timmis in a large amount, to wit, in the sum of 148*l.* 10*s.* by accepting for the accommodation of him, the said Wm. Timmis, and at his request, and without any consideration or value given to him, the said defendant, for so doing, a certain bill of exchange in writing, bearing date on the 4th day of July, A.D. 1843, drawn by the said Wm. Timmis upon the said defendant, and by which the said Wm. Timmis required the defendant to pay him, the said Wm. Timmis, or his order, the sum of 148*l.* 10*s.*; which said bill of exchange the said Wm. Timmis afterwards, and before any notice to the defendant of his said bankruptcy, indorsed, negotiated, and transferred for value for his own use and benefit; and the defendant further saith that the credit so given by him, the said defendant, to the said Wm. Timmis was a credit of a nature extremely likely to end in a debt from the said Wm. Timmis to the said defendant; and the defendant further saith, that afterwards, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on the 7th day of November, A.D. 1843, he, the said defendant, was called upon, and obliged to pay, and did pay, the said bill of exchange above mentioned to certain persons trading under the name, style, and firm of James Brown and Company, and then being the holders of the said bill; and thereupon and thereby, and before the commencement of this action, the said Wm. Timmis became, and at the time of the commencement of this action was, and still is, indebted to the defendant in a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of 148*l.* 10*s.* being the amount of the said last-mentioned bill of exchange, for money paid by the defendant for the use of the said Wm. Timmis at his request; which said last-mentioned sum of money is the same identical sum in and for the amount of which the defendant had given credit to the said Wm. Timmis as aforesaid. And the defendant further says, that before he, the said defendant, had notice of any act of bankruptcy by the said Wm. Timmis committed, and before the date or issuing of any fiat against the said Wm. Timmis, and before the commencement of this action, to wit, on the 17th day of July, A.D. 1843, the said Wm. Timmis delivered to the said defendant a certain bill of exchange bearing date the 17th day of July, A.D. 1843, drawn upon and accepted by one Michael Briggs, for the sum of 100*l.* payable three months after the date thereof, and a certain other bill of exchange bearing date the 8th day of July, A.D. 1843, drawn upon and accepted by one Thomas Rose, for the sum of 20*l.* payable three months after the date thereof; which said respective bills of exchange, so accepted as aforesaid, he, the said Wm. Timmis, then delivered to the defendant as aforesaid for the purpose and in order that the said defendant might obtain and receive the respective amounts thereof for, and on behalf and for the use of him, the said Wm. Timmis; and the defendant says that afterwards, and after the bankruptcy of the said Wm. Timmis, but before the issuing of any fiat against the said Wm. Timmis, and before the commencement of this action, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, the defendant obtained and received the said sum of 120*l.* being the amount of the said respective bills of exchange; which said sum of 120*l.* so obtained and received by the defendant as last aforesaid, is the same sum of 120*l.* in the first count of the declaration and in the introductory part of this plea firstly above mentioned. And the defendant saith, that the said sum of 148*l.* 10*s.* so paid by the defendant for the use of the said Wm. Timmis to the holder of the said bill of exchange in this plea firstly above mentioned, and so due and owing from the said Wm. Timmis to the defendant as aforesaid, exceeds the damages sustained by the plaintiffs as such assignees as aforesaid by reason of the nonperformance by the defendant of his said promises as to the said sum of 120*l.* in the introductory part of this plea mentioned, and as to the causes of action relating to which this plea is pleaded; and the defendant is ready and willing, and hereby offers to set off and allow to the plaintiffs the full amount of the said damages out of the said sum of 148*l.* 10*s.* so due and owing to the defendant as aforesaid, according to the form of the statute in that case made and provided.—Verification.

Demurrer, alleging as causes of demurrer that the third plea affords no answer in law to the matters and causes of action to which it is pleaded; that it neither traverses nor confesses and avoids these causes of action; that the said 3rd plea, confessing, as it does, the causes of action in the introductory part of that plea mentioned, seeks to set off against those causes of action a debt due from the said Wm. Timmis to the defendant before the bankruptcy of the said Wm. Timmis, and does not shew any debt or sum of money whatsoever to be due and owing to him, the defendant, from the plaintiffs as assignees of the said Wm. Timmis. That the said 3rd plea should have shewn affirmatively that the said Wm. Timmis delivered to the defendant the said bills of exchange in manner and form as in the 3rd plea mentioned, and also that the defendant obtained and received the said sum of 120*l.* being the amount of the said bills, in manner and form as in the said 3rd plea mentioned, before the bankruptcy of the said Wm. Timmis. That the said 3rd plea seeks to set off debts which are not mutual; that the said 3rd plea does not sufficiently shew any mutual credit between the bankrupt and the defendant; that the said 3rd plea attempts argumentatively to deny that the said sum of 120*l.* in the first count, and in the introductory part of the said 3rd plea mentioned, was received by him to the use of the plaintiffs as assignees of the said Wm. Timmis; that the said 3rd plea amounts to the general issue; that the said 3rd plea is double, inasmuch as it argumentatively denies that the said last-mentioned sum of 120*l.* was received to the use of the plaintiffs as assignees of the said Wm. Timmis, and also seeks to shew matter of set-off to the same cause of action, that is to say, to the same sum of 120*l.*

Joinder in demurrer.

Channell, Serjt. in support of the demurrer.—This plea was intended to be framed on that in Hulme v. Muggleston (3 M. & W. 30); but there the objection which has been here taken was not raised on special demurrer. But assuming this was a debt from the bankrupt which might be set off, still it cannot be set off against a claim, as here, for money received to the use of the assignees, for there is no mutuality. As to this, Wood v. Smith (4 M. & W. 522) is expressly in point. [Maule, J.—May this not have been money had and received to the use of the bankrupt, and after the bankruptcy to the use of the assignees?] If it amounts to a defence to all, it is in substance a denial that the money was received to the use of the assignees, but on the contrary, to the use of the bankrupt, and this is open to the objection stated in the special demurrer as amounting to the plea of non assumpsit. The plea either does not confess, or if it does, it does not avoid. (Groom v. Mealey, 2 Bing. N. C. 140.)

Talfourd, Serjt. (with him J. W. Smith), contrà.—The plea is good, on the authority of the case of Hulme v. Muggleston; the only difference between the two cases is, that there the bill on which the money was received by the defendant was delivered to him by the bankrupt before the bankruptcy, and in the present case it was delivered by the bankrupt before the issuing of the fiat, and notice to the defendant of any act of bankruptcy, but this is now, since the stat. 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, identical. There is an error in the marginal note to Hulme v. Muggleston in saying that the money was received by the defendant before the bankruptcy; the money was not received until afterwards, as appears from the report, 3 M. & W. 32, which makes therefore that case analogous to the present. [Cresswell, J.—There is a mistake in the print of that report in saying that the bill was presented for payment to the drawers, and the money received from the drawers; it should be drawees.(a)] This plea discloses a case of mutual credit. (Russell v. Bell, 8 M. & W. 277.) The plea gives sufficient colour by shewing that, primâ facie, the money was received to the use of the assignees, though it was not so in fact, but arose under such circumstances as to be liable to have set off against it this debt from the bankrupt. It is therefore similar in principle to Unwin v. St. Quintin (11 M. & W. 277), though that was a case of trover. As to the plea not being multifarious, Lazarus v. Cowie (3 Q. B. 459) was cited.

Channell, Serjt. in reply. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Tindal, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court. His lordship, after stating the pleading, said,—This case was argued before us during last Term, when two points were mainly relied upon by the plaintiffs: that the acceptance of the bill of exchange by the defendant for the accommodation of the bankrupt was not a credit within the meaning of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 50; and, secondly, that the plea confessing the receipt of the money to the use of the plaintiffs as assignees, does not avoid the cause of action by shewing a credit given to the bankrupt, and pleading it as a set-off under the 50th section. We are of opinion the plea is good. The acceptor of a bill of exchange for the accommodation of another, gives him credit for the amount which, when paid by the acceptor, may clearly be proved under a fiat issued against the party for whose accommodation the bill was accepted and paid, and may be made the subject-matter of an action under the mutual credit clause, 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 50; as in Smith v. Hodson (4 T. R. 211); Ex parte Boyle (Cook's Bankruptcy Law, 542); and Ex parte Wagstaff (13 Ves. 65). These are distinct authorities for that proposition; and although in the case of Young v. Cotton (1 Deacon's Bankruptcy Cases, and 1 Moore's Privy Council Cases), some of the cases on the subject of mutual credit were treated of as not having been well decided, the authority of the cases above mentioned was left untouched; and Smith v. Hodson has since been recognized by the Court of Exchequer in Hulme v. Muggleston (3 M. & W. 30). The plea, therefore, shews, on the one hand, a credit for the 148*l.* 10*s.* given by the defendant to the bankrupt before the defendant had notice of any act of bankruptcy, or a fiat had issued; and on the other hand, it shews that before any such notice, the bankrupt delivered to him two bills of exchange, one for 100*l.* the other for 20*l.* in order that the defendant might receive the respective amounts thereof on behalf and for the use of him, the bankrupt; and the defendant received the same after the bankruptcy, and before the fiat. The defendant, therefore, gave credit to the bankrupt, and the bankrupt to the defendant, before the latter had notice of any act of bankruptcy, and before the fiat had issued: and those credits have resulted in debts, and one demand may be set off against the other by the express words of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16. But it was contended, secondly, that although the credits were mutual between the bankrupt and the defendant, yet, as the declaration was for money had and received to the use of the assignees, and not to the use of the bankrupt, the debt due to the defendant from the bankrupt could not be set off thus, there not being debts due to and from the same parties, for which the case of Wood v. Smith (4 M. & W.) was cited. The words of the statute furnish an answer to this objection. The plea, indeed, confesses the receipt of the money to the use of the assignees, but it shews how their title to the money arose, namely out of a credit given by the bankrupt. The 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 50, provides, where there has been mutual credit or where there are mutual debts between the bankrupt and any other person, the commissioners shall state an account between them, and one debt or demand may be set off against another, and what shall appear due on either side on the balance of such account, and no more, shall be claimed or paid on either side respectively; and every debt or demand thereby made proveable against the estate of the bankrupt may also be set off in manner aforesaid against such estate, provided the person claiming the benefit of such set-off had not, when such credit was given, notice of an act of bankruptcy by such bankrupt committed. Now the assignees are suing for money due to the estate, and the defendant's set-off is due from the estate, and there had been mutual credit between the defendant and the bankrupt before the defendant had notice of the bankruptcy; one therefore may be set off against the other by the words of that section. In Wood v. Smith (4 M. & W.) the plea did not shew there had been mutual credit, or that there were mutual debts between the bankrupt and the defendant, and therefore it is no authority for the decision in this case. In Southwood v. Taylor (1 B. & Ald. 471), which was an action for goods sold and delivered by the plaintiff, as assignee of the bankrupt, the defendant, who had pleaded the general issue, and given notice of set-off, was allowed by Holroyd, J. to give in evidence a debt due from the bankrupt before any act of bankruptcy, the sale of the goods mentioned in the declaration having been in fact made by the bankrupt after the act of bankruptcy; but more than two months before the date of the commission. A rule nisi for a new trial was moved for but refused. It is true Lord Ellenborough, in refusing the rule, after saying the debts were mutual, and therefore the debt due from the bankrupt was the subject-matter of set-off, expressed an opinion that the plaintiff ought to have declared for goods sold and delivered by the bankrupt, because the transaction being perfected by the 46 Geo. 3, was as effectual as if no act of bankruptcy had taken place; and if he had done so no objection could have been made to the set-off. Notwithstanding that dictum, however, we think the plaintiffs, in the present case, have declared properly for money had and received to their use as assignees; but their claim is answered by the set-off which was pleaded. And this disposes of another objection made to the plea, namely, that it is an argumentative denial that the money received by the defendant was received to the use of the plaintiffs as assignees, and therefore amounts to a circuitous general issue. On the whole, then, it appears to us that the money received by the defendant after the bankruptcy was received to the use of the plaintiffs as assignees, and he was entitled to set off against it the amount of the accommodation acceptance paid by him, and such set-off was properly pleaded by way of confession and avoidance of the plaintiffs' cause of action. We therefore think our judgment must be for the defendant.

Judgment for defendant.

(a) See same case, 6 Dowl. 1[illegible], where it is rightly reported as drawees.

Bentley v. Goldthorpe and Another.

In an action by the assignee of letters patent, for an infringement of the patent, the declaration set out a proviso contained in the letters patent, that if the patentee should not particularly describe and ascertain the nature of the invention, and in what manner the same was to be performed, by an instrument in writing under his hand and seal, and cause the same to be enrolled, within six months after the date of the letters patent, the letters patent were to become void; and the declaration then alleged a performance thereof in the terms of the proviso. The defendants pleaded that the patentee did not particularly describe and ascertain the nature of the said invention, and in what manner the same was to be performed according to the meaning of the said letters patent, concluding with a verification:

Held, that the averment in the declaration of performance of the proviso, was a material averment;

Held also, that the plea was not a traverse larger than the allegation in the declaration, but was in substance a denial of such allegation, modo et formâ, and was therefore bad on special demurrer, for not concluding to the country.

Case for the infringement of a patent.

The declaration set out a grant of letters patent from her Majesty of 21 Dec. (5 Vict.) under the great seal, unto one William Carr Thornton, to use, exercise, and vend his invention "of certain improvements in machinery or apparatus for making cards for carding cotton and other fibrous substances," in England, Wales, and town of Berwick upon Tweed, for the term of fourteen years from the date of the said letters patent. And the declaration then stated, that in the letters patent there was contained, amongst other things, a proviso, that if the said William Carr Thornton should not particularly describe and ascertain the nature of the said invention, and in what manner the same was to be performed, by an instrument in writing, under his hand and seal, and cause the same to be enrolled in her Majesty's High Court of Chancery, within six calendar months next and immediately after the date of the said letters patent, then the said letters patent, and all liberties and advantages whatsoever thereby granted, should utterly cease, determine, and become void, any thing thereinbefore contained to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding, as by the enrolment of the said letters patent, &c. The declaration then alleged that the said William Carr Thornton did afterwards, and within six calendar months next and immediately after the date of the said letters patent, to wit, on the 21st day of June, 1842, in pursuance of the said proviso in that behalf in the said letters patent contained, and of the said letters patent, by an instrument in writing under his hand and seal, particularly described and ascertain the nature of his said invention, and in what manner the same was to be and might be performed, and did afterwards, and within six calendar months next and immediately after the date of the said letters patent, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, cause the said instrument in writing to be duly enrolled in her Majesty's High Court of Chancery at Westminster, as by the record of the said instrument, &c.; and that afterwards, and before the committing of the grievances, &c. by a certain indenture then made between the said Wm. Carr Thornton of the one part, and one Joseph Williamson of the other part (profert of same), Thornton assigned to Williamson the said letters patent for the residue of the said term of 14 years; and that afterwards, &c. by an indenture between Williamson of the one part and the plaintiff of the other part, Williamson assigned to the plaintiff the said letters patent.

Breach—for making, using, exercising, and vending the said invention.

Further breach—for making, using, and putting in practice the said invention.

Further breach—for making, using, and putting in practice a part of the said invention.

Further breach—for counterfeiting, imitating, and resembling the said invention. Also,

Further breach—for making and causing to be made divers additions to the said invention, and subtractions from the same, whereby the defendants pretended to be themselves the inventors and devisors of the said invention.

To this declaration the defendants pleaded seventhly—That the said Wm. Carr Thornton did not particularly describe and ascertain the nature of the said alleged invention, and in what manner the same was to be performed according to the meaning of the said letters patent; and this the defendants are ready to verify.

Demurrer thereto by the plaintiff, assigning amongst other causes, that the plea neither traverses nor confesses and avoids any material averment of the declaration, and also that it is ambiguous, uncertain, and informal in this, to wit, that whereas the plaintiff does in his declaration distinctly aver that the said Wm. Carr Thornton did, after the making of the said letters patent and within six calendar months next and immediately after the date of the said letters patent, to wit, on, &c. by an instrument in writing under his hand and seal, particularly describe and ascertain the nature of his said invention, and in what manner the same was to be and might be performed, it is uncertain whether by the said plea the defendants intend to traverse the said averment in the declaration, or to confess and avoid the same by force and virtue of some new matter; that if the former, then the last-mentioned plea ought to have concluded to the country, and not with a verification; that if the latter, then the defendants should have set out in the said plea such new matter by force and virtue whereof they, the defendants, seek to avoid the said averment in the declaration; also, that the plea is informal in this, that it ought to have concluded to the country, and not with a verification.

Joinder in demurrer.

Channell, Serjt. (Spinks with him) in support of the demurrer.—The case of Muntz v. Foster and Others (1 Dowl. & Lownd. 737) shews that a compliance with the proviso under which the letters patent are granted is necessary to give the patentee a right thereto, and that an allegation in the declaration like the present, that Thornton did particularly describe the nature of his invention, according to the terms of such proviso, is a material and necessary allegation upon which a traverse might be taken. A plea, therefore, traversing such an allegation as this seventh plea does, without setting up any new matter, ought to have concluded to the country. He was then stopped by the Court, who called on Manning, Serjt. (with him Addison) to support the plea.—It is submitted that the plea ought properly to have concluded to the Court (Bodenham v. Hill, 7 M. & W. 274), because this allegation in the declaration ought not to have been introduced there. The proviso which is so alleged to have been complied with is, if Thornton should not describe the invention by an instrument in writing, and cause the same to be enrolled in the Court of Chancery within six calendar months, then the letters patent are to become void. This is a proviso which operates only by way of defeazance, and is matter which should, therefore, come from the defendant. (Thursby v. Plant, 1 Wm. Saund. 234, note c.) Even supposing it is to be considered as a condition, and not a defeazance, still it is a condition subsequent, and not precedent, and no allegation of performance was, therefore, requisite to be made by the plaintiff. (Wynne v. Wynne, 2 M. & G. 8.) [MAULE, J.—If the plea simply negatives what is alleged, it ought not to conclude with a verification.] The plea of the Statute of Limitations is a negative of the promise as stated in the declaration. [MAULE, J.—If so, such plea would be bad for not concluding to the country.] This plea is a negative of a wider statement than that in the declaration. It is not simply a traverse that Thornton described the invention in the manner and form alleged in the declaration, but it is a denial that he ever described it, and therefore the plea was not required to conclude to the country.

Channell, Serjt. in reply.—It may be that where the plea states new matter, and such statement is in the negative, it may not be required to conclude with a verification; for this Bodenham v. Hill may be an authority; but where the plea contains, as here, no new matter, it ought to conclude to the country. Muntz v. Foster shews the allegation was material and proper to be made by the plaintiff in the declaration. The proviso in the letters patent was not a condition subsequent. [ERLE, J.—Has not a patentee a vested interest before the six months? MAULE, J.—There is no allegation that the six months have expired, and it is only upon the non-enrolment within that time that the letters patent are to be void.] It is submitted that the plaintiff ought to shew a compliance with the proviso. When the condition to be performed is something which is to be done within a given time, it cannot be a condition subsequent. Here the specification was to be made and enrolled within six months, and it was necessary for the plaintiff to shew that he had in such respect performed the condition. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered judgment.—The question in this case is, whether the seventh plea ought to have concluded to the country; and this depends upon the consideration, whether the averment in the declaration, which that plea in terms denies, was a material averment on the part of the plaintiff, for, if material, it follows, from the ordinary rules of pleading, that, as the plea distinctly denies it, there could have been no compelling him to plead over; consequently, the defendants were bound to have concluded their plea of traverse to the country. And we are of opinion, that the averment in the declaration is material. The first objection taken was that the proviso referred to in the conditions contained in the letters patent, was a condition subsequent only, and that the plaintiff had no necessity to allege the performance of it; but that an allegation of non-performance must come properly from the other side. The obvious meaning of this condition appears to be, that if the grantee of the letters patent lets six months elapse without enrolling his specification, the letters patent cease, determine, and become void; if not from the date of the letters patent, at all events at the expiration of six months; and this point has been settled and determined by the Court in the case of Muntz v. Foster (1 D. & L.) It was secondly objected by the defendant, that as it does not appear upon the face of the declaration that the six months allowed by law to enrol the specification had actually expired before the action was brought, there was no necessity for the averment that such specification was enrolled; but we think it a sufficient answer to such objection, that if this form had been omitted, the plaintiff's right to sue as assignor would have been left in doubt and uncertainty, inasmuch as it would neither appear that the six months had elapsed before the specification had been enrolled, nor that the action was brought within six months next following the date of the letters patent; and the declaration might have been demurred to, and might have been held bad for uncertainty. We therefore think that an averment to prevent this consequence cannot be considered as immaterial. It was lastly argued that the conclusion of the plea with a verification was improper in this case, inasmuch as the traverse is larger than the allegation in the declaration; namely, it contains a denial that the plaintiff ever has, at any time, particularly described his invention; not being pleaded modo et formâ, so as to make it a traverse of a particular averment in the declaration. But to this it appears to us a sufficient answer, that it is alleged in the plea, that the grantee of the letters patent did not particularly describe and ascertain the nature of his invention, according to the meaning of the said letters patent. Referring to the declaration, it appears the specification is therein alleged to be filed, and which is upon the face of it according to the meaning of the letters patent; so that in substance the plea seems to have denied the averment in modo et formâ. We therefore think that the plea ought to have concluded properly to the country, and judgment must be for the plaintiff. Judgment for the plaintiff.

WILLIAMS v. BURRELL and ANOTHER.

A covenant in law differs from an implied covenant in its proper sense. The former is an agreement which the law infers from the use of certain words of grant having a known legal operation, as dedi in a feoffment, or demisi in a lease; whereas the latter is a covenant which is collected by constructive inference from the terms used in the deed.

An implied covenant in its proper sense differs in no respect in its legal consequences from an express covenant; therefore, where there is in a lease such an implied covenant for quiet enjoyment, it is not, like a covenant in law, confined to breaches committed during the estate of the covenantor, but it will extend to those which may occur during the whole continuance of the term intended to be granted.

A tenant for life, with a leasing power, granted two several leases, each for a term of 99 years, if the cestui que vies should so long live; and there was contained in each lease a clause that the lessor, for himself, his heirs, and assigns, the demised premises unto the lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, against all persons whomsoever lawfully claiming the same, would, during the said term, warrant and defend. On the death of the lessor, the remainder-man recovered in ejectment possession of the demised premises, by reason of the leases not having been made according to the leasing power.

Held, that the covenant arising from the warranty was not a covenant in law, but an implied covenant in its proper sense, and, therefore, that the lessee could maintain thereon an action of covenant against the executors of the tenant for life.

Held, also, that an executor of the assignee of the lessee could also maintain such action, inasmuch as an express covenant for title or quiet enjoyment will equally pass with the estate as a covenant in law.

By order of the Master of the Rolls, the following case was stated for the opinion of this Court:—

The Right Honourable Charles, Earl of Egremont, by his will bearing date the 31st of July, 1761, gave and devised all his manors, messuages, lands, advowsons, rents, and hereditaments in the several counties of Somerset, Dorset, and Cornwall (comprising, inter alia, the premises comprised in the two several indentures of lease hereinafter stated), with their respective rights, members, and appurtenances, unto his, the said testator's, eldest son George, Lord Cockermouth, and his assigns, for and during the term of his natural life, without impeachment of waste, with divers remainders over. The case then set forth a power contained in the will, enabling tenants for life in possession to grant certain leases.

The said testator, Charles, Earl of Egremont, departed this life in or about the year 1763, leaving his eldest son, George, Lord Cockermouth, him surviving, who thereupon became George, Earl of Egremont.

The said George, Earl of Egremont, immediately upon the decease of the said testator, entered upon the said estates, including the said demised premises, as devisee for life, under the said will of the said testator.

The said George, Earl of Egremont, afterwards assumed the name of O'Brien.

On the 24th day of March, 1805, an indenture of lease, in the following words, was duly executed by the said George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont:—"This indenture, made the 24th day of March, 1805, between George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont, of the one part, and John Williams, of ——, of the other part, witnesseth, that for and in consideration of the yearly rent hereby reserved, and the covenants herein contained, he, the said earl, doth hereby demise and lease unto the said John Williams, his executors, administrators, and assigns, all that messuage converted into two dwelling-houses and garden, in Broad-street, in Williton, aforesaid, and adjoining Francis Hale's house, being part of Manwell's tenement, which said two dwelling-houses are in the occupation of the said John Williams and William Wyne, excepting out of this present demise unto the said earl, his heirs and assigns, all quarries, mines, and ores, timber trees, pollards, and saplings, and trees likely to become timber, and lops and tops of maiden trees, coppices, woods, and underwoods, now or hereafter growing upon the said demised premises, with free liberty to fell and carry away the same; to have and to hold the said demised premises unto the said John Williams, his executors, administrators, and assigns, for the term of 99 years, if James Farthing, aged 23 years, Mary Farthing, aged 20 years, and Ann Farthing, aged 17 years, or either of them, shall so long live, the said John Williams, his executors, administrators, and assigns, yielding and paying therefore yearly and every year, during the said term, unto the said earl, his heirs and assigns, the rent of 1*l.* a year, free of all taxes and incumbrances, at Lady-day, Midsummer, Michaelmas, and Christmas, by equal portions. And also yielding and paying for a heriot on the several deaths of the said James Farthing, Mary Farthing, and Ann Farthing (whether they die in succession or otherwise), the sum of 1s. And the said John Williams, for himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns, doth covenant with the said earl, his heirs and assigns, that the said John Williams, his executors, administrators, and assigns, shall and will pay or cause to be paid unto the said earl, his heirs and assigns, the said yearly rent and other payments in manner aforesaid, and shall and will repair and keep the premises hereby granted, with the appurtenances, in and with all necessary reparations, during the said term, and the same, at the end thereof, so well and sufficiently repaired and kept at his and their charges, will leave and yield up, and shall and will perform suit to the Courts of the Manor of Williton Regis, and shall and will, within six months next after notice to him or them, given or left at his or their place of abode for the time being, or on the said premises hereby demised, produce unto the said earl, his heirs and assigns, or to his or their agent, all the said lives if living, or otherwise make it appear to him or them, within the time aforesaid, or within a reasonable time, if they or either of them should happen to be in foreign parts, by a sufficient certificate, that all such persons or person so abroad be living; and if it happen the said yearly rent or other payments aforesaid, or either of them, shall be unpaid, in part or in all, after either of the days of payment aforesaid, then it shall be lawful for the said earl, his heirs and assigns, into the said premises to enter and distrain, and the distress there found to dispose of according to law; and in default of such sufficient distress for satisfaction of the rent and other payments, with all costs and charges thereon; or if the said John Williams, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall suffer the said premises, or any part thereof, to be ruinous to the value of 40s. and the same shall not repair within six months after notice to him or them given or left at his or their place of abode for the time being, then for all or either of the causes aforesaid it shall be lawful for the said earl, his heirs and assigns, into the said premises, or any part thereof in the name of the whole, to re-enter, and the same to re-possess, as in his or their former estate. And the said earl, for himself, his heirs and assigns, the said demised premises, with the appurtenances, against him and John Williams, his executors, administrators, and assigns, under the rent, covenants, conditions, exceptions, and agreements before expressed, against all persons whomsoever lawfully claiming the same, shall and will, during the said term, warrant and defend. In witness whereof, the parties aforesaid have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year above said."

A counterpart of the same lease was duly executed by the said John Williams.

The lease was invalid as an execution of the said power by reason that it did not contain the same covenants as were contained in the ancient leases of the same premises.

John Williams had not, at the time of accepting the said lease, any notice of the said ancient leases or any of them, nor was the said John Williams, at the time of accepting the said lease, aware that there was any special power of leasing applicable to the said premises, but the said John Williams believed that the said George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont, was owner in fee of the said premises, and that the said lease was granted by the said earl as owner in fee of the said premises.

The said John Williams entered upon the said demised premises under and by virtue of the lease to him thereof, and enjoyed and possessed the term so granted as aforesaid until the eviction of his tenants as hereafter stated.

One of the lives of the said lease is still living.

By a certain other indenture of lease, bearing date the 25th of March, 1805, and made between the said George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont, since deceased, of the one part, and John Farthing, of Williton aforesaid, labourer, of the other part, and duly executed by the said earl, for the considerations therein mentioned, the said earl did demise and lease unto the said John Farthing, his executors, administrators, and assigns, all that messuage then converted into two dwelling-houses and garden in Long-street, in Williton aforesaid, and adjoining Francis Hale's house, being part of Manwell's tenement, which said two dwelling houses then were in the occupation of the said John Farthing and William Wyne (except as therein is excepted), being also part of the said demised premises, to hold the said demised premises unto the said John Farthing (since deceased), his executors, administrators, and assigns, for the term of ninety-nine years, if James Farthing, then aged twenty-eight years, Mary Farthing, then aged twenty years, and Ann Farthing, then aged seventeen years, or either of them, should so long live, under payment by the said lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, of the net yearly rent of 1*l*., and on the several deaths of the said James Farthing, Mary Farthing, and Ann Farthing, of 1s. for a heriot.

The said last-mentioned lease was, in other respects, mutatis mutandis, in the same words as the lease hereinbefore set forth.

A counterpart of the said lease to the said John Farthing was duly executed by the said John Farthing.

This lease was invalid as an execution of the said power by reason that it did not contain the same covenants as were contained in the ancient leases of the same premises.

John Farthing had not, at the time of accepting the said lease, any notice of the said ancient leases, or any of them; nor was the said John Farthing, at the time of accepting the said lease, aware that there was any special power of leasing applicable to the said premises; but the said John Farthing believed that the said George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont, was owner in fee of the said premises, and that the said lease was granted by the said George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont, as such owner in fee of the said premises.

The said John Farthing entered upon the said demised premises under and by virtue of the lease to him thereof, and continued in possession thereof until the period of his death as hereafter mentioned.

The said Ann Farthing is still living.

By a deed-poll, under the hand and seal of the said John Farthing (endorsed upon the said last-mentioned indenture of lease), and bearing date the 4th of May, 1808, the said John Farthing, in consideration of 53*l*. 10s. to him paid by Peter Boswell, of Orchard Wyndham, in the parish of St. Decuman's, in the county of Somerset, carpenter, assigned unto the said Peter Boswell, his executors, administrators, and assigns, all and singular the premises comprised in and demised by the said therein-within indenture of lease, dated the 25th day of March, 1805, together with the said indenture of lease, to hold unto the said Peter Boswell, his executors, administrators, and assigns, for all the then unexpired residue of the said term in the said demised premises.

The said Peter Boswell departed this life in or about the month of June 1830, having first duly made and published his last will and testament in writing, bearing date the 14th day of January, 1828, and thereof appointed the said John Williams sole executor, by whom the same was duly proved in the Consistorial Episcopal Court of Wells, on the 20th day of July, 1830.

And the said John Williams, as such executor as aforesaid, entered into and upon, and remained in the possession and enjoyment of the said last-mentioned term, until the eviction of his tenants as hereinafter stated.

The said George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont, duly made and published his will, bearing date the 10th day of September, 1834, and thereof appointed the said defendants and William Tyler (since deceased) executors, and the said George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont, departed this life in or about the month of November 1837, and his said will was duly proved by the defendants in the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury, on or about the 24th day of January, 1838.

Upon the death of the said George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont, the Right Hon. George Wyndham, the present Earl of Egremont, entered upon the estates so devised by the said will of the said Charles Earl of Egremont, and lawfully claimed to be the owner of and entitled to the said several demised premises, discharged from the said several indentures of lease, dated respectively the 24th of March, 1805, and the 25th of March, 1805, as being part of the said estates, on the ground that the said several leases were void, not having been made in conformity with the leasing power contained in the said will of the said Charles Earl of Egremont.

On or about the 10th day of January, 1840, the several tenants then holding under the said John Williams, and then being in the actual possession and occupation of the premises comprised in the said several indentures of lease respectively, were served with declarations in two several actions of ejectment, upon the demise and at the suit of the said George Wyndham, Earl of Egremont, to recover possession of the said demised premises respectively, upon the ground of the said invalidity of the said several leases.

The said John Williams thereupon caused the said executors of the said George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont, to be served with a notice, in writing, to the effect that he was advised by counsel that the said leases were invalid, and that he had no defence to the said actions, and that, acting under the advice of counsel, he should not defend the same; and to the further effect, that the said leases contained an absolute warranty of title on behalf of the said George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont, the lessor, his heirs and assigns, against all persons whomsoever; and that he should require the said executors, in performance of the said warranty, to defend him and his tenants in the possession of the said premises for the residue of the term thereby granted and determinable as aforesaid; and that in case of eviction from the said premises, he should claim and proceed to recover of them, the said executors, the value of the said demised premises, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, and all other loss, charges, damages, and expenses whatsoever which he, or his said tenants, or any or either of them, or any other person or persons, should or might suffer, sustain, or be liable, or be put unto by or by reason or means of such eviction, or the said action, or any other action, proceeding, cause, matter, or thing whatsoever consequent thereon, or relating thereto.

The solicitor of the said executors, in consequence of such notice, wrote and sent to the said John Williams a notice in writing, to the effect that he was instructed by the said executors of the said late Earl of Egremont, at the expense of his estate, to appear and plead to the said ejectments, but that these, and all other proceedings to be taken towards defending the said ejectments, were to be adopted and carried on without prejudice to the right of the said executors to reject and resist any claim that might be made against them, in respect of the said leases granted by the said late Earl.

The attorneys of the said defendants accordingly appeared to and defended the said actions of ejectment in the name of the said John Williams, and the same were tried at the Somersetshire Spring Assizes for the year 1840, when a verdict was found for the lessor of the plaintiff in each of the said actions, and on or about the 29th day of September, 1842, the said George Wyndham, Earl of Egremont, took lawful possession of the said demised premises, and lawfully evicted the said John Williams and his tenants therefrom.

The said executors paid and discharged the costs taxed of the said George Wyndham, Earl of Egremont, in the said actions of ejectment, but the said John Williams was lawfully called upon to pay, and was forced to pay, and did pay, to the said George Wyndham, Earl of Egremont, the sum of 13*l*. 16s. 1d. for the mesne profits of the said premises, demised by the said indenture of lease of the 24th day of March, 1805, and the said John Williams also incurred certain necessary costs, charges, and expenses in and about the said action, for the recovery of the said last-mentioned premises, amounting to 24*l*. and upwards.

The value of the said premises demised by the said indenture of the 24th day of March, 1805, during the residue of the before-mentioned term therein, which remained unexpired at the period of the eviction aforesaid, amounted to the sum of 75*l*.

The said John Williams was also lawfully called upon to pay, and was forced to pay, and did pay, to the said George Wyndham, Earl of Egremont, the sum of 14*l*. for the mesne profits of the said premises demised by the said indenture of lease, of the 25th of March, 1805. The said John Williams also incurred certain necessary costs, charges, and expenses in and about the said action for the recovery of the said last-mentioned premises, amounting to 25*l*. and upwards.

The value of the said premises demised by the said indenture of the 25th of March, 1805, during the residue of the before-mentioned term therein, which remained unexpired at the period of the eviction aforesaid, amounted to the sum of 80*l*.

The said defendants have received assets of the testator, George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont, more than sufficient for the payment of the several sums hereinbefore mentioned.

The questions for the opinions of the Court are,—

First, whether the said John Williams is entitled to recover from the defendants, as executors of the said George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont, the sums of 13*l*. 16s. 1d., 24*l*., and 75*l*. or any or either, and which of them.

And whether any interest on such sums, or any or either, and which of them.

And secondly, whether the said John Williams, as such executor as aforesaid, is entitled to recover from the said defendants, as executors of the said George O'Brien, Earl of Egremont, the said sums of 14*l*., 25*l*. and 80*l*. or any or either, and which of them.

And whether any interest on such sums, or any or either, and which of them.

The case was argued in Michaelmas Term last by Byles, Serjeant (with him Butt), for the plaintiff, John Williams, who is the original lessee of the first lease and the executor of the assignee of the second lease so granted by the late George Earl of Egremont, as stated in the case. It is on behalf of the plaintiff contended, first, that the warranty contained in these leases is equivalent to a covenant for title and quiet enjoyment. Secondly, that it is an express one and not an implied one. Thirdly, that it was a covenant extending not merely to the term, which in fact lasted but to the end of the term which was intended to be granted, viz. the 99 years, if the cestui que vies should so long live. Fourthly, that the executors, and not merely the real representatives of the lessor, are liable upon the covenant. And it is also further contended, in support of the plaintiff's right as representative of the assignee of the second lease, that the benefit of the covenant runs with the land to the assignee of the term, and also that the assignee may sue thereon though the breach did not happen until the lessor's death. Firstly, the words "warrant and defend" cannot be strictly annexed to an estate for years (Shep. Touch. 8, "Warranty" p. 181); but when annexed to an estate for years, it is a personal covenant. (Shep. Touch. 186, where it is said, "If one make a lease for years of land and bind himself and his heirs to warrant the land, this is no good warranty, neither will it have the effect of a warranty: but this may amount to a covenant on which an action of covenant may be brought." Shep. Touch. 163; and in page 167 it is said, "a warranty in a lease for years shall be taken for a covenant for quiet enjoying.") To the same effect were cited Bac. Abr. "Covenant" C.; and Wotton v. Hele (2 Saund. 180), and Pincombe v. Rudge (Hob. 3). Secondly, as to its being an express covenant, Shep. Touch. 167; Swan v. Stransham (Dyer, 257, a), and Broderidge v. Windsor (22 Eliz. referred to in Dyer, 257 b) are direct authorities.

Next the words "during the said term" meant the term which was intended to be passed. The warranty had reference to the time, and not the interest. (Coke Litt. 45, b; Wright v. Cartwright, 1 Burr. 282; Evans v. Vaughan, 4 B. & C. 261 & 267.) There Abbot, C. J. says, "The lessor says by his deed that the lessee shall have the estate for that period for which he purports to grant it, and it is not open to him or any person claiming under him to say that he meant by the words 'during the said term' any other term than that which he purported to pass by his deed."

Fourthly, as to the liability of the executors of the lessor. The heir is not bound in a specialty, unless named; but the executor is, whether he be named or not. (Lady Cavan v. Pulteney, 2 Ves. 544; Hyde v. Skinner, 2 P. Wms. 197; Com. Dig. title Covenant, C.; 1 Bro. Ab. "Covenant," pl. 11.) Then, as to the plaintiff's right of action on the second lease, the fourth resolution in Spencer's case (5 Rep. 16) shows that upon the word demise, the assignee of the term may sue. As to the last point, this is distinguishable from Andrews v. Pearce (1 N. R. 158), which will be cited on the other side; for there the assignment was made after the death of the tenant in tail, who had granted the lease; but here it was before the death of the lessor, the tenant for life, and it is not competent for the executors to say that the term ceased by the death of the lessor. (Evans v. Vaughan, 4 B. & C. 267; Waller v. Dean and Chapter of Norwich, Brownlow, 81, and S. C. Owen, 134.) But it is also submitted, that this is not merely a covenant for quiet enjoyment, but also for title; and, if so, the breach then occurred before the death of the lessor, and was a continuing breach. (Kingdom v. Nottle, 4 M. & S. 57.) With respect to the damages, the claim for interest is abandoned, and the rest is left to the Court to determine on.

Channell, Serjt. (Hugh Hill with him) for the defendants, the executors.—It is admitted that a warranty cannot be attached to a lease for years, and Co. Litt. 389, shews the reason on which this is founded; and it is also admitted that, in a certain sense, this is a covenant (Com. Dig. title Covenant, A. 4), but it is for the plaintiff, to maintain this action, to shew that this is an express covenant. The defendants contend that this is only a covenant in law, and therefore is confined to the lessor's own acts or to acts which have taken place during the lessor's own estate. (Roll Abr. "Covenant," C. 518, pl. 3, under the head "What words make an express Covenant;" and Adams v. Gibney (6 Bing. 656), were cited.) None of the cases which have been cited on the other side interfere with this, being an implied, and not an express covenant, with the exception of the case in Dyer; but that was not a decision; it was only an obiter dictum. The cases cited on the other side were nearly all of them cases of express covenant, which make all the difference as to the liability of the lessor. In Shep. Touch. 178 it is said, "If a lessee be ousted by one that hath title, it seems an action of covenant will lie for this ouster against the executor or administrator upon the covenant in law, if he were put out in the lifetime of the lessor, and not otherwise, for if there be tenant for life, the remainder in fee to another, and the tenant for life, by the words demise or grant, doth make a lease for years and die, and after, he, in the remainder, doth enter, and put out the lessee for years; in this case he cannot, upon this covenant, in law charge the executors or administrators of the lessor; but upon an express covenant for quiet enjoying, he may." Here there was no breach in the earl's lifetime, and the obligation only is, that when called upon, he would warrant and defend. This is not an express, but an implied covenant, for it could not be carried out as intended, being annexed to a term for years; the law, therefore, will imply an obligation, which can only be for breaches committed by the covenantor himself, or during his estate. As regards the second lease, to which the plaintiff is entitled as executor of the assignee, an assignee can only sue by reason of his privity of estate; and as here the privity of estate ceased before the breach (the breach not occurring in the late earl's lifetime), the right was gone. As to this Andrew v. Pearce (1 N. R. 158) does apply. With regard to the damages, the 24*l*. for costs cannot be recovered; a party has no right to defend where he has no defence, and throw the expense of so doing on another, and the defendants here paid their own costs.

Byles, Serjt. in reply, cited Burnett v. Lynch (5 B. & C. 589); Holder v. Taylor (Hob. 12); and Frazer v. Skey (2 Chitty, 646), and called the attention of the Court to the breach in the declaration in the report of Kingdom v. Nottle as not happening until after the estate of the lessor had ceased.

Channell, Serjt. replied to the new cases cited by Byles, Serjt. Cur. adv. vult.

The reasons on which the Court had determined the certificate they should send to the Master of the Rolls, were now stated by

TINDAL, C. J.—The material facts out of which the question in law now before us has arisen, are very few. The late Earl of Egremont being tenant in life, with a leasing power, on the 24th of March, 1805, granted a lease to John Williams for 99 years, if the three persons named therein should so long live, which lease was afterwards held to be void by the judgment of a court of law, on the ground that it was not made with a due observance of the leasing power. This lease, which was under the seal of the late Earl, contained a clause that "the said Earl, for himself, his heirs, and assigns, the said demised premises, with the appurtenances, unto the said John Williams, his executors, administrators, and assigns, under the rent, covenants, conditions, exceptions, and agreements before expressed, against all persons whomsoever lawfully claiming the same, shall and will, during the said term, warrant and defend."

On the death of said lessor, the remainder-man brought an action of ejectment against the lessee, and recovered judgment and possession of the demised premises. On this state of facts the question in the first case is, whether the lessee can maintain an action of covenant against the executors of the tenant for life? And in the second place the further question arises, whether the executors of the assignee of the lessee under another lease, similarly circumstanced in all respects with the former mentioned lease, can also maintain such action? It was admitted on the part of the defendants that in the clause above referred to the demise was not a freehold interest for a term of years, and could not be strictly and properly a warranty; and indeed the authority of Coke Litt. 389, is clear upon the point. A warranty in such sense can neither be pleaded in law, nor can the party to whom the warranty is granted vouch, as he may well when it is annexed to a real estate. It was also admitted upon the argument, on the part of the defendants, that though such warranty, when annexed to the demise of a chattel interest, was not strictly and properly a warranty, yet it was a covenant in the nature of a covenant for quiet enjoyment and title. But it was contended on the part of the defendants that such covenant was not an express covenant, but an implied covenant, or more properly a covenant in law only, and therefore extending no further than for quiet enjoyment during the continuance of the interest which passed by law under the demise, that is, during the life of the lessor only. On the part of the plaintiff it was, on the other hand, contended that it imported an express covenant for quiet enjoyment, and, as such, extended to protect the lessee during the whole of the continuance of the term intended to pass by the demise. This is the precise point of contention between the parties, and, according to all the decisions on this point, the result will be, if the covenant is an express covenant, the plaintiff will be entitled to maintain his action; if a covenant in law only, the defendant will be entitled to judgment. It appears to us that some confusion has arisen from the want of distinguishing with sufficient accuracy between covenants in law and implied covenants, and from the use of these terms, in some instances, indiscriminately for each other. A covenant in law is, properly speaking, an agreement which the law infers, from the use of certain words of grant having a known legal operative force; as the word dedi in a feoffment, or demisi in a lease; and these terms, after having had a direct operation in creating an estate, have a new and secondary operation given to them by law, and are held to form a covenant by the feoffor or the lessor for the quiet enjoyment of the estate which they have already created. A covenant of this nature and description is sometimes, too, it would seem, improperly called an implied covenant; whereas an implied covenant, in its proper legal sense, is a covenant not formally stated in a deed, but which is collected by constructive inference from the terms used in it; and we think an implied covenant, in its proper sense, should not be distinguished in its effects or legal consequence from an express covenant. It is, indeed, a matter of construction in every case, to ascertain whether the intent to covenant in such or such a manner is sufficiently manifest in the words used in the instrument; but the intention once ascertained, the real effect and consequences of such implied covenants are not in any manner affected by the clearness or obscurity of the terms employed; such a difficulty, if once overcome, in arriving at the construction, an implied covenant in its proper sense, differs in no respect from a covenant that is expressed; and we think a covenant arising from the terms of a warranty is not, as contended for by the defendants, a covenant in law, but is, in the proper sense of the word, an implied covenant, to be construed in the same manner, and attended with the same result, as an express covenant for quiet enjoyment. The authorities are in accordance with this view. In Swan v. Stransham (Dyer, 257, a), though it was said in a demise for years by a tenant for life, an action of covenant could not be maintained, on a covenant in law, against the executors of the tenant for life, because the covenant in law ends and determines with the estate and interest of the lessor, yet it was said, if it had been a covenant in fact or expressed, or warranty of the term expressed, it would be otherwise. In Pincombe v. Rudge (Hob. 3), a warranty is called a covenant real where it is annexed to the freehold in question; but that it is a covenant personal where a chattel interest is in question. This case is referred to for this distinction in 1 Roll's Abridgment, 518, where a personal covenant by a warranty where a chattel interest is in question, is classed under express covenants, and not under covenants in law nor implied covenants. In Wotton v. Hele (2 Saund. 180), an action of covenant for quiet enjoyment was sustained under a warranty for a term of years with a fine; but there no distinction was made between a covenant being expressed or a covenant in law. In Comyn's Digest, "Covenant" A 4, a warranty annexed to a chattel interest is indeed classed under covenants in law as distinguished from express covenants. But the only authorities referred to are Wotton v. Hele, which does not appear to the point, and Pincombe v. Rudge, where the same covenant is classed as an express covenant; and where in Hobart it is said a warranty not annexed to a chattel interest will not operate as a warranty, but as a covenant in law, the author was adverting, not to the distinction between an express covenant and a covenant in law, but to that between a warranty, in the strictest sense, and a covenant personal. The other cases, Swan v. Stransham (Dyer, 257), and Adams v. Gibney (6 Bing. 656), bear on the question of the liability, with respect to a covenant of law, and not on the question whether an express warranty is a covenant of law only. Therefore, both on principle and authority, we think this is an express covenant for quiet enjoyment, which extends to the term purported to be granted; consequenty, the defendants are liable thereon as executors of the covenantor. In the second case, we think the executor of the assignee of the lessee has the same right of suing on this covenant as the original lessee. In Spencer's case (5 Rep. 16), it was held that a covenant in law for title would pass with the estate. There is neither principle nor authority to shew that an express covenant, either for title or quiet enjoyment, would not equally pass and be as available by the assignees of the lessee, or the executors of the assignee; and although in Andrew v. Pearce (1 N. R. 158), it was held that no action was maintainable upon a covenant for quiet enjoyment, by the assignee of the lessee against the representatives of the lessor, it was expressly on the ground that the lease became absolutely void by the death of the lessor before the assignment.

The point of damages only remains to be considered. As to the mesne profits and value of the term, the liability of the executors is too clear to require discussion. We think, also, that the present defendants are bound to pay the costs of the present plaintiff in defending the action of ejectment, because the defendants, by directing the defence, admitted there was reasonable ground for defending it. From the statement, it appears to us the costs in question were necessary for such defence; but we see no ground for the allowance of interest on any of the sums.

LUNN v. THORNTON.

The plaintiff, by a deed-poll, dated August 1843, bargained and sold to the defendant all his goods, household furniture, plate, linen, china, stock and implements of trade, and all other effects whatsoever, then remaining, or which should at any time thereafter remain, and be in and upon the dwelling house of the plaintiff. Held, that the goods of the plaintiff subsequently acquired from the date of the bill of sale, did not pass under it.

Channell, Serjt. on June 11th, shewed cause why the verdict in this cause should not be set aside, and instead thereof, a verdict entered for the plaintiff.

Byles, Serjt. contrà, citing Perkin's Profitable Book, 65; 2 Rolle's Ab. 48); Bacon's Maxims, Reg. 14. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was an action for trover and conversion, to which the defendant, among other pleas, pleaded that, except as to certain goods specified in the plea, the plaintiff was not possessed as of his own property; upon which plea issue was joined, and the only question at the trial was, whether certain goods, not included among those which were expressed in the plea, were at the time of the conversion the property of the plaintiff. It appeared at the trial that the plaintiff did by deed-poll, dated the 14th day of August, 1843, in consideration of a sum of money lent and advanced to him by the defendant, bargain, sell, and deliver unto the said defendant all and singular the goods, household furniture, plate, linen, china, stock and implements of trade, and all other effects whatsoever then remaining, or being, or which should at any time thereafter remain and be, in and upon the dwelling-house at Stoney Stratford aforesaid, and also all his other effects elsewhere. The goods in dispute are not the goods remaining, or being in and upon the premises at the time of the execution of the deed by bargain and sale, but were goods which had become the property of the plaintiff, and were also brought upon the premises subsequent to the execution of that instrument, and were remaining thereon at the time of the seizure under the bill of sale. Under these circumstances it was contended by the defendant's counsel that the bill of sale, covered the goods, as being goods remaining and being in or upon the premises at the time of the seizure; and the question is whether the property in these goods passed under this bill of sale? It is not the question whether the deed might not have been so framed as to give the defendants the power of seizing the future goods of the plaintiff so acquired by him and brought upon the premises in satisfaction of the debt; nor does there seem any doubt that such power might have been given. But the question before us arises upon the plea which puts in issue the property in the goods, and nothing else. It amounts to this, whether by law a deed of bargain and sale of goods can pass property in goods which are not in existence, or, at all events, which do not belong to the grantor at the time of the execution of the deed. Upon the part of the plaintiff the authorities are very strong to shew that no personal property could pass by grant other than that which would belong to the grantor at the time of the execution of the deed. Preston, title "Grant," says, "It is a common learning in the law, that a man cannot grant or charge that which he hath not." So in Hobart's Reports, it is said "a man cannot grant all the wool that shall grow on his sheep that may be hereafter; for he hath it neither actually nor in possession;" a distinction which seems to have been adopted by Preston in another place, placet 90,—'that if a man grant to me all the wool on his sheep for seven years, the grant is good;" by which he evidently intended the wool of the sheep which the grantor hath. Still further, the plaintiff relies upon the authority of

of Lord Bacon's Maxims, Regula 14, "Licet dispositio de interesse futuro sit inutilis tamen fieri potest declaratio præcedens quæ sortiatur effectum interveniente novo actu." Upon which it is to be observed, Lord Bacon takes the first branch of the maxim; namely, that a disposition of after-acquired property is altogether inoperative as a proposition of law, entirely beyond dispute and only labours to establish the second branch of the maxim, namely, that such disposition may be considered as a declaration precedent, which has the effect of some new act of the party after the property is acquired. For he says, "The law doth not require it of the grantor, except there be a foundation of interest in the grantor; for the law will not except a grant of title of things in action, much less will it allow a man to grant or encumber that in which he has no interest at all but merely in futuro." The principal contention on the part of the defendant was that the facts of the case brought it within the exception in Lord Bacon's rules, and that the bringing of the goods upon the premises of the plaintiff, where they were seized at a time subsequent to the execution of the bill of sale, was this new act done by the plaintiff, which gave to the declaration contained in the previous bill of sale its effect. But to us it appears to be an answer that the evidence at the trial is altogether silent upon the subject which accompanies the bringing of the goods upon the premises, so that it is impossible to say whether that be the act of the plaintiff or not. Further, the new act upon which Lord Bacon relies appears in all the instances put, to be an act done by the grantor with the avowed object and view of carrying the former grant or distinction into effect. Lord Bacon's language is, "There must be some new act or conveyance to give life and vigour to the declaration precedent, rendering the rule altogether inoperative." There is an instance given of a feoffment, "as if the disseisee make a charter of feoffment to J. S. and a letter of attorney to enter and make livery and seisin, and deliver the deed of feoffment, and afterwards, livery and seisin is made accordingly; this is a good feoffment, and yet he had nothing other than in right at the time of the delivery of the charter," and so on, as Bacon says, "after there has been a new livery, good in law. So, if I covenant by indenture to purchase land upon a certain day, and before that day I will levy a fine of the same land, and that the same fine shall be to certain uses which I express in the same indenture; this indenture to lead uses, being but matter of declaration and countermandable at my pleasure, will suffice, though the land be purchased after, because there is a new act to be done, namely, the fine after there has been an assignment to me of the land. So, if I demise lands whereof I shall be afterwards seised, and after I purchase lands, and J. S. my attorney, doth demise them, this is a good demise, because the demise by my attorney is a new act done." Therefore this case is not brought within the exception to the 14th rule or maxim, there being no new act done by the grantor indicating his intention that these goods should pass by the former bill of sale; and the case falls under the general rule, that no property in the goods passed to the defendant. We therefore think the verdict on the second plea, which denies the property in the plaintiff, must be entered for him. Rule absolute.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Wednesday, Feb. 19.

STOKES v. SAVAGE.

Tithes modus.

This case rests entirely upon the facts. It was originally in the form of a case reserved, in which it was agreed that the Court should pronounce a judgment upon the law of facts. Judgment was given for the defendant. A rule was obtained in the nature of an application for a new trial, and argued at great length; but as the judgment states all the facts, it is unnecessary to report them here. This day the judgment was read by the Court.

JUDGMENT.

BARON PARKE.—This was a rule obtained in the nature of an application for a new trial. The case was a case reserved upon an issue under the Tithe Commutation Act, which came on for trial before my Lord Chief Justice, and I directed that all the facts should be stated, and all the documentary evidence in the form of a special case, for the opinion of the Court, who were to perform the office of jurors, and find the facts as they thought they ought to be found. The matter was argued at great length, and occupied two days, and the Court proceeded to deliver its opinion, after taking a short time for deliberation. I pronounced the judgment of the Court, in which I stated the facts of the case, and the difficulty there was of arriving at any certain conclusion upon the ancient documents; but concluded that the strength of the case depended upon the modern usage. The judgment stated that, after all, the main evidence and the important part of the case on the part of the vicar arose out of the collections proved to have been made by a person of the name of Shearman and his father, for the last 80 years. These collections were headed "Commutations for Tithes," and we proceeded to comment on those, and to show that the circumstance of some of the farms being occasionally omitted made no difference, and the result was, that the Court inferred from the modern usage that there had been an endowment of the small tithes of the parish.

The rule to shew cause was obtained on affidavit, stating that this document, upon which so much reliance was placed, had never been in evidence at all. I certainly was rather surprised at the application, because I had a distinct recollection that Mr. Boteler made use of it in a point in reply, and on referring to my notes I find it was so. However, we have been furnished with a copy of the short-hand writer's notes of the whole of the argument, and I find there that the document was brought forward and admitted to such an extent as clearly made it admissible in evidence. I find it is stated in those short-hand notes that when this document was produced, Mr. Jervis objected that that document had not been received in evidence. By the direction of the Lord Chief Justice, the additional facts, besides the documentary evidence, are found by Mr. Ryland, who was to state the facts in a report, which was to be annexed to the special case, and Mr. Ryland stated the evidence of Mr. Shearman, but that he had not produced this document. On its being produced by Mr. Boteler, an objection was taken that it never had been received in evidence. Mr. Boteler stated that it had the initials of Mr. Ryland to it, as if it had been given in evidence before him, and ultimately Mr. Jervis admitted that he must take the document to have been proved to be in the handwriting of Shearman's father, Shearman himself having been collector, and his father before him, and this document stated, that all the payments, amounting to 64*l.*, which were paid by different farms in the parish, were paid on account of compositions for tithes. Then, after this discussion respecting this document, which had been admitted by Mr. Jervis to have been in the handwriting of Mr. Shearman's father, no further objection was taken; it was never said that it was inadmissible in evidence, and the Court considered that that document had been proved. Now it appears to us, therefore, that that document must be considered as having been in evidence. No objection was taken, when it was offered in evidence, to its admissibility, nor could any objection have been taken to it with success, because this is the declaration of a deceased person, stating there were compositions for tithes in the parish, which were at one time set up as a modus; and if reputation is evidence on such a subject, then there is no doubt this document was evidence, and though reputation is now considered not to be evidence on a question of a mere farm modus, it is certainly evidence of a parochial or district modus; and these payments are payments in lieu of all small tithes in the parish, because it was in evidence that no small tithes were payable by any person in the parish. Therefore, we think this document was admissible; and when we come to the other evidence in the case, it being an admitted fact that for the last fifty or sixty years these payments had been regularly made every year, and no small tithes ever paid in the parish, the Court have not the least difficulty in coming to the conclusion that these payments were made as compositions for tithes. Then there is other evidence in the cause, leading to the same result, which leaves no question upon that subject, and no doubt in any of our minds; for instance, there is the answer in the Chancery suit shortly before this question arose, which was to be settled by this issue. There is an answer put in by some of the defendants, which is evidence against them, but is no evidence against any of the other defendants. One of them produces receipts from the year 1761 down to a late period; another from the year 1809 to 1818, annual receipts of payments in lieu of small tithes; so that when we come to the question whether we believe the document, the correctness of the evidence as to this being a composition in lieu of tithes, we can have no doubt about it, because that, in truth, has been proved by the admissions of some of the defendants themselves. Besides that, there is the answer in an old Chancery suit in the year 1682. The question was discussed upon the argument whether it were admissible in evidence or not: if reputation is admissible in evidence, as we think it is in this case, by reason of its extending over the whole of the parish, those answers are very strong evidence to shew that, in 1682, payments were made in lieu of all small tithes. We are all, therefore, clearly of opinion that the judgment which we pronounced was perfectly right. It was founded upon the document which was in evidence, and which, coupled with other evidence in the case, would leave no doubt that all the payments which were proved for such a length of time, as much as fifty or sixty years, or, at all events, fifty years back, and, indeed, were admitted to have been made by the evidence in the other case, that those payments, instead of being a stipend, as contended for on the other side, were, in truth, compositions for tithes; and, therefore, if so, the vicar has been in receipt, for such a length of time, of compositions for tithes, and we must come to the conclusion that it must be referred to a legal origin, and, therefore, we refer it to the endowment of the small tithes; the result of which is, that this rule must be discharged, and the judgment remain undisturbed.

WORTH v. TERRINGTON and OTHERS.

In an action of trespass for assault and imprisonment, the defendants pleaded that the plaintiff came into a parish church during divine service, and conducted himself indecently, and so as to disturb the congregation, whereupon the defendants, a Rector and Churchwardens, expelled him, &c. Replication—De injuriâ. The defendants, at the trial, proved their plea, with the exception of the allegation that it was during divine service. Held, that that allegation was material, and could not be rejected as surplusage, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the verdict.

Trespass, for assault and false imprisonment.

Plea, among others, that the plaintiff, heretofore, &c. came riotously into a certain parish church, during divine service, and got into the clerk's desk, and there began to sing songs so loudly as to disturb the congregation, and otherwise indecently and unbecomingly conducted himself, and the defendants then justified the putting him out, some of them as Rector and Churchwardens, and the rest as their servants, and by their command.

Replication—De injuriâ.

The case was tried before Alderson, B. at the last assizes at Norwich, when the defendants proved their plea, with the exception of the allegation that the facts occurred during divine service, it appearing, that though the congregation was in part assembled, service had not commenced.

Mr. Baron Alderson thought that that allegation was material, and could not be treated as surplusage. Under his direction, the jury found for the plaintiff.

O'Malley afterwards moved for and obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground that as the churchwardens have authority over the church at all times, as well as during divine service, the allegation might have been left out, and that, as so much of the plea was proved as amounted to a substantial answer to the declaration, the verdict should have been for the defendants.

Byles, Serjt. and Cowling now shewed cause.—The plea would be bad without the allegation that the facts occurred during divine service. The churchwardens have no such power as that contended for. They can only turn people out in order to preserve decency and order during divine service; but even if that is not so, the expression is made material here by the whole frame of the plea. The very gist of justification set up is the misconduct of the plaintiff during divine service. The word "congregation" is used in the same sense, and means not a mere collection of persons waiting for any purpose, but persons actually engaged in devotion. A church may be used for a variety of purposes. Conduct would be permissible at an oratorio, or at a parish meeting, which would be highly indecorous during the celebration of divine worship. By striking out the words, the nature of the defence would be materially altered. If they are retained, there is a variance, and the plaintiff is clearly entitled to his verdict.

Prendergast and O'Malley, contrà.—The plea would be sufficient without the words "during divine service," and there would then be no variance. The word "congregation" is applicable as well to an assembly waiting for the service, as to one actually engaged in it. The churchwardens have a right to remove persons misconducting themselves at all times.

By the COURT.—We think the learned baron was right in his direction to the jury. The defendants have failed to prove the substantial fact set up by their plea, and there ought to be no new trial. The words "during divine service," which are now sought to be rejected and treated as mere surplusage, are the very essence of the plea, and give a colour to the other allegations, which can only be read with reference to that fact. The word "congregation" must, therefore, be taken to mean an assembly actually engaged in the celebration of divine worship. The defendants having failed in proving that fact, it is not now competent to them to turn round and say that they will strike out that allegation, and charge the plaintiff, for the first time, with misconducting himself under entirely different circumstances from those charged in the plea. There is, as the case now stands, a clear variance between the plea and the evidence, and it by no means appears that there would not still be one, if the plea were altered as the counsel for the defendants suggested, for then the plaintiff would be charged with facts which would appear to have been committed at a time which would still be different from that proved. The rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

CHOWNES v. BROWN.

Landlord and tenant—Order of reference—Writ of error.

This was an action of assumpsit, and the first count alleged, that in consideration that the defendant was tenant of the plaintiff of certain lands, tenements, messuages, and hereditaments, he undertook to use the said lands, &c. in a proper husband-like manner; and concluded with a breach that they were ruinous and dilapidated, and that he delivered them in an untenant-like and unhusband-like manner. There were other counts besides this special one, to which the defendant pleaded generally non assumpsit at the trial before Williams, J. at Huntingdon. The cause was referred to a learned arbitrator by order of Nisi Prius, with power to certify, which was exercised in favour of the plaintiff for 193*l*. In Michaelmas Term last this rule was obtained to arrest the judgment so entered, on the ground that the first count was bad for want of an allegation that the defendant became tenant at his request.

Gunning, on a former day, having shewed cause on that point,

Byles, Serjt. and O'Malley, were heard contrà; and at the close of the case, Cur. adv. vult.

Afterwards, on this day,

PARKE, B. delivered judgment in the following terms:—This case, which was argued a day or two ago, was a motion in arrest of judgment, which the Court took time to consider, and they have found that this motion in arrest of judgment ought never to have been made, because the parties were, under the terms of reference, not to bring a writ of error; and being under terms not to bring a writ of error, they ought not to have moved in arrest of judgment, and therefore the rule must be discharged.

O'Malley then prayed to be heard on that point, which had taken the defendant by surprise.

By the COURT.—The Court is certainly open to great doubt; but, under the circumstances of the case, we do not feel inclined to make your rule absolute. The defendant, however, is left to his writ of error. Rule discharged.

JAMES v. WILLIAMS.

A plea to an action on a promissory note, that the defendant had delivered to the plaintiff certain bills of exchange for and on account of the debt in the declaration mentioned, ought to shew that the bills so delivered were negotiable instruments.

Action on a promissory note for 100l.

Plea—That the defendant delivered to the plaintiff certain bills of exchange, amounting, to wit, to the sum of 100l.; and also amounting to a large and sufficient sum, for and on account of, amongst other things, the promissory note in the declaration mentioned. Verification.

The defendant had a verdict at the trial.

Chilton, Q. C. afterwards obtained a rule for judgment non obstante veredicto, on the ground that the plea was no answer to the action.

E. V. Williams (Benson with him) now shewed cause.—Since the case of Kearslake v. Morgan (5 T. R. 513), it can scarcely be contended that negotiable instruments may not be so delivered, for and on account of a debt, so as to operate as a suspension of it, or that a plea alleging such a delivery is not good. It has become the common practice so to plead. (Kendrick v. Lomax, 2 C. & J. 405.) [PARKE, B.—The acceptance of a bill of exchange on account is payment if the bill be paid, otherwise not. If it is given in satisfaction, then there is an end of the original debt, whether the bill is paid or not. The acceptance on account is only a conditional payment to the plaintiff or his appointee.] I submit that this does not amount to payment, because it would equally become satisfaction if there were laches. (Mercer v. Cheese, 4 M. & G. 804.) The contest in that case was, whether it was necessary to go on and give the history of the bill, and shew whether it had been paid or not, and the Court decided that it was a good primâ facie answer merely to say the bill was given for and on account of the debt. Mr. Justice Maule said, "Whether the bills are due or not, the defendant is liable to be sued upon them, either by the plaintiff or the person in whose hands they are The defendant cannot tell whether they are in the plaintiff's hands or not. [PARKE, B.—You need scarcely occupy the Court with these citations, because that is recognized law. The question here seems to be, whether the bills are shewn to have been of equivalent value to the whole debt.] We take for granted, then, that the averment is good. The plea may be now treated as if it alleged an acceptance in satisfaction. It is then objected, that the allegation being that the bills were given, not merely for the note in the declaration mentioned, but for that among other things, the plea does not shew that the bills were sufficient in amount to satisfy all those matters. This objection is met by the averment in the plea that the bills which were given in satisfaction of the note, among other things, were sufficient in value. After verdict, that must be taken to mean sufficient for both the note and the other matters. If the language of the plea is capable of a construction which will make it good, it will be so construed now. We must have proved their sufficiency at the trial under this issue. (Avery v. Hoole, 2 Cowp. 825; Lord Huntingtower v. Gardner, 1 B. & C. 297; Fletcher v. Podsen, 8 B. & C. 192; France v. White, 1 M. & G. 731.)

Chilton, Q. C., and Welsby, contrà; citing Galloway v. Jackson, 3 M. & G. 960; Sard v. Rhodes, 1 M. & W. 153; Lewis v. Lister, 2 C. M. & R. 706. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

ALDERSON, B.—There was a case of James v. Williams, in which Mr. Chilton moved to enter judgment for the plaintiff non obstante veredicto, on the ground that the plea was bad. It appears that the plea stated the defendant had delivered to the plaintiff certain bills of exchange amounting, to wit, to the sum of 100*l*. which was the amount of the promissory note for which the action was brought, and also amounting to a large and sufficient sum for and on account of, amongst other things, the promissory note in question. Now, the rule laid down in Kearslake v. Morgan, and which has been confirmed in a modern case in this Court, is, that where bills of exchange are stated to have been delivered for and on account of a debt, it must be taken as a conditional payment; but that rule is confined to negotiable instruments alone, and it must appear upon the face of the plea, that the plaintiff takes an interest in these negotiable instruments. Now all that appears upon the face of that plea is, that the defendant delivered these bills of exchange, which are not stated to be for and on account of the debt mentioned in the declaration. There is, therefore, no averment in the plea which calls upon the defendant to shew that these were negotiable bills, and in the absence of that averment, or in the absence of any averment which makes it necessary for the defendant to shew that they were negotiable, if any issue is taken upon it, the plea is bad in substance; and though we agree with the view Mr. Williams took in his argument, that where a party pleads over, you must give to every averment which is not pleaded to a sense which, if it contains ambiguous words, would make the plea good rather than bad; yet in this case there are no such words tending to shew these bills of exchange were negotiable, and consequently there are no words to which that principle can apply. We say nothing upon the question whether or not the other words in the plea upon which Mr. Williams relied would have done; upon that we entertain grave doubts; whether the averment of the bills of exchange, amounting to a large and sufficient sum, would not be enough to have made the plea valid by treating the sufficiency as adequate to discharge, not merely the debt in the declaration mentioned, but also the other things for and on account of which they are alleged in the plea to have been given; we do not say a word as to that, but upon the whole, we think the plea is bad in substance, and that the rule to enter judgment for the plaintiff upon the first issue, non obstante veredicto, must be made absolute. Rule absolute.

DOE dem. DUDGEON v. MARTIN CHAPMAN and OTHERS.

According to the practice of the Court, a new trial cannot be had as regards one defendant only; and if one is dissatisfied with the verdict, he should move to set it aside as to all.

Byles, Serjt. and Willis shewed cause against a rule obtained by O'Malley to set aside the verdict against the defendant Chapman, and for a new trial. They objected that the rule should have been to set aside the verdict altogether.

O'Malley, contra.

PARKE, B.—The meaning of this rule is, that you ask for a new trial with respect to yourself only, and the Court cannot grant that; therefore, the rule must be discharged. Rule discharged.

Friday, Feb. 21.

LESTER v. HUNT.

The question whether a note has been altered since it was made, so as to render it inadmissible as evidence, is for the judge at the trial, but the Court will review his decision as they would that of a jury on any other question of fact.

This was an action on a promissory note. There was some evidence at the trial that the note had been originally made by two persons, and that a third had afterwards been added.

Lord DENMAN thought the note inadmissible in evidence at the trial.

Whitehurst, Q.C. who appeared for the plaintiff, refused to be nonsuited, and insisted on the case going to the jury, upon which his lordship directed them to find for the defendant, as the action was on a promissory note, and there was no note before them.

Whitehurst, Q. C. afterwards obtained a rule for a new trial, upon the ground that the question, whether the note had been altered or not was for the jury.

Hill, Q. C. and Mellor now shewed cause.

Whitehurst, contrà.

Case cited: Bartlett v Smith (11 M. & W. 484).

PARKE, B.—There is no doubt that this was a question for the judge, though the Court would review his decision upon the facts, if they thought him wrong, in the same manner as that of a jury. In this case, however, the decision appears to have been right. Rule discharged.

LORD STAMFORD v. DUNHAM.

Hill, Q. C. and Cowling shewed cause against a rule obtained by Whitehurst for a new trial. Rule discharged.

AMPHLETT v. GARBUTT.

Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Keating, to set aside a nonsuit, and for a new trial. Rule discharged.

Saturday, Feb. 22.

PITT v. HARRISON and OTHERS.

This was a rule to set aside the general verdict for the plaintiff, on the ground that there was no evidence to go to the jury against Harrison, and for a new trial, or to enter a verdict for him.

Alexander and Graves shewed cause; and Talfourd, Serjt. having supported the rule, it was made absolute in the latter alternative. Rule absolute.

LEWIS v. READ and OTHERS.

Evidence—Trover.

This was an action of trespass for seizing and taking the sheep of the plaintiff, with a count in trover.

At the trial, before Coleridge, J. at Mold, it appeared that the defendant Read was the landlord of John Lewis, and that an order to distrain on his goods for rent on a certain farm had been given to the other defendants by one Owens, the general agent of Mr. Read, who was not personally cognizant of the proceedings. The distress so ordered was made, in fact, as was alleged, on the property of the plaintiff, the brother of the tenant; and the jury found, as to part of the sheep, that they had been taken on the property of the plaintiff, but that, as to the rest, there was no evidence to shew where they were taken. A verdict, however, passed for their whole value, 15*l*.; and this rule was subsequently obtained for a new trial, on the ground that there was no evidence to warrant the finding of the jury on the count in trover as against Mr. Read, who could not be made responsible for the illegal acts of the other defendants, unless his agent had either ordered them in the first instance, or recognized them subsequently through his agent, and ratified them by disposing of the produce of the distress so made.

Wm. Yardley and Bevan now shewed cause.

The COURT, without calling on Welsh to support the rule, made it absolute. Rule absolute.

OSBURNE v. BRAMALL.

Whitehurst was heard in support of a rule to set aside the verdict given for the defendant, and to enter one for the plaintiff. No counsel appearing on the other side, the Court made the Rule absolute.

BURKEY v. FLETCHER.

Townshend shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained for a new trial in this case, on the ground that the verdict for the plaintiff was against the evidence in the cause. The learned judge (Mr. Welsby, the Recorder for Chester) reported, that there was conflicting evidence, and that he would have been better satisfied with a verdict the other way. Rule discharged.

WATSON v. BODELL.—Part heard.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Saturday, Feb. 15.

(Before Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.)

Re DAY.

Officer of the sheriff bound to take notice of protection of the Court on its production to him—Power of Court to punish for contempt and to give costs.

In this case, which it was the intention of the learned Commissioner to have heard in conjunction with Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque, but which, owing to the latter not attending, was taken by himself alone, Griffiths, the sheriff's officer, appeared by Mr. Cox, from the office of Willoughby and Jacquet, to shew cause why the officer should not be committed for contempt of Court, for taking the insolvent to the Queen's Prison upon an execution out of the Palace Court, notwithstanding the production to him of the order of protection of this Court immediately after the arrest, and whereby the insolvent was imprisoned and remained in custody all night, but was discharged on the following morning. It was argued, on the part of the officer, that the insolvent, whilst under protection, stands only in the same position as a bankrupt did under statute 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 117, or in the position of a witness or other person attending a court of justice, who is privileged in consequence of such attendance; and that the officer could have no means of knowing of the petition and proceedings. This Court has the same power as the Lord Chancellor; and in case of Ex parte Russell (1 Rose, 278) it was expressly holden that the sheriff is not to judge of privileges, but the party must apply to a court of competent jurisdiction. [COMMISSIONER.—In fact pay no attention to the order of this Court.] The protection puts the insolvent in the same situation as a barrister or witness attending Courts at Westminster, and it is not for the benefit of the insolvent but for the creditors, as under the Bankrupt Act before referred to. It is a settled rule, when there is a protection, the officer cannot judge thereof. And under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 6, there should be some rule of this Court by which notice should be required to be given of the protection granted to meet cases of prisoners detained in custody or execution on the insolvent's premises; and under section 29, if any prisoner shall be taken or detained under any process whatever, for any claim or debt in respect of which he is protected from process by his final order, it shall be lawful for the Commissioner to order any officer to discharge him without exacting fee or reward; and surely the protection of the final order is intended to be as great as that granted in the first instance. The final order is conclusive, and can only be reviewed by the Court; and under 5 & 6 Vict. it shall, on proving the signature of the Commissioner thereto, be a plea in bar and protect the party from all debts contained in his schedule; and taking the 6th section of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, in connection with the 29th section of the same Act, it is submitted that the interim order places the party simply in the same situation as he would be under the final order.

The Solicitor on the other side was not called on to reply.

The COMMISSIONER.—In this case I do not think it necessary to refer to the power of the Court to commit for contempt. The officer acted bonâ fide in the opinion of his solicitor, and the insolvent has been discharged; but I am of opinion that the solicitor labours under a fallacy, in comparing the law, under 6 Geo. 4, to the present state of things. At that time the Commissioners of Bankruptcy were not a court of record. [He then read the section of the statute lastly before referred to, and as to the summons and penalty therein mentioned, he cited the case of Walters v. Reece (4 Moore, 36), and said]:—The Great Seal discharged him, and it is a fallacy to apply the then law to the present. Great changes were made by the last Bankrupt Act, by the 66th section of which this court is made a court of record, and it clearly distinguishes one state of circumstances from the other. The present question arises under the 29th sec. of the 5 & 6 Vict. and the last Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 96) refers expressly to the same, and says,—On the creditor presenting his petition, the Court is to give him his protection. It has been said that the protection is no more than that to a barrister or witness under the old law, and, in fact, that the officer is to take no notice of it. That is a position from which I strongly dissent, as the effect of it would be to destroy the law altogether. I would refer the parties to the serious penal consequences which might arise therefrom under the 16th section of the Act for winding up the affairs of certain Joint Stock Banks, and the question thereunder would be, was this an order duly made? It was; and if so, the Act points out the serious consequences attending it. Besides, the question of the power of this Court, being a court of record, to punish for contempt, if the Court had no such power of protection, the Act of Parliament would be set aside, and such a construction as that contended for would take away the great benefit from parties applying. Did the Legislature intend the protection to be set at naught? Certainly not; and I would forewarn other parties against such a fallacious view of the subject; for any other officer acting thereupon, under different circumstances from the present, will meet with serious results. The inconvenience in this case was only temporary, and the Court will not, therefore, punish for the contempt.

Application was made for costs, but the Commissioner refused, saying, although he had the power to give them, as this was the first case, and the officer had acted bonâ fide advice, he would not grant them. Order discharged.

N.B. There was some question, also, as to proof of the handwriting of the Commissioner being requisite to guide the officer, and in order to obviate any future difficulties arising thereupon, it is understood that protecting orders hereafter will be stamped with the seal of the court.

Monday, Feb. 24.
(Before Mr. Commissioner SHEPHERD.)
Re MOSS, an Insolvent.

Final order cannot be rescinded for non-payment of money pursuant to undertaking.

In this case the insolvent had agreed to pay 100*l.* a year out of his annual income, in liquidation of his debts, and also to keep up a policy of insurance.

A creditor applied to have the final order rescinded, on the ground that the insolvent had neglected to pay the quarterly instalments since April last, and that the Court would order a notice to that effect to be served on the insolvent.

Mr. Turquand, the official assignee, said that the policy had been kept up, but not the quarterly payments.

Mr. Commissioner SHEPHERD, on referring to the 5th and 6th Vict. c. 116, s. 12, said that it only provided for rescinding the final order; if the Commissioner had reason to believe that the petitioner had not, before the making of the order sought to be rescinded, made a full disclosure of his estate, effects, and debts, or since the making of such order had not given notice to the assignees of any property after-acquired by him, there was no provision in the Act for rescinding the final order in the event of an insolvent neglecting to pay the portion of his income stipulated for.* The application must, therefore, be refused.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

No subject of the slightest professional interest has engaged the attention of the legislature during the past week. Nothing will be done with the Certificate Duty this year, but agitation now may secure its removal next session. Hence the necessity for earnest remonstrance, petition, and debate.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

LAW OF DEODAND.

MONDAY, Feb. 24.—Lord CAMPBELL introduced a Bill, of which he had given notice last session for the abolition of deodands, a species of exaction which he characterized as most absurd, capricious, and insufficient.—The Lord CHANCELLOR by no means disputed the justice of these epithets as applied to the system of deodands, but suggested that, as they formed a part of the casual revenue of the Crown, it was expedient that the Royal assent should be obtained before the Bill was further proceeded with. The privileges of the House of Commons were also in some measure affected, and it might be doubted whether those corporations to which deodands accrued would not have a claim for compensation.—Lord CAMPBELL admitted that the royal assent would be necessary, but denied the force of the two other objections to his Bill, which was ultimately read a first time.

DIVORCE.

TUESDAY, Feb. 25.—Lord BROUGHAM gave notice of his intention to present a Bill for the transference of the divorce jurisdiction to the judicial committee of the Privy Council, which was fixed for Thursday week.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

LAW OF BASTARDY.

LAW OF BASTARDY.

TUESDAY, Feb. 25.—Sir JAMES GRAHAM brought in a Bill to amend the law of bastardy, which was read a first time. To be read a second time on Monday next.

THE LUNACY COMMISSION.

In answer to a question from Mr. W. O. STANLEY,—Sir JAMES GRAHAM said he had spoken to his noble friend (Lord Ashley), the chairman of the commission, on the subject of the progress made by the commissioners, and his noble friend informed him that drafts of two Bills had been prepared, one relating to the metropolis, and the other to the rest of the country. The Government, however, had not yet received these drafts; and therefore he (Sir James Graham) was not able to give the honourable gentleman any further information upon the matter. He would confer with his noble friend, and hoped they would be able to come to an understanding on the subject.

William Bingham Baring, Paymaster-General of her Majesty's Forces.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

SIR JAMES GRAHAM has introduced a Bill for the purpose of amending some defects in the Law of Bastardy, and, as we presume, for it is not yet printed, by a retrospective clause, to prevent the alarming consequences that might otherwise result from the flaws in Mr. LUMLEY's forms. A committee is to be appointed to inquire into the operation of the Game Laws. Our opinions on this subject have been stated more than once, and in the progress of the discussion we shall have frequent occasion to return to it.

There is nothing like experience of an evil to convince one of the necessity for reform. We beg to direct the attention of the Magistracy to a case which, we doubt not, is of common occurrence, and might be productive of more inconvenience even than that which resulted on this particular occasion. The times for holding the Quarter Sessions are fixed by statute, with a certain latitude at particular seasons; and the magistrates are empowered to hold intermediate sessions when necessary. These sessions are advertised only in the local newspapers. Consequently, when they are held at other than the days specially appointed by the statute, all who have business there, and who chance to be non-resident, and not to see the two or three local newspapers favoured with the county advertisements, have no means of ascertaining when the sessions will be held, however important the business that requires their presence.

It was this acknowledged inconvenience, so seriously and often so fatally experienced by the Profession, that induced the members of it in many localities to petition the Quarter Sessions to advertise their sessions in the LAW TIMES as well as in the local newspapers, as a medium by which information of such extreme importance to the Profession might be conveyed to all its members at the trifling cost to the county of a few shillings per annum. Many counties, cities, and boroughs, at once acceded to the request, and the announcements of their sessions continue to appear in our columns. But others refused, and counsel, solicitors, and parties having business in those districts, have no means of learning at any central source of information when their attendance will be required.

Among the counties that rejected the application was Devonshire. The letter of a correspondent exhibits the consequences. The magistrates appoint a sessions to be held in the last week in February, five weeks before the proper period. This is announced only in the local newspapers. A communication is not even made to the counsel attending the sessions. Our correspondent, resident in London, receives no information of this irregular sessions, nor would he have looked for it at such a season. Consequently, the first knowledge he has of such a sessions being held is a complaint of his non-attendance from the parties by whom he had been retained.

And the same inconveniences must be continually resulting to others, both professional and private persons, and all proceeding from the economy that, for the sake of saving to a whole county some thirty shillings a year, limits to the local newspapers an announcement which ought to be made to the entire Profession; for why should it be presumed that none but counsel, attorneys, and parties resident in the county, have business at the sessions?

And the case of Devon is the case of other counties. The same inconveniences must be continually occurring. We therefore ask of our readers among the Magistracy to represent the matter to their brethren, and of the attorneys in each county and borough to memorialize their several justices in Quarter Sessions assembled, to follow the example set by Lincolnshire, Yorkshire, Leicestershire, Lancashire, and the other counties that have acknowledged the propriety of announcing their sessions beyond the limits of their respective localities, and have deemed it due to the Profession to convey to all concerned the times appointed for business, by inserting them in the LAW TIMES also.

THE NEW SETTLEMENT BILL.

SIR JAMES GRAHAM has introduced his new Settlement Bill. It is printed; but so recently has it come to hand that we are unable this week to do more than announce its appearance. It embodies all the features of Sir JAMES GRAHAM's speech. It behoves the country to examine well its provisions; and we shall be happy to assist in aiding discussion and inter-communication of views on the subject; and shall next week analyse and review the Bill. S.

THE BASTARDY AMENDMENT BILL.

THIS amendment Bill is announced, but not yet printed. We have no reason to suppose that it will do more than legalize Mr. LUMLEY's errors, and probably expressly state that the mother's evidence shall be admissible on the hearing of appeals. S.

REVIEW OF MAGISTRATES' CASES.

HILARY TERM, 1845.

WITH the exception of Reg. v. Justices of Herts, to which we beg to direct especial notice, the Magistrates' Cases of Hilary Term were neither important nor numerous.

DUTY OF INTERESTED JUSTICES.

Lord DENMAN, in the case of Reg. v. Justices of Herts (4 Law T. 291) has added one more to the many judgments, which, despite minor failings, are building up for him fame in all time to come. There is in Lord DENMAN a breadth and majesty of mind, and a sense of lofty rectitude and unbending honour incarnate in the man, which truly ennobles the judge; and it were well for the purity of justice, and well for the dignity of the Profession, if the rightful rigour of his behests were applied with tenfold frequency to every branch of the administration and practice of the law. There are few departments of either which more loudly call for the exercise of a chastening and corrective jurisdiction than that of the magistracy of this country. In two recent cases Lord DENMAN has done much to correct abuses of power, and inspire a higher tone of feeling, and a livelier respect for the dictates of honour in that useful and powerful body. Of all conceivable malpractices in judicial functionaries, the very grossest is that of sitting in judgment upon their own cases, and using, or seeming to use, their judicial influence in behalf of their own interests. We have reason to believe that this heinous offence is one of which there have been many instances, attested by the cases which have already been brought before the Court of Queen's Bench, where magistrates interested in the decisions have attended and voted in their own cases. It is extremely shocking to find that any such improprieties have existed even in so large a body; to add that they are confined to a small minority, is merely, in other words, to say that the large body of our magistrates are not destitute of all feelings of honour and discretion. We do not measure, nor do we intend to modify, the terms in which such malpractices can alone be properly denounced and adequately branded. It is mainly owing to the timidity of Lord TENTERDEN, in his unworthy judgment in Rex v. Justices of Monmouthshire (8 B. & Cres. 137)(a) that abuses have obtained which are among the stigmas of our generation. In a previous case (Rex v. Gudridge, 5 B. & Cres. 459), an interested magistrate gave his vote, but against his interest. In Rex v. Yarpole (4 T. R. 71), the Court, though it refused to quash an order of removal, confirmed by interested magistrates, it was admitted that such order of confirmation could not be upheld. Then came the first of the two recent cases which we are about to notify.

The first is that of Reg. v. The Cheltenham Commissioners (1 Q. B. 467).

The facts were briefly these. One P. S. appealed to the Gloucestershire Quarter Sessions against a rate made under a local Act, 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 121, upon houses of his in Cheltenham. The sessions quashed the rate, with costs; and the order was brought up by certiorari. The chief objection was, "that several justices voted or took part in the decisions of the Court during the trial of the appeal, and concurred in the order by which the rate was quashed, who were at the time occupiers of or interested in property which was assessed by the rate in question, or were liable thereto, or who were otherwise directly or indirectly interested in the result of the appeal." The facts disclosed were, that on the second day an objection made to certain evidence tendered by the respondents was rejected by a majority of eleven magistrates to eight, three of the magistrates being partners in banking companies, to which belonged certain premises that were assessed in the rate. These partners also occupied the premises, and these three magistrates were among the eleven who constituted the majority. Sec. 136 of this local Act prohibits the removal of any proceeding under it by certiorari, and this objection was also taken to the rule. This Lord DENMAN, C.J. thus promptly overruled:—"We have no doubt of our having authority to declare proceedings void where there has been malversation. That point ought not to be open to doubt. A statutory clause taking away certiorari must be understood to assume that an order has been made by the proper authority; but that is not a proper authority where there is malversation." So much for the qualms of Lord TENTERDEN, and the temerity of local Acts, often smuggled through Parliament in attempted derogation of the supreme authority vested by the common law of England in the Court of Queen's Bench to supervise all inferior jurisdiction. The next point was that of the interested votes of the three commissioners. Lord DENMAN, C.J. said, "It is clear that, on the second day, three magistrates, who were interested, took a part in the decision. It is enough to shew that this decision was followed by an order, and I will not inquire what the particular question was, nor how the majority was made up, nor what the result would have been if the magistrates who were interested had retired. The Court was improperly constituted, and that rendered the decision invalid." Lord DENMAN, however, expressed an intimation that this decision might have been different had the interest been stated, and consent given to the voting of the interested magistrates; and Mr. Justice PATTESON further weakened the force of the judgment, by adding to his concurrence in it, these words:—"I must guard myself, however, by stating that I am not at present prepared to say, that in a case where one magistrate is interested, and fifty others are not, the proceedings will necessarily be invalid." And he went on to say—"I confess that I look with great suspicion at the general proposition that the vote of any interested person must necessarily vitiate the proceedings." These expressions were relied

(a) In which it was held that the Court of King's Bench had no power to review a decision at sessions in which an interested justice had, by his vote, decided the case.

In the last case, Reg. v. JJ. Herts, for here but one interested magistrate had voted. The case was this:—An order had been made at sessions confirming a previous order for the payment of money to a turnpike trust. One of the magistrates present at the sessions was a mortgagee of the tolls of that trust; the other was one of the justices who had made the order then under appeal. The mortgagee stated on oath, that though he retired with the other magistrates, he did not influence them, but only concurred with those who voted; and he stated facts from which it appeared that his vote did not turn the majority. It now became necessary to reconsider the very case put, and the dictum delivered upon it by Mr. Justice PATTESON, in Reg. v. Cheltenham. Let the following sentence of Lord DENMAN's noble judgment be recorded in the mind of every magistrate, and blazoned in every Court of Quarter Sessions in the kingdom:—"I AM MOST DECIDEDLY OF OPINION THAT THE PRESENCE OF ANY ONE INTERESTED PARTY VITIATES THE WHOLE PROCEEDINGS."

Henceforth let no justice, who does not wish to make his name a by-word of reproach, remain for one minute in court when any case is called on in which he has any sort of personal interest.

It is due to PATTESON, J. to say that he frankly retrieved his former opinion. "On further consideration," he said, "I am satisfied that the rest of the Court in Reg. v. Cheltenham were right. The question of the right constitution of the Court depends not upon the degree of influence any one member may have had upon the decision. It is an unsound and uncertain rule. The simple question is, Has he taken part in the proceedings or not?"

A learned and right-thoughted article on this subject appears in the Justice of the Peace for Jan. 25, on this case and subject. Its honourable sentiments and sound law form a grotesque contrast to the answers gratis to cases from the country, with which that publication continues to disgrace itself.

MATERNAL SETTLEMENT.

The case of Reg. v. Yelvertoft (4 Law T. 312) decides that unless there be legal evidence of a husband's being settled elsewhere, the wife or widow and her children may be removed to her maiden settlement, without first shewing that the husband had no settlement. This decision is founded on the authority of Rex v. Harberton (13 East, 311), where a registry of marriage stated the husband to be born in the parish of A. in Devon; but this was held to be no evidence of the fact, and the case was sent back to the Sessions to be reheard. The old law is to be found in the case of Rex v. St. Matthew, Bethnal-green (Burr. S. C. 482, Lord Mansfield presiding), where it was held that "the positive law in these cases of settlement is, that the child follows the father's settlement, if the father can be found, and that no recourse shall be had to the mother's settlement till that of the father can be traced no further."

In Rex v. St. Mary, Beverley, the mother of the pauper's husband gave evidence that he was born in some parish in Ipswich, and BAYLEY, J. said:—"To justify the confirmation of an order of removal, it ought to appear upon the evidence adduced by the respondents, that the party removed is settled in the parish to which the removal is made; if that do not appear, and, à fortiori, if the contrary appear, the removal cannot be supported. Now, the evidence in this case does not prove that the person removed is settled in the parish of St. Mary, to which she is removed, but in one of the parishes in Ipswich." It was also held, that in this case the onus of proving in which parish the father was born lay, not on the appellants, but the respondents. "It is enough," said BAYLEY, J. "to disprove, by clear evidence, the obligation of the appellant parish to maintain the pauper." But in Rex v. St. Mary, Leicester (3 Ad. & El. 644), it was held, that as against a birth settlement it was sufficient for the appellants to prove the mother's maiden settlement, without shewing that the father had none.

In the case of Reg. v. Yelvertoft, the only evidence of the husband's settlement was in this statement—"I was born, I believe, in London, but in what parish I never heard." This was held to be no legal evidence, and on that ground the Court ruled that the maiden settlement was valid; and they also held, that all the inquiry which was necessary had been made.

It is obvious that, as on many other points, the law of Lord Mansfield's time is not the law now. Neither is it possible to reconcile even the most recent decisions on this subject. In the judgment of the Court in Reg. v. Leeds (1 Dav. & Mer. and 1 Bit. & Sym. M. C. 52), decided last Michaelmas Term, the same point arose, and that case was strongly urged on the Court in Reg. v. Yelvertoft. In Reg. v. Leeds, the wife had been removed to her maiden settlement; her husband's evidence shewed that his settlement could not be ascertained, and it was entitled as "touching his lawful settlement," instead of the wife's; which was a ground of appeal. Lord DENMAN, C. J. in his judgment said, "An inquiry into the father's settlement was necessary in this case, and was the foundation of the proceedings; for until it appeared that his settlement could not be discovered, the wife's settlement was immaterial." But in Reg. v. Yelvertoft (1 Dav. & Mer.) Lord DENMAN says, "I think that Rex v. Harberton ought to govern this case, for there the Court said that evidence of the wife's settlement was primâ facie sufficient, and that it lay upon the appellants to rebut it, by giving evidence of the husband's settlement in a different parish. In Reg. v. Leeds, it appears to have been taken for granted that some inquiry into the place of the husband's settlement was necessary, and the Sessions merely put to us the question, whether there had been sufficient inquiry; and this Court, in effect, did merely what amounts to saying, 'as you put the question, we will answer it; the inquiry was sufficient.'"

We cannot but think that the Court implied more than this in the passage we have cited above.

The rule to be deduced from these cases is, that recourse may be had to the mother's maiden settlement without tracing the father's settlement, so long as there be no legal evidence that the father had one; or no legal evidence inconsistent with that set up.

TENEMENT SETTLEMENT.

The case of Reg. v. St. Lawrence Appleby (4 Law T. 331). This case, though stated at prolix length, involved nothing more than the point whether land must be held distinctly and separately, as well as houses and buildings, to give a settlement under 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, which provides that no person shall gain a tenement settlement "unless such tenement shall consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both." It was held of course that "separate and distinct" apply to dwelling-house, and not to land. Mr. ARCHBOLD's argument, who took this point, was nevertheless ingenious, and deserved, we thought, to have been less lightly treated by the Court.

We shall notice the remaining cases next week.

NOTICE OF APPEAL.

In the case of Reg. v. Justices of Warwickshire (4 Law T. 291) a very interesting question was mooted touching the right to re-enter and try an appeal under certain circumstances, which it is needless to detail, inasmuch as the appellants had actually omitted to aver that they had given due notice of the appeal according to the practice of the Sessions! The case will probably be again brought forward.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS.

Reg. v. The Mayor, Aldermen, and Councillors of Cambridge (4 L. T. 290). If a corporation of a borough do not proceed within ten days to fill up an extraordinary vacancy in the council, caused by a judgment of ouster against a councillor on a quo warranto, as required by 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 27, the Court will, in its discretion, order the corporation to pay the costs of a mandamus obtained by a relator, compelling them to proceed with the election; but inasmuch as these are expenses in an election, the Court will not order them to be paid out of the borough fund; but in this case intimated a strong opinion that the corporation should pay them themselves.

AUDIT OF PARISH ACCOUNTS.

Reg. v. The Auditor of the Union of Burnham (4 Law T. 291). We learn from this case that where a writ of certiorari is to be applied for to remove the accounts of a union auditor, notice must be given to all the parties, auditors and parish officers as well.

RECOVERY OF SMALL TENEMENTS.

Reg. v. Justices of Gloucestershire (4 Law T. 160 & 289) decides that under the following circumstances justices are compellable to grant the usual notice under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, to recover possession of a small tenement, and that on refusal a mandamus will issue, as it did in this case, in which application was made to two justices, and whilst the landlord's agent was stating the particulars of the case, an attorney's clerk informed the magistrates that his employer's client had a mortgage upon the property. Upon this, the justices declined to proceed, and refused to take any evidence whatever, saying, that it was optionable for them to proceed or not, and that the landlord might bring his action of ejectment.

REPAIR OF HIGHWAY.

The case of Reg. v. Heanor (4 Law T. 289; 14 Law Jour. M. C. 38) decides, that although the prosecutor is entitled to a certificate for his costs where an indictment has been preferred to try the liability of a parish to repair a certain highway, he is not entitled to them when it turns out that there was no such highway. The right to these costs is given by 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, s. 95, which provides that where "the duty or obligation" of the repair is denied by the surveyor, on the hearing of the usual summons, it shall be lawful for the justices to order an indictment to be preferred to try the question, and that the "costs of such prosecution shall be directed" by the judge who tries the indictment or justices of the sessions to be paid out of the rates of the parish where the road is situate. It had been previously held by Mr. Justice PATTESON, in Reg. v. Chedworth (9 Car. & P. 285) that this section extended only to the case where the liability to repair is in question, and not the existence of the highway itself. This distinction was warmly upheld by Lord DENMAN, C. J. in Reg. v. Heanor, in which a certificate given by TINDAL, C. J. was set aside, there having been a verdict against the prosecutor, on the ground that it turned out to be a bridle-way, and not a carriage-way. We confess that, notwithstanding our implicit deference to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench, we must venture to prefer the discretion of the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, who, on the application being made to him, heard the point argued, and held that the term "highway" was not to be understood in its strict sense, but as including a road considered to be a highway, and that the object of the Legislature appeared to be that the prosecutor should be protected from costs whenever he carried on the prosecution by the direction of the justices. (R. v. Heanor, 2 Moo. & M. 445; 13 Law Journ. M. C. 144.) May not the obligation to repair be just as much involved in the question of whether a road is a highway or not, as in the question whether it wants repair or not? We cannot but think it is. One raises the question of duty just as legitimately as the other. Why, then, this distinction? Lord DENMAN says, because a man may vexatiously try to make that a high road which is not one, making the parish pay the cost of the experiment. The right to try the obligation to repair at all is open to the same abuse. That is the fault, if it be one of the statute itself. When the justices order the indictment, it is their act, not that of the prosecutor; and this, with great deference, we think is a sufficient answer to the reasons given for the decision in Reg. v. Heanor.

In our humble judgment, a very unadvised decision on the same section of this Act was given in Rex v. Aston and Ingham (1 Greaves' Russ. on Crimes, 374), where it was held by Williams, J. after consulting some of the other judges, that where the defendants pleaded guilty there was no right to costs, because there had been no trial! It is not in the least necessary that there should. The words, "and the costs of such prosecution shall be so directed, by the judge of assize before whom the said indictment is tried, or by the justices at such Quarter Sessions, to be paid," &c. It is perfectly clear from the fact that the words "before whom the said indictment is tried," are not repeated after the words "justices at such Quarter Sessions," that it was not the intention of the Act to make the completion of the trial a condition precedent to the power of ordering costs. Nothing can be plainer than this; and nothing more thoroughly unjust than to deprive a prosecutor of his costs because he proves to be so very right that the defendant pleads guilty!

CONVICTION UNDER TURNPIKE ACT.

In the case of Barnes v. White and Another (4 Law T. 333) the plaintiff was convicted under the general turnpike statute, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, for forcibly passing through a toll-gate situate on a turnpike-road, made under the authority of a local Act, and thereby avoiding the toll due. The plaintiff refused to pay the sum in which he was convicted, and a warrant of distress against his goods was issued. The conviction contained no adjudication of the payment of the penalty, but it was held not therefore bad, since it followed the form given in the schedule to 3 Geo. 4, c. 126.

The conviction also stated the toll-gate to be situate on a turnpike-road; but the warrant stated only the toll-gate to be situate in the particular parish and county, omitting the turnpike-road, and this was held no variance.

And it was also decided that the warrant was not void for not stating that the toll-gate was situate on a turnpike road.

The warrant ordered a moiety of the penalty to be paid to the treasurer of the commissioners for amending the roads and highways in the Isle of Wight, and it was held not to be a misappropriation of the penalty.

BASTARDY ORDERS.

In the case of Reg. v. Justices of Bucks (4 Law T. 341), it was held, in accordance with the decision in Ex parte Gray (1 Bit. & Sym. 116), that an information, charging a man with being the putative father of a bastard child, must be on oath, though the Act does not require it. In fact, all informations should be on oath, whether the statute requires it or not. We know of few cases in which it can be safely omitted. We commented at large on this case at the time it was decided, 4 LAW TIMES, 343. S.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

AGAIN are our columns occupied with many important written judgments. Three or four long ones are unavoidably postponed until next week. To-day, the Court of Queen's Bench will deliver several. When these are published, the LAW TIMES will have achieved that which was never before deemed to be possible. It will have given to the Profession verbatim reports of all the written judgments of the Courts of Common Law, from the commencement of Michaelmas to the close of Hilary Terms, comprising half the legal year. The volume that contains them will thus preserve a mass of the most valuable, because the most authoritative, law, the greater portion of which can be procured nowhere beside.

PRACTICAL NOTES.

No. I.

WE hope soon to continue our series of Practical Notes upon Statutes, which lately we have not had leisure to do. But, meanwhile, we propose to commence a series of Practical Notes on General Law. This will comprise a great variety of subjects, but our selection will be mainly guided by recent decisions. By grouping these together, and shewing how far they modify or illustrate previous cases, we shall endeavour to render this series a kind of running commentary, or rather annotated digest, of the current reports. The notes will be more extended, than the Summaries which have appeared in these columns, because not limited to any definite period, or given in any regular order. We take for our first subject the case of Sewell v. Evans (4 Q.B. 626), upon the

EVIDENCE OF IDENTITY.

It is laid down distinctly, as a general proposition, in 2 Phillips on Evidence, 214, that in an action on a bond, or a promissory note, or bill of exchange, and in other cases, some evidence of identity will be necessary to connect the party with the instrument; and the cases cited in support of this proposition shew that the learned author meant the same as Mr. Roscoe, who says, "Mere identity of name is not sufficient." (P. 88, and see p. 207, 5th edition.)

Whitelocke v. Musgrove (1 Cr. & M. 511) has always been referred to as a leading case on this subject. That was an action against the defendant, as maker of a note. The subscribing witness—a marksman—was proved to be abroad, but his handwriting was duly proved. No evidence whatever was given to shew that the defendant was the Francis Musgrove who made the note. The jury found a verdict for the defendant; Bayley, B. having stated to them that he thought the attestation was no evidence against the defendant. A rule was subsequently obtained by the plaintiff to enter a verdict for the amount of the note, but, after a full argument and time taken to consider, it was discharged. All the cases were there discussed, and although the fact that the maker was a marksman was partly relied upon in the argument, it is important to observe, that the judgment did not proceed upon that ground. It was admitted that Lord Tenterden and Lord Chief Justice Best had both acted upon the notion that no evidence of identity was requisite. (See Page v. Mann, 1 M. & M. 79; Mitchell v. Johnson, ibid. 176; and Kay v. Brookman, ibid. 287; and judgments of Vaughan, B. and Bolland, B. inserted pp. 523, 524.) But Lord Kenyon, in Wallis v. Delancey (7 T. R. 266), seems to have thought differently, and Lord Ellenborough to have been undecided. (Nelson v. Whittal, 1 B. & A. 21.) The decision was grounded upon the principle that an attesting witness proves every thing which he attests, but nothing more, and consequently his signature alone did not prove that the defendant was the same Francis Musgrave who made the note. It was not because the mark of a marksman was no distinguishing sign, but that the proof of the handwriting of the subscribing witness, which is equivalent to direct evidence of the execution, is not sufficient without connecting evidence of identity. Bayley, J. said:—

If the instrument had shewn upon the face of it that it was executed by F. Musgrove, of Beeth, in the county of York, the attestation, according to the authorities, would be evidence of such being the case; but you must shew that the defendant is a person answering such description. If you intrust a witness to attest the execution by the party, and such witness die (or go abroad), you lose the advantage of identifying the party by his testimony; but in most cases you can either shew some acknowledgment, or prove that the party, from his residence, or other circumstances, answers to the description on the face of the note; or you can establish the identity of the party in some other mode.

Lord Lyndhurst, C. B. concurred with the rest of the Court, though absent when cause was shewn; and when the rule nisi was moved for, he said, "It would be very extraordinary if some evidence of identity were not necessary." We have stated this case at some length, on account of the language of Lord Denman, C.J. in the principal case. But before stating this, we may refer to three later cases in the same court. In Jones v. Hugh Jones (9 M. & W. 75), the attesting witness proved that he saw the signature to the note written by a party named Hugh Jones, whose residence and occupation he described, but that he had had no communication with him since, and that the name Hugh Jones was very common in the neighbourhood where that Hugh Jones lived, and it was held that there was nothing to go to the jury. Parke, B. said, "This point must be considered as settled by Whitelocke v. Musgrove," and he cited also Phillips on Evidence. Greenshields v. Crawford (9 M. & W. 314), however, does not seem reconcilable with the principles laid down in the leading case. The bill was directed to "Charles Banner Crawford, East-India House," and accepted "C. B. Crawford," and a witness stated that it was the writing of a gentleman of that name, who five years before had been a clerk in the East-India House, but that he did not know whether that was the defendant. Lord Abinger, C.B. and Alderson, B. held this to be sufficient evidence of identity to go to the jury, and they refused to disturb the verdict. This clashes with the rule laid down in the text-books on the authority of Whitelocke v. Musgrove; and the two cases of Sewell v. Evans and Roden v. Ryde (4 Q. B. 626) are important to shew what the Court of Queen's Bench consider to be the true rule.

Sewell v. Evans was an action for goods sold against William Seal Evans, and it appeared that about five years before action brought, William Seal Evans had been a customer, and had written a letter acknowledging the receipt of the goods. The witness, however, who proved these facts, did not know whether defendant was the same W. S. Evans, nor was any further evidence given upon the fact. Roden v. Ryde was an action against Henry Thomas Ryde as acceptor of a bill of exchange, and it appeared that a Henry Thomas Ryde had kept cash at the bank where the bill was made payable, and had drawn cheques which the cashier had paid. The cashier knew the party's handwriting by the cheques, and swore that the acceptance was in the same writing, but he had not paid any cheque for some time, did not know the party personally, and could not further identify him with defendant. In both these cases, after full argument and time taken to consider, the Court, consisting of Lord Denman, C. J., Patteson, J., and Williams, J., decided that there was sufficient evidence of identity to go to the jury, and refused to disturb the verdicts.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The doubt raised here has arisen out of the case of Whitelock v. Musgrove, but there the circumstances were different. The party to be fixed with liability was a marksman, and the facts of the case made some explanation necessary. But where a person in the course of the ordinary transactions of life has signed his name to such an instrument as this, I do not think there is an instance in which evidence of identity has been required, except Jones v. Jones (9 M. & W. 75). There the name was proved to be very common in the country, and I do not say that evidence of this kind may not be rendered necessary by particular circumstances; as, for instance, length of time since the name was signed. But in cases where no particular circumstance tends to raise a question as to the party being in existence, even identity of name is something from which an inference may be drawn.

This seems to be a very vague principle, for how is the Court to take judicial notice of what names are common, or what not? They vary according to locality. What is common in Somersetshire is uncommon in Cumberland, and in transitory actions there is nothing to shew where the plaintiff or defendant lives. However, the decision is as we have stated it, although we cannot quite concur in the concluding words of the Lord Chief Justice—"The transactions of the world could not go on if such an objection were to prevail. It is unfortunate that the doubt should ever have been raised, and it is best that we should sweep it away as soon as we can." It may still be prudent in the other courts where the witness to the handwriting gives any description of the party, to prove, as for instance by the defendant's attorney, that the defendant answers to the description.

THE PROPERTY LAWYER.

MORTMAIN ACT.

It is of great consequence, particularly in the preparation of wills, that the solicitor should have accurately before his mind the state of the law under the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36 (the Mortmain Act), and we will therefore call our readers' attention to two or three recent cases upon the subject. That statute enacted that no hereditaments, or personal estate to be laid out in the purchase of hereditaments, should be given, conveyed, or settled to or upon any persons, bodies politic or corporate, or otherwise, for any estate or interest whatsoever, or any ways charged or encumbered in trust or for the benefit of any charitable uses whatsoever, unless in the method there pointed out. It has been frequently remarked, that seldom have the Courts of Law co-operated so strenuously with the Legislature as in the interpretation which they have put upon this Act. Not only have the obvious cases of copyholds, leaseholds, mortgages, judgment-debts, equitable lien for unpaid purchase-money, canal shares, railway shares, &c. been held to fall within it, but also cases of charges on poor-rates, county-rates, turnpike-tolls (merely the tolls), bonds by commissioners for the improvement of the city of Bath, &c. (see 1 Jarm. on Wills, 199), though in some of these cases it is difficult to see how an interest in land was conferred. Sometimes too the language has gone further than the decision, and intimated that whatever might affect land, however remotely, was within the meaning of the Act. That a reasonable restriction is now to be put upon such language will appear from the three cases to which we are about to refer; cases in these share-holding times of no slight importance.

The first case is Attorney-General v. Giles (5 L. J., N. S. 44). East India stock was given by will, and it was contended that the bequest fell within the Mortmain Act, inasmuch as the company held land to a considerable extent, the profits of which went towards the payment of the dividends; and moreover, as the company was a mercantile partnership on an extensive scale, and if the partnership were dissolved, the shareholders would be entitled to the produce of the landed estates. Lord Cottenham (then Master of the Rolls) decided against the argument, observing that the only land which the company held was for the convenience of their trade, from the profits of which they must pay the dividends; that it would be going further than any other case to hold, that those who are entitled to receive the dividends had an estate in the land held by the company, or that, because the party liable to pay had land for the purpose of carrying on his trade, the persons who were to receive dividends out of the profits of that trade had an interest in the land. "Where," said his lordship, "there is an actual charge on land, or personal estate to be invested in land, in such a manner as in the case of a mortgage, where, if default is made in payment of the money, the mortgagee may at once resort to the land, the statute applies; but to apply it to the present case would be carrying it to an absurd length, and much further than it was ever intended to be carried, and would involve property to a very considerable extent, which has never been considered as coming within the operation of the statute."

March v. The Attorney-General (5 Beav. 433), raised a question of immense consequence, viz. whether policies of assurance were within the Mortmain Act when the company had realty. There were three policies in different companies. By the form of the policies, the funds of the companies were expressly charged with the amount insured, and in one of the companies the assured became at once a partner. All the companies held land. The Master of the Rolls (Lord Langdale) held, that the Act did not apply, mainly on the grounds that the grantees had no direct and immediate claim upon the land; that in case of default in payment, they must, in ordinary cases, have recourse to an action at law, and could not touch the land, except upon a judgment in such action; and although, in a special case, a court of equity might interfere and administer the property, this possibility was not sufficient, "within the meaning of the Mortmain Act, to connect a sum of money, payable on a policy of assurance, with the quality of the property held by the grantors;" and Lord Langdale considered that "if the money secured by a policy of insurance is to be deemed to be connected with land, so as to be brought within the Statute of Mortmain, there could be no reason why the same consequence should not attach upon any debt owing by any person who has real restate or chattels real; for though the right of action imports only pure personalty, yet the result of an action may be to obtain payment out of the land or chattels real."

The last case on the subject is Thompson v. Thompson (1 Col. 381, just published). There a testator had given to charitable uses shares in the London Gas Light and Coke Company, an incorporated company holding land, and it was in consequence contended that the Mortmain Act applied, but Vice-Chancellor Bruce decided otherwise. His Honour said:—

"This question relates to shares in a trading corporation, constituted and regulated by a variety of Acts of Parliament, one of which makes the corporation perpetual, and by one or more of which the acquisition of landed property in fee-simple by the corporation is authorized.

"I observe in passing, without saying whether it is important, that this Act does not simply provide that the shares shall be deemed personal estate (which would have been sufficient for the mere purpose of devolution), but it says, 'shall be deemed personal estate, and not of the nature of real estate, and as such personal estate shall be transferable accordingly.' I make the remark in passing, without saying whether I should or should not have decided this case in the same way if those particular words had not been inserted in the Act. At present it is sufficient to say that, in my opinion, the words are not to be disregarded.

"Now, shares thus constituted are the shares in question; they are shares in a joint stock to be contributed by various persons, who are to combine in raising the sum for trading purposes. Being applied to trading purposes, the profits and advantages attending the capital stock that may be derived from trading are to be divided among the contributors. The only connection of this concern with land, beyond the mere circumstance that all trades must be carried on in connection with the earth on which we live, is, that it is to be carried on with the assistance of real property, to be acquired by the corporation. The shareholders are to have no estate in the real property, legal or equitable; but real property is to be held by the corporation as part of the general mass of the corporate property, real and personal, which being held and worked by the corporation, the net profits are to be divided by them among certain individuals, not one of whom has, legally or equitably, any right of possession of the land, or of entry upon any portion of it. Speaking otherwise than technically, this would sound to any unlearned person as little like a landed estate in a shareholder, as foreign, in respect of the shareholders, from any notion of what is called landed property, as any thing that one can well imagine. No man would think, certainly, of calling an extensive holder of gas-light shares a great landed proprietor.

"But it is said, that property of this description, because the profits are acquired by a certain connection with the earth, with the aid of real estate held and managed by the corporate body, who receive the profits, and with them or from them make dividends among the individual shareholders, is, as to the individual shareholders and their interests, a tenement or hereditament, or an estate or interest in a tenement or a hereditament, or a charge or incumbrance upon a tenement or a hereditament, or an estate or interest in that charge or incumbrance.

"Now, it is possible, that, by an exceedingly strict interpretation of the term, property of this description in a shareholder might, in a sense and for a purpose, be brought within a range of a portion of those expressions,—it is possible, but the question is, whether, upon a just interpretation of the Act of Geo. 2, without regarding the title which I do not regard for this purpose,—whether, upon a just and rational collection, from the language of the Act, of its intention, it is a sound construction of this statute to say, that the expressions 'lands, tenements, or hereditaments,' or 'charge or incumbrance affecting lands, tenements, or hereditaments,' or 'estate or interest therein,' as used in it, are words properly applicable to a subject of this description. I am of opinion that they are not; and without saying (nor is it necessary to say, and I hardly understand what the expression means) whether this property is pure personal estate, or not, I am of opinion, without any doubt, that it is property not falling within the range of any of the expressions contained in the statute 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, according to a just interpretation of the language of that Act."

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Mr. Baron Platt.—On Friday, the 21st ult. a sumptuous banquet was given at the Albion, Aldersgate-street, to Mr. Baron Platt, upon his elevation to the bench. The chair was taken by Mr. Serjeant Channell, the leader of the circuit, supported by a very large party, who assembled on this occasion to do honour to the new Judge. After the company had done justice to the entertainment, which was most admirably arranged in every respect by Messrs. Staples, the proprietors of the Albion, and the usual loyal toasts had been duly honoured, the Chairman proposed the health of Mr. Baron Platt, which was received with enthusiasm. The healths of Mr. Serjeant Channell, Mr. Serjeant Shee, and other leading members of the circuit, were then proposed, and the company did not separate until a late hour. An apology was received from the Solicitor-General, expressing his great regret at being unable to attend the meeting.

Important Post-office Notice.—The following notice, issued by command of the Postmaster-General, has just been put up at the General Post-office, the Royal Exchange, and the branch post-offices:—"On and from the 1st of March next an additional rate of 4d. the half-ounce over and above the present postage will be chargeable on all letters, and an additional rate of 2d. on every newspaper, forwarded by the overland mail, whether viâ Southampton, or viâ Marseilles, to and from places to the eastward of Calcutta, and also to and from the Mauritius, the Cape of Good Hope, Bourbon, or Madagascar, when despatched to such places from ports in India, or vice versâ, this sum being levied to defray the charge made by the East India Company for the despatch and receipt of such letters and newspapers. The rate of postage chargeable from the date above mentioned on letters and newspapers transmitted between the United Kingdom and India, and despatched from ports in India to places to the eastward of Calcutta (as well as those forwarded to the Mauritius, the Cape of Good Hope, Bourbon, or Madagascar), and vice versâ, will therefore be as follows:—

CORRESPONDENCE.

DEVON SESSIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I avail myself of your columns to direct the attention of the Magistracy and Profession in Devonshire to the inconveniences that result from the neglect to announce the holding of their sessions in any but the local newspapers, or otherwise to apprise those usually having business there by some direct communication.

Being resident in London, I do not see a local newspaper, consequently I was not informed of the holding of the late sessions at so unusual a period as the month of February. Although having business of importance there, I was entirely ignorant of their occurrence, until apprised by the parties who had received an injury from my apparent neglect.

Surely, Sir, the magistrates of this as well as of many other counties ought to announce their sessions in some journal where they may be seen by the Legal Profession who are interested in them, instead of limiting the notice to the local newspapers.

And whenever a sessions is held at other than the times appointed by the statute, a special notice should at least be sent to the counsel usually practising at such sessions.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

SPECIMEN OF THE WORKING OF LORD BROUGHAM'S ACT AS AN INDEMNITY FOR DEBTORS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Cullompton, Devon, Feb. 27, 1845.

SIR,—A respectable farmer of this neighbourhood sold a butcher several sheep a short time since for the sum of 9*l.* 13s. When the sheep were taken away, a cheque was given for the amount, payable at an Exeter bank. The following Friday, when the farmer attended the Exeter market, the cheque was presented for payment,—the answer was "No effects." Application was then personally made to the butcher, who was in the market, and he promised to settle on the following Wednesday, but failed so to do; he was then called on at his dwelling-house, and again fixed a day, and again no money. I was then requested to write, him a sharp letter. Underneath is the answer to my application, which I consider a very rich specimen,—no regret, no petition for time, no promise to pay. It needs no comment, but strongly speaks for itself. So much for the "Rogues' Indemnity Act."

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

ALBERT GRIBBLE.

SIR,—I would advise you not to proceed against me relative to Mr. —— debt, as I am protected from all law—consequently all expenses will fall on your client. Yours, &c.

If you doubt my word enquire of Mr. ——, Solicitor, Exeter.

Mr. Gribble, Solicitor, Cullompton, Devon.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Rugeley, Feb. 17, 1845.

SIR,—I am very glad to observe that you are printing some blank forms, of the benefit of which I may probably take advantage.

Notwithstanding what may be generally thought to the contrary, it is a certain fact that professional men are more negligent in their own affairs, and what immediately concerns their own interest, than they are in any other matter which comes before them. As evidence of this, let me ask how frequently do we neglect to take written retainers, I verily believe ninety-nine times out of a hundred. I have been in practice near twenty-five years, and till the last six months I did not take as many written retainers, and I have lost hundreds in consequence. Sometimes I felt a delicacy in writing out a formal document for a client to sign; but if I had printed paper, I should feel and say that retainers were now become a matter of course, and I think no client would feel the least offence at being asked to sign a retainer if it was printed.

I beg leave to suggest that you should print some retainers, and I take the liberty of inclosing a form, which a skilful hand will make such as may be generally useful.

I think if you had this form settled by some practical counsel, it would meet with pretty general approbation. I should be glad to have a hundred.

There are other forms relating to professional men personally I should like to see printed—a form of letter inclosing a bill to a client, and referring thereto as required by the statute, with a polite hint that if not paid by a given day, the writer must, in justice to himself, charge interest thereon. And many others I could mention; but I will not trouble you further, or risk the charge of impertinence.

I continue to have great pleasure in the LAW TIMES. Yours, &c.

JOHN SMITH.

[We thank our correspondent for his suggestion, which shall be adopted. Both forms will immediately be submitted to counsel to settle, and then printed as a portion of the series now in progress.—ED. LAW TIMES.]

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

There is a great deal of justice in these remarks of "J. B. B." of Manchester on the ATTENDANCE OF COUNSEL.

I am not aware that any of the writers on this subject have yet touched on what appears to me to be the true source of nearly all the inconvenience alluded to in the above-named discussion. It arises from the habit of many attorneys creating a monopoly of briefs in the hands of a favoured few, who, being deluged with briefs, are unable either to hold or to master the business intrusted to them. I entirely deny this being for the benefit of the client. It is exactly the reverse. Many of the lower class of barristers thus overdone with briefs are notoriously actuated by the meanest motives of jealousy which rankle so largely in the Profession; and you never, I believe, knew an instance of such men giving their supernumerary briefs to any one likely to rise and do credit to the selection as well as the client. Such men are, on the contrary, selected for this purpose who are safe hands, just competent to go through with the work without disgrace, but wholly incompetent to become rivals to those who patronise them. The system pursued by attorneys in thus excluding juniors who do not happen to have much practice is a great evil to both branches of the Profession; men of infinitely greater talent are thus virtually burked, as it were, and rendered eventually incompetent, for want of that practice which stands at the threshold of forensic powers. Much as I esteem the ability and candour with which your journal is conducted, I confess I dissent from you on this point; so far, at least, as to be quite sure that the attorneys have the remedy of the evil they complain of entirely in their own hands. The want of practice in a junior is a drawback very greatly overrated, and, at any rate, very easily and quickly remedied. The majority of the judges on the bench invariably favour, as far as justice permits, any juniors who are undergoing the ordeal of their noviciate.(a) High talent and honourable conduct at the bar always will and ought to command a pre-eminence of success and priority of confidence; but that is no reason for the exclusive system I have ventured to denounce. There are counsel of the lowest class who, having attained the hold which this system gives them over attorneys, have even threatened them openly with refusal to hold their briefs if they (the attorneys) employed any other junior counsel. Men mean enough to submit to such insults deserve all they suffer.

We lay the following letter before our readers, some of whom will probably oblige their Northampton brethren with the results of their experience. They might address our correspondent.

SIR,—At a meeting of several of the professional gentlemen, held in this town, on Monday evening last, for the purpose of taking steps to establish a Law Library, it seemed desirable that the meeting should obtain information, if they could, of the working of any other institution of a similar nature.

I told the meeting that you would be the most likely person to afford us information on this point, and if you could, that I was certain you would willingly do so.

I have, therefore, taken the liberty of writing to you on the subject, and if you could afford me any information as to where any libraries of this nature are established, and whether they are considered to be advantageous or otherwise to the Profession, you would much oblige me.

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

H. P. MARKHAM.

Northampton, Feb. 26, 1845.

Another correspondent writes:—

The following might be added to the suggestions of P. viz.—

That notices of declaration to defendants at a distance should be sent to them by post, instead of, as now, through the medium of an attorney, for him to deliver at defendant's residence. This, at all events, would be extremely desirable where the debts are under 20*l*.

A COUNTRY SOLICITOR prefers a complaint for the too frequent justice of which we can vouch from experience.

I beg through the medium of your paper to call the attention of the Profession to the practice of many London offices who send down writs into the country for service to solicitors, in neglecting to pay their charges.

In a neighbouring town, one respectable firm have, in consequence of this dishonourable practice, come to the determination to refuse to serve any writs for unknown correspondents, and to return the process.

Several offices in this county have thought of publishing the names of those parties who refuse to pay their charges in the LAW TIMES. A hint from you will perhaps disturb the memories of the conscientious.

"Z." transmits the following remarks upon a matter of very great importance:—

It is with great pleasure I have observed your efforts for the improvement of the Legal Profession, by exposing to public scorn those members thereof who have not conducted themselves in a manner becoming a Profession termed liberal.

But I am afraid, Sir, it will be of small avail to prune the branches, unless something be done to the tree itself.

It is obvious to all, that a profession, to be liberal, must have its members gentlemen, and that, if a person, not a gentleman, be introduced into its ranks, such introduction alone will not make him one.

Now, it is a practice with some solicitors to give articles of clerkship to their writing clerks, often men of no education, and of a very low rank in society, in consideration partly of their services and partly of reduced wages.

Need we then be surprised if some persons in the Profession conduct themselves in a way to bring upon it any epithet but liberal?

If a classical examination were necessary before the admittance of an attorney, the above remarks would be out of place; but until such time, attorneys ought, I think, to make it their practice not to receive any as their articled clerks, but such as are able to support themselves during the five years without wages.

The rank in life of the applicants would then be some guarantee of their having received some education, and of their future conduct in the Profession.

I believe the above practice is a source of much evil, and have therefore brought the subject under your consideration.

(a) I have attended the courts a great deal, and have frequently seen lenience and indulgence extended in matters of importance to juniors in this position, which most unquestionably would not have been shown to a senior.

SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1845.

SOLICITORS' BANK.

A PROSPECTUS has been submitted to us of a scheme now in progress for the establishment of a Solicitors' Bank.

The plan is ingenious, and certainly promises to supply a recognized want of the Profession; therefore its success appears to be very probable.

The proposition is based upon the fact that solicitors are continually requiring temporary loans on the deposit of title-deeds and non-negotiable securities. To cite a case of frequent occurrence: a client contemplates a mortgage; commonly he has immediate need for the money; if his own solicitor cannot accommodate him with advances previously to the completion of the mortgage, he will go to some other office, whose wealth thus enables them to monopolize the greater portion of this most profitable branch of practice. Probably the less wealthy solicitor is thus not only deprived of the particular business, but loses his client altogether.

The contemplated Solicitors' Bank is designed to meet this acknowledged inconvenience, and it seems to be well adapted for its purpose.

It proposes the establishment of a Joint Stock Banking Company, with a sufficient capital, whose operations shall be simply those of a bank of deposit and loan, both to be limited in time, but not in any manner a mercantile bank, neither keeping accounts, nor discounting, nor dealing in negotiable securities.

A solicitor having money awaiting a purchase or mortgage, will be enabled to deposit it in the Solicitors' Bank until the completion of the transaction, receiving for it in the meanwhile a higher rate of interest than is allowed by other banks, and dating from the day of deposit to the day of payment, without the tedious forms relating to time and notice required by the existing banks.

A solicitor having a mortgage or sale to complete, will be enabled to deposit the title-deeds, and obtain for his client a loan thereon, until the conveyances can be perfected.

The advantages of this to the Profession are so manifest, and alike to both the parties engaged in transactions relating to real property, that they need but be named to be acknowledged.

But the question that will be asked by those who may contemplate becoming shareholders is, What is to be the source of profit?

The profits will arise from the difference between the interest paid upon deposits and that received for loans.

The amount of profit will of course depend upon the amounts of deposits and loans; and if these should bear any reasonable proportion to the total amount of all conveyancing transactions throughout the kingdom, they must be very great indeed.

A rough estimate may be made thus:—

Suppose 100,000*l.* of paid-up capital. This will be invested in Government securities as a guarantee-fund, which will of course secure to the shareholders the ordinary funds' rate of interest for their money.

To this, the profits of the bank, after paying the cost of conducting it, will be a clear addition of interest.

Suppose the average amount of deposits and loans to be very nearly or quite equal; that an interest of 2 per cent. be paid upon the deposits, and an interest of 4½ per cent. received upon the loans. If the average amount of these were to shew a floating business of 500,000*l.* the profits would be 12,500*l.* per annum, and deducting for expenses, say 3,500*l.* there would remain to be added to the 3 per cent. interest from the capital invested in the funds the sum of 9,000*l.* per annum, equivalent to a further interest of nine per cent., making a total interest of twelve per cent. upon the capital.

But reduce this estimate one-half, to make assurance doubly sure, and then a dividend of six per cent. will remain, a very handsome profit now-a-days, especially where loss is almost impossible.

Such is the plan which has been submitted for our consideration. We have given to it the consideration it undoubtedly deserves, and are bound to report that it meets our entire approval. The parties by whom it has been projected are, we know, of foremost respectability; they are actuated solely by a desire to advance the importance and improve the resources of the Profession. Believing it to be well adapted to remedy an existing evil, to supply an existing want, and to be substantial and bonâ fide in its character and connection, we do not hesitate thus explicitly to lay it before the readers of the LAW TIMES, and to render it such support as in our maturest judgment it appears to deserve.

The Prospectus will appear shortly; but in the meanwhile, as it is desirable to ascertain what is the opinion entertained of it by the Profession, who are willing to take part in it and support it, and to hear suggestions for its improvement, we have so far developed it as to stimulate our readers to give it their attention; we hope that they will communicate to us freely their various views, which we will, if desired, submit to those by whom the plan is in preparation.

THE RECENT PROMOTIONS.

THE LAW TIMES would neglect its duty were it to pass unnoticed a matter that is the topic of conversation in all legal circles, and which has engaged the attention of that portion of the press sufficiently indifferent to the affairs of the Profession.

There is nothing which it behoves the members of that Profession, in all its branches, to watch with so much jealousy as the distribution of the honours which are the rewards of Professional merit. There is not a lawyer in the three kingdoms, however humble and obscure, who is not interested in the due distribution of those honours. The reputation of the Profession forms no small portion of the reputation of every one of its members, and that reputation is not a little dependent upon the manner in which its patronage is distributed, so as to insure that its highest rewards be given to its best men. Therefore it is that all legal promotions are not only proper topics for examination in a legal journal, but it is the bounden duty of such a journal to review them with reference to their bearing upon the interests of the Profession it represents, and fearlessly to avow, on their behalf, its sense of any wrong done or rightful claim unheeded in the awarding of legal honours.

Such an instance has just occurred on the Home Circuit, and has excited a louder complaint and a deeper sense of indignation, not only among the members of that Circuit, but throughout the Profession generally, than has been elicited by any incident since the commencement of the labours of the LAW TIMES.

The facts must be sufficiently known to our readers; but lest any should chance to be ignorant, we will briefly recapitulate them.

Practising on that Circuit are, Mr. Serjeant CHANNELL, Mr. CHAMBERS, and Mr. RUSSELL GURNEY; the latter being the junior in standing, and (we speak of it merely as a fact, without reference to the merits of the several parties) having a considerably less amount of practice on the Circuit than either of those his seniors.

The removal of Mr. Baron PLATT almost necessitated the giving of a silk gown upon that Circuit. According to all acknowledged professional claims, Mr. CHAMBERS, as the senior in standing, and having by far the largest amount of leading business, and beyond doubt the man who would be selected for the vacant leadership by the Profession, was entitled to the honour.

But to the amazement of the Profession, it has been conferred upon Mr. RUSSELL GURNEY, who was thus lifted over the heads of his seniors, without either of the claims that justify such a departure from rule—the enjoyment of a larger practice, business of a more leading character, or seniority.

Of course nobody would complain of any honour conferred upon Mr. RUSSELL GURNEY, who, we believe, is a very estimable man, provided that honour was not conferred upon him at the price of an injustice done to another. So far as Mr. Serjeant CHANNELL is concerned, that injustice was repaired by a patent of precedence. But it is very hard that Mr. GURNEY's promotion should be purchased at the expense of Mr. CHAMBERS. It must be remembered, in forming a judgment upon this matter, that the legal honour in question has this peculiarity, that it confers something more than honour upon the party receiving it—it is profit also—a direct pecuniary advantage is given to him; and that is not simply a gift to him from the Government, but it is a gift to him at the expense of somebody else. Thus the silk gown bestowed upon Mr. GURNEY lifts him over the head of his senior, Mr. CHAMBERS, gives to him precedence, and entitles him to the higher practice and the higher fees which Mr. CHAMBERS had previously enjoyed, and which, whenever they chance to be engaged on the same side, Mr. GURNEY will henceforth take instead of Mr. CHAMBERS, who will thus be virtually degraded from his place as senior to the inferior post of junior, and that by a gentleman who would not certainly claim even for himself any right to such a position save that which has been given him by the interference of power.

So much for the wrong inflicted upon Mr. CHAMBERS. But he is not the only injured party. The Profession—we allude more especially to the attorneys practising on his Circuit—have equal cause for complaint.

They have—whether rightly or wrongly we will not venture an opinion—chosen to prefer Mr. CHAMBERS to Mr. GURNEY, and to select him as one of their leaders. The silk gown bestowed upon the latter is, in truth, a reversal of their judgment; it is as if they were told, "You are wrong, Mr. GURNEY is your man; he shall be your leader; you must take him." True it is that the attorneys cannot be commanded in this matter; if they still prefer Mr. CHAMBERS, they may still make him their leader, by avoiding to retain Mr. GURNEY with him. But the attempt is not the less to be resented; and it is a practical injury that they who might reasonably desire to continue Mr. CHAMBERS as their leader, and Mr. GURNEY as their junior, should be prevented from so doing by an act which has denied honour to one who has every claim to it, that another may be set above him, who, whatever his claims, undoubtedly has not an equal title with him to whom it has been denied.

We trust that in these remarks we shall be understood as throwing not the slightest reflection upon Mr. GURNEY, or in any manner disparaging him. We say not that he has no title to the honour he has received, we contend only for that which we are sure he would be himself the first to admit, that professionally, Mr. CHAMBERS has a far better title, and that the preference shewn to him is not merely a benefit withheld, but a wrong done to Mr. CHAMBERS.

Nor can we quit this painful topic without referring to a rumour which appears only to be too probable. Mr. R. GURNEY is, as our readers know, a son of the learned judge who has recently retired from the Bench. It is said that there is between that event and the one we are reviewing, the relationship of cause and effect. It is whispered, that a seat on the Bench was desired for Mr. PLATT, and that the bargain with the father for his retirement was the silk gown for the son. What truth there may be in this story can never be ascertained: but it has too much an air of probability not to find ready credence. At all events, few will doubt that if Mr. RUSSELL GURNEY had not been Mr. Baron GURNEY's son, he would never have been lifted over the head of Mr. CHAMBERS.

We have termed this affair a painful one, for it disappoints some very bright hopes we had entertained that the days of jobbing in legal patronage had passed away for ever. The appointment of Mr. ERLE had widely spread a confidence, that henceforth professional merit alone was to regulate the distribution of professional honours.

Already that dream of halcyon days is dissipated, and but one hope remains to us—that the proceeding which has occupied our attention in this article is not the act, and has not the sanction, of the head of the Government, or even of the Chancellor, but that it was done during some moment of forgetfulness, from which the greatest can no more escape than the least.

Aliquando bonus dormitat Homerus.

Unluckily, when Chancellors nod, they are apt, not only to point the mace at the wrong man, but to inflict an awkward blow upon the right one.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Dec. 13, 14, and 21.

EDWARDS v. JONES.

Production of documents—Pleading—Denial of plaintiff's title—Case of Fisher v. Adams.

Where a list of documents is set out in the schedule to an answer, and it is expressly and distinctly denied that such documents evidence or relate to the plaintiff's title, such documents will not be ordered to be produced. That is the whole extent of the decision in Adams v. Fisher. But to avoid such production, the answer must contain a full, direct, and positive denial of the plaintiff's title.

This case was reported in the LAW TIMES of the 4th of January, 1845, upon the question of admitting affidavits on an interlocutory motion, to verify facts neither admitted nor denied by the answer; and which, it was decided, could not be admitted. The case then proceeded on the general question, whether the defendants were bound to produce documents referred to in a schedule to the answer, but which they intended to deny to relate to the plaintiff's title. The defendants, by their answer, "admit that the documents, papers, and memorandums set forth in the schedule to their answer do relate to the matters in question in the cause, except the death of Howell Powell;" and afterwards, in a subsequent passage of the answer, they say, "save as aforesaid, the defendants deny that they have any documents relating to the matters in the bill mentioned, or by which the truth of such matters will appear."

Renshaw, for the plaintiff, contended that the passage in the answer did not deny with sufficient distinctness that the document in the schedule to the answer would shew the time of the death of Howell Powell, which was the point whereon the plaintiff's title turned. He cited and referred to Adams v. Fisher (3 Myl. & Craig, 526); Wigram on Discovery, 105, 2nd ed.; Smith v. Duke of Beaufort (1 Phill. 209); Mitford on Pleading, 310; Harris v. Harris (before V. C. Wigram, 16th Nov. 1844, 8 Jurist, 978). The defendant must positively negative that the documents he seeks to withhold do relate to the plaintiff's title, or they must be produced.

Temple and Craig, for the defendants, contended that the denial in the answer was sufficient.

Renshaw, in reply, relied on Smith v. Duke of Beaufort, suprà.

During the argument, the LORD CHANCELLOR said—The point is upon the form of the answer, whether the defendants swear that the documents do not make out the plaintiff's title. If a defendant sets out a list of the deeds in his possession, he may reserve his defence to producing them until a motion is made for their production. If the bill asks that the defendant may set out a list of documents in [illegible] possession, it is sufficient to give a schedule of such deeds; but where the bill states that the deeds relate to the plaintiff's title, the defendant must either deny that they do relate to or evidence the plaintiff's title or that they are confidential communications, &c.; otherwise, on motion, they must be produced. The defendant says—I have certain documents in my possession relating to the matters in the cause except [illegible] particular matter, and afterwards he says—I have no other documents relating to the matters in the cause except those I have before described. Is not that in the substance an averment that he has no documents which relate to the time of the death of Howell Powell? The question is, whether an express denial in terms is necessary.

Renshaw.—In Harris v. Harris, suprà, this sort of answer was deemed a negative pregnant with admission. There must be a positive statement that the documents do not evidence the plaintiff's title.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The title here depends upon one fact, and that is excepted.

His lordship then delivered his opinion against the admission of affidavits to verify facts and documents not admitted or denied by the answer, and reserved the principal point as to production of the documents.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Ellen Jones, one of the defendants, is the administratrix and one of the next of kin of John Owen, an intestate. Howell Powell, her brother, and the other next of kin of the intestate, is stated in the grant of administration, if alive, to be out of the jurisdiction, and that therefore administration was granted to Ellen Jones as the only next [illegible] within the jurisdiction. It is admitted by the answer of the defendants that if Howell Powell was alive at the time of John Owen's death, he was one of the next of kin. The sole question in the cause, therefore, is, whether Howell Powell was alive at that period. The defendants say they do not know whether he was then alive or not, that they are entirely ignorant of the fact of his death, or when he died, that is the state of the pleadings. There are certain documents admitted in the answer [illegible] the defendants' possession, of [illegible] schedule, and a motion [illegible] plaintiffs for their production [illegible] that they relate to their title; and the question is whether these documents ought to be produced. The plaintiffs offered affidavits to prove the handwriting of one of the defendants to a letter which it was alleged had been written by him, in which the time of the death of Howell Powell was admitted to have been long subsequent to that of the intestate John Owen. I was of opinion such affidavits could not be received, because they were in opposition to an allegation of the defendant in his answer that he had never to the best of his recollection, written [illegible] affidavit [illegible] also offered for the purpose of proving the fact of the death of Howell Powell, and that he was alive at the time of the death of John Owen, the intestate. I am of opinion that such evidence cannot be received. I consider that when a party neither admits nor denies the fact charged the rule is that on an interlocutory motion, such affidavits cannot be admitted. Various authorities were referred to, and there appears to be some discrepancy amongst them, but the result of the whole is to establish the rule as I had stated it, and I see no reason for any alteration.

Then, whether upon the bill and answer there is sufficient to induce the Court to order the production of these documents. The defendants say there is not, and they rely upon the case of Adams v. Fisher. In Fisher v. Adams it was said, "All that the plaintiff asks is, that the defendant may set forth a schedule of the documents. Can you except, because he has set out the documents in the schedule instead of in the bill? You did not ask that they should be set out in the bill. If that had been asked, the defendant must have defended himself in the regular way, and shewn that he was not obliged to comply with your demand. But if the defendant sets them out in the schedule to his answer, the question is upon the whole record, whether the plaintiff has such an interest in them as entitles him to call for their production. Here the defendant has denied the plaintiff's interest; he has on the record stated that which, in my opinion, excludes the plaintiff from instituting this suit against him. As long as that stands, I think the plaintiff is not entitled to see the documents." During the argument of that case Lord Cottenham asked Mr. Anderdon, the counsel of the plaintiff, "Is the plaintiff, as a matter of course, to ask for all the documents in the possession of the defendant which relate to any of the matters introduced in the bill? I want to know how far you carry the principle; whether, as a mere matter of course, documents, which, if the defendant's allegation is true, have nothing to do with proving the case made by the bill, are to be produced for the plaintiff's inspection." And afterwards, in the judgment, the learned judge refers to the previous question, saying, "I took leave to ask Mr. Anderdon how far he carried the principle; and he very properly limits it within its due bounds, that is, he admits, as to every document not necessary to make out the plaintiff's equity, that the plaintiff is not entitled to see it." It appears, therefore, that in Adams v. Fisher the defendant denied that the documents at all related to or would prove the plaintiff's title: his interest was denied. In the present case, the defendants do not deny the plaintiffs' title; but they state that they are wholly ignorant whether the fact was as stated by the bill or not. One material question is, whether the answer sufficiently states that the documents, of which production is sought, do not relate to the plaintiffs' title, for if the answer does not sufficiently make that denial, the case does not fall within the principle of Adams v. Fisher.

The question turns upon the fact of whether Howell Powell was or was not alive at the time of the death of the intestate. The answer says "that the documents do relate to the matters mentioned in the bill, except the question of the death of Howell Powell," and then, in a subsequent part of the answer, it goes on to say, "save as aforesaid, the defendants deny that they have any documents, &c. relating to the matters in the bill mentioned, or by which the truth of such matters will appear." The effect of these passages, as I understand them, is, that the defendants say they have no documents except such as have been before described; and the documents before described are admitted to relate to the matters mentioned in the bill, except the question of the death of Howell Powell. I think that is not a sufficient denial in the answer; the documents do not relate to the title of the plaintiffs, because the documents might relate to the title of the plaintiffs, without in strictness and in terms relating to the question of the death of Howell Powell. For instance, they may contain an admission that the defendants are liable to account to the plaintiffs; the answer, therefore, is not a sufficient denial of the plaintiffs' title. The case of Adams v. Fisher, therefore, does not apply, and the defendants are bound to produce the documents. My first impression was, that the answer was sufficient, for it is drawn with great skill and dexterity, and that is all that can be said. The documents must be produced, the costs of the motion will be costs in the cause.

Re WATTS, a Lunatic.

Heir-at-law—Application to attend the execution of the commission.

[illegible] supported a petition by the son and heir-at-law of the lunatic, which prayed that he might be at liberty to attend the execution of the commission, for the purpose of carrying back the date of the lunacy beyond the period at which the alleged lunatic was believed to have executed a will adverse to the interests of the heir-at-law. The petitioner had filed an affidavit stating that Watts had been insane from the year 1821, and that, as petitioner had been informed and believed, he had, in 1822, executed a will to the prejudice of the petitioner as the heir-at-law, which will was then or had lately been in the possession of Mr Baker, an attorney of Andover. In answer to that affidavit it was sworn, on the part of the lunatic's wife, who had the carriage of the commission, that the present petitioner was acting in collusion with the mortgagee, whose previous application to attend the inquiry without being bound by the result, had been refused, as is reported in the LAW TIMES. In reply to that affidavit, the petitioner expressly denies such collusion.

There were several authorities for such an order. The first was Re Frank, in 1805: and it appears, from the order-book in the lunacy office, that there was a deed or settlement executed at a time subsequent to the alleged date of the lunacy, and the heir-at-law was allowed to attend the commission.

The next was Re Whittaker, reported in the Law Journal in 1839; but a more accurate note had been furnished by the secretary of lunatics. There, as in the present case, the wife of the lunatic was the petitioner, and the heir-at-law sought to carry back the finding to an earlier date than the wife did. The order for the heir-at-law's attendance was made.

The case of Re Bushnell, May 1829, in Shelford on Lunacy, was also in point.

Wright, contrà, remarked that the solicitor did not deny collusion, or make any affidavit upon the subject. In Frank's case, though the lunacy was fixed at a date prior to that of the deed, yet the deed was afterwards established. In Re Bushnell the heir-at-law was ordered to produce the lunatic. It was the interest of the petitioner to carry back the lunacy to as early a period as possible, and it could only create much additional expense to authorize the heir-at-law to attend the execution of the commission.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The affidavit as to the execution and existence of a will is only as to information and belief. That is common in this court, but is never allowed in affidavits by the courts of common law. I do not think that there should be an order for the heir-at-law to attend. This does not practically preclude the heir-at-law from attending the execution of the commission, and suggesting any questions to the commissioner. The commissioner will attend to any suggestions the heir-at-law may make, but he must not produce witnesses, or interfere otherwise than through the medium of the commissioner, with the witnesses examined.

IN THE MATTER OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

Sealing a charter of incorporation—Caveat—Petition—Practice—Crown Office.

There is no instance of a caveat against the affixing the great seal to a charter of incorporation; but the Lord Chancellor, in exercising his official discretion as to the contents of the charter, will receive any information or objections respecting it: and such information must be regularly brought before him by petition.

Jas. Russell and Adams moved to remove a caveat which had been entered at the Crown Office against the sealing of a new charter of the Incorporated Law Society, which had been approved of by the Attorney and Solicitor-General, and only awaited the Lord Chancellor's final sanction. The new charter was to be granted upon the surrender of the old one, which surrender had actually been made.

James Parker, for Mr. Ripley, a member of the society, and who objected to the transfer of the property of the society from the old trustees to others appointed by the intended new charter, contended that the entry of a caveat in the Crown Office was the right course to adopt to stay the sealing of a charter. He cited Ex parte O'Reilly (1 Ves. jun. 112), before Lord Thurlow.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The charter comes before me in the regular way, having been approved by the Attorney and Solicitor-General. Before I affix the great seal, I have to consider whether the charter is proper to be granted, and if there is any objection made I am ready to hear it. But there is no instance of any caveat against a charter being sealed to be found in the Crown Office. Any person may give information to me upon the subject, which I will then consider.

Parker.—The objection involves the question, whether a majority of the society may disregard the constitution of the society under the original charter.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I am at present to take it that the old charter has been properly surrendered; and the question is, whether a new charter shall be granted.

Russell.—The Crown officers have approved of the new charter; it has been conducted through all its stages, and only now requires the affixing of the great seal.

Parker.—Two members of the society filed a bill to restrain the society by injunction from surrendering the old charter, and that injunction was granted, but in the eleventh hour the plaintiffs in that suit withdrew their opposition to the surrender of the charter, and the injunction was dissolved. Mr. Ripley is in the same situation as those parties. He has a definite share in the property of the society vested in the trustees under the old charter, and by the new charter the property will be conveyed to new trustees, and his right of property destroyed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This matter must come before me upon a petition presented in the regular way, as in a case where I am a visitor. There may be cross petitions presented, by the society praying that the great seal may be affixed to the new charter, and by the objecting party. There has been a formal charter of incorporation granted to this society, which has been surrendered, a new charter has been approved by the law officers and enrolled, and a caveat has been entered at the Crown Office against affixing the great seal. But a caveat is not the proper course. Some ground of objection has been stated into which I cannot now enter. All the facts must be brought before the Court, and the most convenient course will be by petition. The society can present a petition, which shall be answered immediately. I will hear it immediately after the conclusion of the Ludlow Charity Case; I will take it on Wednesday next, if that case is concluded. Under the new charter the society has some new duties to perform with respect to examinations; the power to perform those duties is now in suspense, and therefore it is desirable that the matter should be heard as soon as possible.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Saturday, Jan. 18.

Re THE GUARDIANS OF THE BROMLEY UNION.

Vendor and purchaser—Purchaser under an Act of Parliament—Costs of conveyance under the Act.

The 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 69, being "An Act to facilitate the Conveyance of Workhouses and other Property of Parishes, and of incorporations or unions of Parishes, in England and Wales," contains a provision with regard to the application of money paid on behalf of persons labouring under disabilities, and there be no person capable of giving a sufficient discharge for the same, that it shall be paid by the guardians and overseers into the Bank of England, in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Exchequer, as therein directed. And, further, "That in case of such purchase and payment into the Bank of England and application to the Court of Exchequer, as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said Court to order the expenses attending such purchase, payment, or application, or any part thereof, to be paid by such guardians or overseers, who shall accordingly pay the same as and when the Court shall direct, and the money so paid shall be a charge on the poor-rates of such parish or such union, as the case may be."

A negotiation had been entered into under the Act for the sale of certain property by a party having only a life interest, to the guardians of the B. union, both sides acting under the supposition that the vendor had the fee-simple in the property, and certain expenses had been incurred in such negotiations, from May 1843 to March 1844, when a regular conveyance was made by the tenant for life and a trustee, who joined in conveying the fee-simple. But in the meantime the tenant for life had, in ignorance of the effects of the Act of Parliament, consented to take those costs only that are usually paid between vendor and purchaser. Held, that notwithstanding the faulty proceedings up to the time of the conveyance, and the vendor's stipulation as to costs waiving the provisions of the statute, he was nevertheless entitled to its benefit, and that, therefore, the vendors were entitled to the costs relating to the contract—making out and evidencing the title—the perusal and execution of the conveyance, and those incident to the present application.

This was a petition under the above Act, of George Robert Morgan (the surviving trustee of the marriage settlement of a Mr. John Skeggs) and of the said John Skeggs. John Skeggs, who, under the above settlement, was a tenant for life only, contracted with the guardians of the poor of the Bromley union, in Kent, to sell them part of the settled property situate in the parish of Farnborough, for the purpose of the union, for the sum of 300*l.* The title to the property having been approved of by the guardians, a conveyance thereof was, in April 1844, made to them by Morgan and Skeggs, by virtue of the above Act of Parliament, with the approbation of the Poor-law Commissioners. But in consequence of the marriage settlement above mentioned not containing any trust or power of sale, the petitioners were not able to give a sufficient receipt for the purchase-money, and that, therefore, the guardians, in pursuance of the Act, in the month of June 1844, paid the sum of 300*l.* into the Bank of England, in the name of the Accountant-General, to the credit of the mother of the petitioner, G. R. Morgan, as such surviving trustee as before mentioned. The petition stated, among other things, that they were desirous that the said sum of 300*l.* should be laid out and invested in the purchase of Three per Cent. Consols, until a favourable opportunity occurred for investing the same in the purchase of land, under the provisions contained in the said Act. The petition therefore prayed the said sum of 300*l.* might be so laid out and invested as aforesaid; to tax the petitioner's costs of and relating to the contract for sale, and making out and evidencing the title of the petitioners to the said piece or parcel of land and hereditaments, and the perusal and execution of the said conveyance executed by them to the guardians, and also of and incidental to the present application, and that such costs, when taxed, might be paid by the said guardians.

It seems that various communications were had between Mr. Skeggs alone and the guardians, between the month of May 1843 and March 1844, and in consequence of such communications he delivered certain abstracts of title to the solicitors of the guardians. A verbal stipulation was also entered into by Mr. Skeggs, relating to the costs of the purchase, the effect of which was that the usual costs, as observed between vendor and purchaser, should only be paid, and not such as might, under the Act, be demanded by the vendor. During all this negotiation, Morgan, the trustee, knew nothing of what was passing between the other parties, whilst the guardians for some time laboured under a mistaken notion, that in treating with Skeggs they were dealing with a person who had in himself a good title to the property in question, as to an estate in fee-simple. The estate was, however, conveyed by Morgan and Skeggs to the guardians as before stated, in the month of April following.

The question now raised was whether the guardians, having been led into an error by the conduct of Skeggs, the tenant for life, with reference to his limited interest, and having regard also to his dealings with them as to the costs of the conveyance, were bound to pay the expenses as required by the Act, or only such costs as were usually enforced as between vendor and purchaser.

The case of Ex parte Earl of Albemarle, re Guiltcross Prison, heard in the Equity Chamber before Lord Abinger (7 Law Journ. N. S. 1, 63), was relied on by the petitioners as a case in point.

Stuart and Bilton, for the petitioners.

Bethel and Platt, for the respondents, submitted that the tenant for life having been held out as the only person who could give a perfect title to the fee-simple, and as such for a considerable time had dealt with the guardians, in the course of which divers expenses were incurred, ought not to claim the costs of such faulty proceedings, the more especially as a stipulation had been made between the parties, the result of which was that the costs allowed by the Act of Parliament should be waived, and only those incident to and ordinarily paid as between vendor and purchaser, should be demanded by the present vendor. Moreover, there would be no hardship upon him in not being paid the full costs which he claimed under the Act, seeing that he was not compelled to enter into the contract, as he would have been in case the property in question had been required for a railroad.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I do not think that any erroneous ideas which a party may entertain respecting his rights will destroy those rights. I can easily conceive of a person releasing or giving up his interest in an estate; but will his mere ignorance therein affect such interest? The decision of the Court of Exchequer, urged in favour of the petitioner, appears to be in point. But as it regards the waiving any part of the Act of Parliament, it is iniquitous to take advantage of the ignorance of a party when the transaction is to be completed in accordance with the provisions of that Act, and the costs and expenses are to be paid in pursuance of the same; therefore, whatever former costs were incurred, they must be borne by the guardians.

Costs according to the prayer of the petition.

ROLLS COURT.

Tuesday, Feb. 18.

Wednesday, Feb. 12.

ROBERTSON v. MORRICE.

Stock was bought in the name of one person as trustee for others, in certain proportions, and intimation thereof was duly given by him to the others. He afterwards sells out a large part of it, but subsequently replaces some of it through the agency of his confidential clerk, and the entries of the newly purchased stock are made in the same account and in the same manner as at the first. Held, that this was sufficient to prevent the stock from being general assets on his death.

Mr. Morrice was consignee of certain persons, and was by them directed to invest certain moneys in stock in his own name, in trust for them, in certain proportions. He bought the stock accordingly, and duly notified the same to his employers. He had also some stock standing in his own name. This last he sold out, and afterwards sold also a part of that belonging to the others. Being on his death-bed, he became very anxious to make good the amount, and desired his clerk to buy in to the full amount. He accordingly bought in a considerable sum, but not the whole, and it was entered to the same account and exactly in the same manner as the original purchase. On his death intestate, his administratrix was advised she could not safely pay the sum so standing in the deceased's name otherwise than in a general course of administration, and accordingly this suit was instituted to have a declaration that the stock in question was not general assets.

Bacon, for the plaintiffs.

Burge and Bagshawe, for the administratrix.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The representative of the intestate has done no more than her duty. The case can be decided on obvious principles. Morrice having money of others in his hands, laid it out in stock, with money of his own, and carried all to an account in his own name, and so the moneys of all the parties were mixed up. The evidence and memorandum shew clearly who were the owners of the stock, and it is admitted that the stock did belong to certain persons in certain proportions. Mr. Morrice has himself stated that the persons were himself and others named. There is a sufficient declaration of trust of the stock sold out. When he sold out his own, he did nothing wrong; but when he went farther and sold out that of the others he was not acting in the discharge of his duty. Well, then, what was his duty in the next place? Why, to replace it. He took steps to do so, and did do so to a considerable extent. He purchased stock and carried it to the very same account as before; it ought to be presumed, therefore, he meant to do it in performance of his duty. It is clear from the clerk's evidence that he was anxious to do more than he did. The question is, whether this stock so purchased in discharge of his duty, but not entirely replacing the original amount, is to be considered general assets, because it is standing in his name. I should have had some doubt if it had not been so standing from the first moment of the trust. As it is, I think it is a trust for the plaintiffs, and is not general assets.

BEAUCLERK v. ASHBURNHAM.

By a power of sale to trustees of a marriage settlement, "to sell out the trust funds and invest the produce thereof, and they were thereby authorized and required, at the request of husband and wife, and of the survivor, so to do, in freehold or copyhold or leasehold hereditaments, or terms for years, having at least 60 years to run, and of sufficient value, and situate in a convenient place," they are bound to sell and invest in town leasehold houses, and the only discretion they have is to see that they are of the value and description intended.

The whole question in this case turned on the construction of a power of sale in the marriage settlement of Mr. Beauclerk, the plaintiff, with Lady Catharine Ashburnham, which took place in May 1838. Certain property, partly belonging to Lady Catharine and partly to Mr. Beauclerk's father, was settled on trusts for the ultimate benefit of Mr. Beauclerk the younger, his wife and children, Mr. Beauclerk the elder having a life interest in part. There were several discretionary powers vested in the trustees (Mr. Ashburnham and three others), but the one which gave rise to the present application was a proviso, "that it should be lawful for the trustees, &c. and they and he were thereby authorized and required, after the marriage, by and with the consent of Mr. Beauclerk the father, as to part, and by and with the consent of the intended husband, and wife, as to all, during their joint lives, and that of the survivor, to sell, &c. the trust funds, &c. and lay out and invest the produce thereof in the purchase of freehold, copyhold, or leasehold hereditaments, or terms for years, having not less than 60 years to run, and of full value, and situate in a convenient place." Mr. Beauclerk the father died, and so also did Lady Catharine, in April 1839, leaving one daughter. Mr. Beauclerk the son, having incumbered his life interest, gave notice to the trustees, that he wished to invest upwards of 7,000*l.* in leasehold houses, in Chatham-place and Lyall-street, near Belgrave-square, which were held for a term of above 60 years to run. Two of the trustees were willing, and the other two, Mr. Ashburnham, the uncle of the infant, and Mr. Viner, were unwilling to exercise the power. It was suggested to them that they might retire from the trusts, or that Mr. Beauclerk would himself take the conveyance and afterwards convey to the trustees, with a bond of indemnity, so as to relieve them from liability on the covenants, &c.; but this proposal was not acceded to.

Kindersley (with him Bayley), for the plaintiff.—The opinion of counsel was taken by the trustees, and they were told it was a "wild and wasteful" exercise of the power to which they were called upon to submit; and Stickney v. Sewell (1 Myl. & Cr. 8) was relied upon. But this case does not at all apply. The question is, not whether the trustees are justified, but whether they must not exercise the power. It is said the property will be deteriorated during the life of Mr. B. who is only 32; but that interest was given by the grandfather, father, and mother of the infant, who were competent to give it to the extent to which it is given, or any other extent.

Sidebottom, for Mr. Ashburnham.—There are two objections to this exercise of the power. First, it is a bad investment for the infant; and, secondly, the trustees ought not to be subject to liabilities which they did not undertake at the settlement. We do not deny this is a power not purely discretionary, though it is admitted that some degree of discretion is to be used. The trustees have not refused absolutely; they only submit to the Court in their answer, as the property on which the investment is to be made is hereditaments, whether they mean houses. In other places "messuages" is the term used. It is discretionary also as to locality,—"and a convenient place." The personal objection does not weigh so much with Mr. Ashburnham as that in reference to his niece. He finds Mr. Beauclerk will have an increase in his life interest, to the loss of the infant, and that the incumbrancers concur of course. The liabilities for ground-rent, &c. and the covenants as to insurance, repairs, &c. are such as he should not be called on to undertake. Besides, he would be obliged to give a constant watchful attendance to the tenants. Then, as to the indemnity proposed, no man is bound to accept it. It is a bond and assignment first to Mr. B. and then to the trustees; and the only purpose it can serve is to let in Mr. B.'s debts in transitu.

Bacon, for Viner, another trustee.

Hyam, for the consenting trustees.

Roupell (with him Law), for the infant.—The power, if imperative, must be to the extent of the trustees shutting their eyes to the title, &c. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The other side say the trustees may look into any thing pointed out in the power, as value, &c. It might be the subject of reference.] There is no evidence of its value, it being in a fashionable part of the town, and, therefore, of a value fluctuating with caprice.

They cited Stuart v. Stuart (10 Law J. 148).

Turner and Whitbread, for the incumbrancers.

Kindersley, in reply.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—These trustees have to lay out all in leaseholds, and the question arises whether the leaseholds proposed are in all respects proper to be fixed upon by them in the performance of their duty, whether they are of the proper value, &c. all of which, though the exercise of this power is imperative, they are bound to consider. Now, here is a young man with his property incumbered wishing to increase his income. The trustees have a right to hesitate as to the exercise of the power; I do not blame them. The refusal, however, cannot be rested on the question of the leaseholds merely, as the term "leasehold hereditaments" includes town houses. Neither can the liabilities to be incurred form an objection, for they were contracted for by the settlement; but they should be as small as possible. There may be a reference to the Master, if the trustees wish to consider the situation, &c. of the property. But if the trustees are satisfied, I am satisfied, not otherwise. It may stand over for consideration in that respect.

Saturday, Feb. 15.

FULTON v. GILMORE.

An executor directed to invest in real or sufficient securities is liable for loss sustained by leaving the assets in a firm even of which his co-executor is a partner.

Dividends received in respect of part of the estate of a testator being in the hands of the agent of one executor, and part of the estate being in a firm of which his co-executor is partner, but which is or is expected to be insolvent, the agent cannot demand a general release as a condition of payment of a share of such estate to a legatee.

This case (of which the principal facts may be found in 4 Law T. pp. 231 and 329) now came on for hearing. It is sufficient to mention, in addition to what is stated in the pages referred to, that the father of the defendant Gilmore was partner in the firm of Gilmore and Co. and at his decease the defendant, as his executor, drew out his own share of the funds, and took securities for the portions thereof belonging to other branches of his family, but took no security for a sum belonging to Mr. Fulton, also in the hands of the firm. William Stewart Smith, the co-executor of Mr. Gilmore under Mr. Fulton's will, was a partner in the house of Gilmore and Co. After the bankruptcy of Ferguson and Co. Gilmore, the defendant, proved for the debt due to his testator's estate, and paid the dividends to Messrs. Colville, Gilmore, and Co. whom he constituted his agents for payment thereof. In 1840 the plaintiff came of age, as did her brother Robert in 1841. He applied to Colville, Gilmore, and Co. and they paid him the moiety of the sums for which they were constituted agents. The other three legatees having been paid off before the bankruptcy of Ferguson and Co. On the 2nd of August, 1842, the plaintiff's solicitor applied to Colville and Co. and in reply, they stated they had paid Robert, and were willing to pay Miss Fulton her share upon receiving a general release of all claims, and also offered to produce accounts. In 1842, and at the time of the demand of the release, Gilmore and Co. were insolvent. The bill was originally filed for the recovery of the dividends paid on the debt from Ferguson and Co. and the whole of the sum standing in the hands of Gilmore and Co.; and it treated the defendant as a person coming under the protection of the Act as to insolvents. But in his answer, he repudiated the protection thus extended to him, and stated he was insolvent in 1833, and was discharged under the Act then in force, that is, the 9 Geo. 4, c. 73. The plaintiff then amended her bill, and charged him with the whole of the debt due from Ferguson and Co., and the defendant, in answer, still treated himself as discharged under the Act in force in 1833. The cause was then set down for hearing before the long vacation, and the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover the whole amount from the defendant, if the cause had been heard. However it was not so, and a supplemental answer was put in, correcting the defendant's mistake, and substituting the year 1836 for 1835. The cause now came on for hearing.

Turner (with him Toller).—So far as relates to the dividend from Ferguson and Co. we are satisfied to take it as originally intended. It would involve much fruitless expense to take an inquiry; we therefore do not insist. But as to costs, we are clearly entitled, as the whole was caused by the defendant's mistake. As to the fund in the hands of Gilmore and Co. and the delay in recovering it, we must deal with that as a breach of trust. The defendant's insolvency did not relieve him from that liability, for it is a continuing breach up to 1842. He did not obey the directions of his testators' will, nor did he act by that fund as he did by that of his father. They cited Buckeridge v. Glasse (1 Cr. & Ph. 125).

Kindersley (with him Tennant), contra.—As to the first point it is fair to give it up, and the justice of the case obviously requires that there shall be no costs on either side. As to the delay, it is to be observed, Miss Fulton was not the youngest of the five, and her brother Robert, who came of age a year after her, applied and got his share paid. Colville, Gilmore, and Co. made no reference to Gilmore and Co. All they said was, give us a release and we will pay you your moiety. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—They asked a general release. What was the time of the insolvency of Gilmore and Co.? That may be important, if Colville and Co. knew it at the time of the refusal to pay without a release.] It must be admitted the insolvency was then known; but the question is, did the correspondence refer to Gilmore and Co. at all? As to the liability, the co-executor had that part of the funds under his care, and Gilmore the other, and each had a right to act as best he could. The bill is not to administer the estate, only to charge the defendant with a particular sum of money in transactions in which loss has arisen. The security was a good one, and the co-executor then solvent. The costs of course follow the liability.

Turner, in reply.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—These cases all depend upon their peculiar circumstances. The testator, in this case, directed all his estate to be invested in real or sufficient securities in India or Britain, and to be divided into five shares, of which the plaintiff was to have one. She came of age in 1840. The property was partly in the hands of Ferguson and Co. of which Gilmore was a partner, and partly in Gilmore and Co., in which Smith, the co-executor, was a partner. After the insolvency of Ferguson and Co. the defendant proved as executor, and received the dividends upon his debt and placed them with Colville, Gilmore, and Co. In 1840, application was made on behalf of plaintiff for an account and payment of what was due, and the account was not objected to, but they required a general release on payment of the balance. Now, that might have been the dividends only, and the intention might have been to ask a release for that only; but a general release would include the claim on Gilmore and Co. then insolvent. As far as I can see, the offer to pay was made conditional upon the giving of the general release, to which the plaintiff was not bound to submit, and she was therefore justified in filing her bill, which, accordingly, she did file soon after, but only for the dividends. [His Lordship here stated the facts up to the present hearing.] The plaintiff is therefore now entitled to no more than she was on refusal to pay without a general release. She is only exonerated from the costs, for all the accuracy as to facts was on her side. The plaintiff did not secure the money left in the hands of Gilmore and Co. and left India several years ago, thinking that Smith, his co-executor, was responsible, and himself relieved from all further trouble. Such is not the case; he is a trustee as well as an executor, and ought to have taken care to make every thing right. He did so with his own, but left Smith to do so with the plaintiff's. Smith is now dead, insolvent, and the defendant therefore is the only one to apply to. He must make good the sum in the hands of Gilmore and Co. and pay the costs of the hearing; but he will be entitled to the dividends to be paid on Gilmore and Co.'s estate.

ROLFE v. WRIGHT.

A sum of money being given under a will to such of a class of persons as should be surviving at the death of a person having a life interest therein, one of the class went to sea, and was not heard of for many years before the death of the life tenant (which was in 1825) nor since. His share of the fund, which was very small, was ordered to be paid to the survivors of the class, on the presumption, from the evidence, of his death before the life tenant.

William Manning had a life-interest in 750*l.* Consols, under the will of Elizabeth Manning, bearing date September 182[illegible], and after his death the fund was to be distributed among such of a class as should then be living. The class consisted of six persons, one of whom, Philip Rolfe, left Harwich and went to sea on the 5th December, 1809, in the Royal Navy, being then 32 years of age, and was last seen in the company of a sailor about 32 years ago. Since that time he has not been heard of, though his father advertised, with a view to find him. This suit was accordingly instituted for the payment of his share, being about 179*l.*; the shares of the other five out of the six entitled having been paid to them on the death of William Manning, in 1825. The Court was now asked that it might be considered that Philip Rolfe died in the lifetime of William Manning, and the money should accordingly be paid to the other five.

Kindersley, Sheffield, and Gunning, for the several parties.

The MASTER of the ROLLS was not quite satisfied that he had before him the best evidence which might be obtained as to the time of the death of Philip Rolfe. But the sum being small, and the lapse of time great since he was last heard of, he was disposed to make the order upon a petition, supported by affidavit, stating the further evidence which might, he thought, be obtained. This, he was of opinion, ought to be procured by inquiries at the Admiralty and from other persons who knew him.

The cause to stand over for that purpose till the first day of causes in Easter Term.

RADBURN v. JERVIS.

Though annuities are expressly charged on the real estate in aid of the personalty, they will not be ordered to be raised out of it, by the purchase of the annuities with a sum borrowed thereon, but they must be paid by the life tenant of the estates.

Sir Thomas Clarges gave an annuity of 300*l.* to Harriet Catherine Cock, secured by a bond for 5,000*l.* conditioned to be void on due payment of the annuity. He gave other annuities also to her mother and brother. Sir Thomas died on the 17th of February, 1834, seised of certain estates, which he devised to trustees in trust as to part, to sell for payment of debts, legacies, annuities, &c. and as to the residue, in trust for General Hare, for life, and his children, in tail, but subject to his debts, &c. if the provision already made should not be sufficient, with remainder to his right heirs. Then, after giving the trustees a power of sale, &c. he expressly confirmed the annuities and bonds already given, and bequeathed to H. C. Cock an additional annuity of 200*l.* to be paid in the same way, and charged in the same way as before mentioned. The cause coming on upon further directions, the point now for consideration was, whether the life tenant should pay the annuity, or a sum should be raised out of the estate to purchase a government annuity of the amount, and the interest of the charge should only be paid by the life tenant, General Hare, who has no children.

Willcock, for General Hare, insisted that it was not a simple gift of an annuity, and a charge with it, but the annuity is given first, and then it is afterwards charged conditionally. Under the bond it is a debt; under the will it is a legacy. The only case bearing on this point is Bulwer v. Astley (1 Phil. 422). The life tenant should only be obliged to keep down the interest of the purchase-money of an annuity of that amount; not pay the annuity itself.

Kindersley and Bacon, for the defendant Jervis, the heir-at-law of Sir T. Clarges.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Your object is to convert a temporary into a permanent charge. The life tenant must pay the annuity.

HARGRAVE v. HARGRAVE.

Motion by the defendant to take an issue pro confesso against the plaintiff (who withdrew the record, and did not proceed with his action at the proper time) refused under the circumstances; but the plaintiff was put upon terms favourable to the defendant, and was obliged to pay the costs of the motion.

In this cause an issue had been sent out to be tried as to whether the infant plaintiff was the son of John Hargrave or not. The defendant was prepared for trial, which might have come on on the 7th February instant. On the 30th of January the solicitor of the plaintiff wrote to the solicitor of the defendant, asking him to make the issue a remanet, which he refused to do, and declared his intention of moving to take the issue pro confesso against the plaintiff. The defendant's solicitor wrote again, assigning as his reason for wishing to make the issue a remanet, the absence of material evidence, and the defendant again refused.

The plaintiff withdrew the records.

Kindersley, for the defendant, moved to take the issue pro confesso, and cited Casborne v. Barsham (5 Myl. & Cr. 113); Bearblock v. Tyler (1 Jac. & Walk. 125); 2 Fowl. Exch. Prac. 196.

Turner (with him Kyle), contrà.—In Casborne v. Barsham no cause was shewn, but only that the party making default did not like the particular judge who was to try the issue; here the ground is the absence of a material witness. The defendant has a bill to perpetuate testimony in the Vice-Chancellor of England's court; so there is no danger of his sustaining any injury.

Kindersley, in reply.—The reason assigned in the second letter was the absence of material evidence, and does not in the least apply to the parts of the case as they now appear, viz. the illness of two of their witnesses since the 30th of January; that they had not, nor could they have, in their minds. Their whole object is delay. They know our witnesses can prove that the plaintiff is not the son of the person it is pretended he is; and they wish to delay on the chance of their dying off, and in the hope that one of them who is going abroad, may not be available to us. He is expected to go in April. They have taken on themselves, moreover, to withdraw the record, without coming here and asking leave; but that they had no right to do. Now Providence has given them a reason in the illness of their witnesses.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The question is, whether I shall order this issue to be taken pro confesso, or not. It might have been tried on the 10th of February in regular course. It appears that two material witnesses were ill, and could not have attended on that day; and, therefore, either the court of common law must have postponed the trial, or the issue could not have been satisfactorily tried. The evidence is, that the witnesses were material, and could not attend. If an issue is to be tried at a definite time, and if, by the default of one party, unexcused, the issue be not so tried, it is to be taken pro confesso against that party. I say unexcused, for, on proper grounds shewn, indulgence will be extended to the defaulting party. In this case the trial might have come on on the 7th February, and a notice was sent on the 30th January, asking the other party's consent to its being a remanet, without any reason assigned. Then, in a second letter, the absence of witnesses was assigned; but no particulars of that were given. There may have been reasons, but the only thing that was said was, If you do not consent to make it a remanet, I will withdraw the record. The gentleman who penned that letter forgot that this was an issue sent out by the Court of Chancery, and that it was not for him, therefore, to take upon himself to do any such thing. He, however, did withdraw it, and this issue cannot be tried now till after Easter Term. In the mean time, a principal witness for the defendant may be taken away. The delay is much to be regretted; but I cannot make up my mind to allow this motion, more particularly as the witness may yet be able to attend. I must, however, impose conditions which will redress the injury to the other party. The costs of this motion must be paid by the party making the application here necessary. The defendant must have his costs and such terms as may secure him from injury. Mr. Turner's client must submit to every examination to elicit the truth. The next friend of the infant must pay the expenses of this application.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Saturday, March 1.

WILKINSON v. LLOYD.

LEMAN v. LLOYD.

The vendor of shares in a public company, to complete the transfer of which an entry in the books of the company, with the consent of the directors, is necessary, is bound to obtain this entry, and to do all that is necessary to invest the plaintiff with the property of the shares; and therefore, on the vendor's default, the vendee may bring an action for money had and received to recover the purchase-money, as upon a total failure of consideration, before returning the deed of transfer.

A verdict had been obtained for the plaintiff in this case, which was an action for money had and received under the circumstances stated in the judgment. A rule nisi had been granted in Trinity Term 1844, to set aside the verdict, which was argued (see 3 Law T. 138) by Knowles, Q. C. and Addison, in support of the rule, and Martin, Q. C. Cowling, and Ruffles, contrà.

JUDGMENT.

PATTESON, J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This case was argued before my brothers Coleridge and Wightman last Trinity Term, and stood over on account of the doubt they entertained on one of the points taken by the defendant. The plaintiff had purchased from the defendant certain shares in a public company, and had paid the purchase-money to the defendant; the defendant on his part had executed the transfer, and nothing remained to be done but to obtain the consent of the directors, and that an entry of the transfer should be made in the books of the company; and when that consent was obtained, and the entry of the transfer duly made, according to the provisions of the deed of settlement, the transaction between the plaintiff and the defendant would have been completed. In consequence of some dispute between the defendant and the directors, no consent could be obtained from the latter, and consequently the transfer never was completed, and the plaintiff never was put into possession of the shares, and never became the legal owner of them. The plaintiff, without returning the transfer executed by the defendant, but which had been procured by the plaintiff, brought an action for money had and received, to recover the amount paid by him, as upon an entire failure of the consideration; and, upon the trial, obtained a verdict, with leave for the defendant to enter a nonsuit if the Court should think that, under the circumstances, the plaintiff was not entitled to rescind the contract or treat the consideration as having wholly failed. For the defendant it was insisted he had done all he was bound to do, and ought not to be prejudiced by the acts of the directors; that the plaintiff could not rescind the contract, as the shares had fallen in the market, and the parties were not placed in statu quo; and that the plaintiff ought, at all events, to have returned the transfer executed by the defendant before he could be entitled to treat the contract as rescinded. We are, however, of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain his verdict, and with respect to the first point, we think the defendant was bound to procure the assent of the directors, and to do all that was necessary to invest the plaintiff with the property in the shares. The cases decided with respect to the obligation of a vendor of a lease to obtain the landlord's consent to the assignment, where the lessor requires it, apply to this: a purchaser has a right to require the seller to give him the possession, or the means of obtaining possession, of the things purchased, or the consideration fails. The second point, that the contract could not be rescinded because the shares had fallen, cannot apply where the complaint of the plaintiff is, that he never has had the shares he purchased at all; though it might have been urged in case the plaintiff had actually received the shares, but proposed to rescind the contract on some other ground; the plaintiff had received no part of the consideration, and it is on that ground he seeks to recover back his money. Upon the last objection we entertain considerable doubt; and inconvenience and difficulty might be occasioned to the defendant if the transfer executed by him were not returned and cancelled; but we think the returning and cancelling the transfer is not a sufficient condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to require possession of the things sold. The instruments of transfer are collateral to the contract and the subject-matter of the sale; and though the defendant may be entitled to require redelivery of them to him, we think the non-completion of the transfers such a failure of consideration as entitles the plaintiff to recover in this action, although the instruments executed by the defendant have not been returned. The case of Scurfield v. Gowland (6 East, 241) is in accordance with this view of the question. The rules, therefore, in this case, and in the other case, that of Leman v. Lloyd, which seems to bear on the same point, must be discharged.

DOE dem. MUSTON v. GLADWIN.

However harsh an ejectment may be, no Court will refuse to give effect to a proviso for re-entry in case of a breach of covenant. A parol license from the landlord will not justify a breach of covenant, therefore an ejectment is maintainable by the assignee of the reversion against the lessee for not insuring in the names of the landlord and the tenant, as covenanted in the lease, notwithstanding that he has insured in his own name, and the original landlord had expressed himself quite satisfied with the insurance.

Ejectment.—Bovill had obtained a rule nisi, calling upon the lessors of the plaintiff to shew cause why a verdict should not be entered for the defendant, on the ground that the breach of the covenant had been waived, against which

Peacock (Feb. 8) shewed cause, and

Bovill was heard in support of the rule.

The facts are fully stated in the judgment. The following cases were cited in the argument: Doe dem. Flower v. Peck (1 B. & Ad. 429); Doe dem. Ambler v. Woodbridge (9 B. & C. 376); West v. Blakeway (3 Sc. N. R. 199, 9 D. P. C. 846); Doe v. Rowe (R. & M. 343, 2 Car. & P. 246); Doe dem. Pitman v. Sutton (9 Car. & P. 706); Doe dem. Shephard v. Allen (3 Taunt. 78); Blake's case (6 Rep.); Com. Dig. Accord, A. 1 and 2; Duppa v. Mayo (1 Saund.); Pickard v. Sears (6 A. & E. 469); Doe v. Meux (4 B. & C. 606). Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

PATTESON, J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was an ejectment on a forfeiture on a breach of covenant to insure in the joint names of landlord and tenant. The right of recovery was clear, unless the lessor of the plaintiff had, by his conduct, barred himself from proceeding. The reversion in the property in question changed owners in 1837; it was conveyed to a person of the name of Oliver on the 14th of January, 1843, and was conveyed by him to the plaintiff. A policy was effected by the defendant on the 28th of January, 1836, in the sole name of the defendant (it was not according to the covenant, which would have been in the name of the landlord and tenant), which policy was kept alive by the payment of an annual premium. At Christmas 1842 the regular premium was paid for the ensuing year. There was no insurance in the joint names at all. The demise was laid in May 1843. The defendant's son-in-law proved at the trial that on the very day that Oliver parted with this property to the lessor the owner paid Oliver the rent up to Christmas; he also proved that the policy effected had been previously shewn to Oliver, who expressed himself perfectly satisfied with it. Therefore there was a waiver by payment up to Christmas 1842 on the part of Oliver. Under these circumstances, this ejectment must be considered unusually harsh, and it is impossible for any Court to lend itself willingly to enforce that proceeding. The expression that the law abhors a forfeiture was never more appropriate. But we must not forget that the rights of parties are all we have power to deal with; even the Court of Chancery has refused to enjoin in proceedings of law on a breach of covenant to insure. It was so held in Green v. Bridges (4 Sim. 96); and on occasions like the present, Lord Tenterden was in the habit of saying, "We are bound to give all instruments their natural construction, and attach to them their legal consequences, whatever our inclinations may be." This course may operate seriously in particular cases, but its general effect seems no doubt to consist in teaching all that they must fulfil their engagements, and by giving certainty to their mutual relations. Since this lease contains a proviso for re-entry, in case of a breach of this covenant, as well as that of others which might be thought more important, we have only to inquire whether it has been broken, so that the landlord might maintain an action of covenant for the breach. That it has been broken is unquestionable; but the present landlord is said to have been bound by the act of the former, who caused it to be understood that he would not require the performance of the covenant, but that he would be satisfied with the substitution of a different mode of insuring. The case was likened to that of Pickard v. Sears (6 A. & E. 469), (a) and some others, where it was held, that a party may, by his conduct, so mislead another, and so affect his interest, as to deprive himself of the right to complain of what was afterwards done, under the impression of what he himself produced; and the recent case of Doe dem. Pitman v. Sutton was particularly brought forward. It seems, however, sufficient to observe, that no case has gone the length of intimating that a breach of covenant may be justified by a parol license to break it. This would be to go to confound every well-established legal principle. The last case (Doe dem. Pitman v. Sutton, 9 Car. & P. 704), which was cited as applicable to the present, is very plainly distinguishable when examined. There the covenant to insure on the tenant's part was qualified by the option given to the landlord to insure if the tenant made default, and to add the amount of premium to his rent; and the evidence shewed the landlord had represented to the tenant that he had availed himself of this power by insuring. This representation would naturally induce the belief that the insurance was actually effected according to the terms of the lease, in the manner in which the landlord proposed. Against an action of covenant the tenant might have defended himself, by shewing that the landlord prevented him from insuring by representing that he had himself insured; and, in fact, that peculiar covenant was not broken, if the landlord's statement was true. The case of Doe v. Rowe (R. & M. 343) was also much pressed on us in argument; but there the landlord had misled the tenant, by delivering to him a deficient abstract of the lease; but in the present case there is nothing but the mere verbal evidence that a landlord had said he would be satisfied though the covenant should be broken, which it indisputably was, during the whole time the premises remained uninsured according to the covenant. But the waiver, by the acceptance of rent, could not operate beyond Christmas, up to which time it was accepted; and this being a continuing covenant, a subsequent breach entitled the lessor, the plaintiff, to re-enter, as was held in 1 B. & Ad. 428, in the case of Doe dem. Flower v. Peck. We therefore think this rule must be discharged. Rule discharged.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Thursday, Feb. 20.

D'ARNAY v. CHESNEAU.

Assignees of insolvent — Pleading — Title — Vesting order.

Debt, for money lent, and on account stated.

Plea, that plaintiff had taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act, and that his estate and effects had vested in his ass gnees.

Replication, that before the plaintiff's imprisonment the plaintiff was indebted to one T. V. R. to wit, in the amount in the declaration mentioned, that T. V. R. held an I O U of the defendant as a security, whereby defendant acknowledged that he owed plaintiff, to wit, the amount in the declaration mentioned, and that plaintiff then agreed with T. V. R. that if he did not pay him his debt by the 20th January, the I O U was to become the property of T. V. R. and he was to have no further claim on the plaintiff, and the plaintiff then, on those conditions, transferred the debt to T. V. R.; that plaintiff did not pay the debt to T. V. R. on 20th January, and that this action was brought by him as trustee for T. V. R.

Rejoinder, that plaintiff was not indebted to T. V. R. modo et formâ.

Held, that the amount of the debt to T. V. R. was immaterial; and that the replication was supported by shewing a debt less than that in the declaration mentioned.

Quære, whether the replication is good?

Willes, on a former day, moved for a rule to enter a nonsuit, or a verdict for the defendant, or for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection.

The pleadings and facts of the case are fully mentioned in the judgment below.

Martin and Peacock shewed cause, citing the following cases: Carruther v. Burnes (4 B. & Ad. 382); Said v. Rhodes (1 M. & W. 153); Crowfoot v. Gurney (9 Bing. 372); Parnham v. Hunt (8 M. & W. 743).

JUDGMENT.

PARKE, B. now delivered judgment.—This case was argued a day or two ago. It was an action brought for the sum of 150*l.* for money lent, and on an account stated, and then there was a special plea, stating that the plaintiff had taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act, and that all his estate and effects had been by the vesting order vested in the assignees. To that there was a replication, that before the commencement of the imprisonment of the plaintiff, mentioned in the plea, the plaintiff was indebted to one T. V. Raby in a large sum of money, to wit, to the amount of the moneys in the declaration mentioned; that as a security for repayment thereof there was deposited with T. V. Raby an instrument in writing, called an I O U, signed by the defendant, whereby the defendant acknowledged that he owed to the plaintiff a large sum of money, to wit, the amount of the sum of money in the declaration mentioned, and then that he consented and agreed with T. V. Raby, that if on the 20th January then next he was unable to pay him the said debt then due to Raby, the said I O U was to become the property of F. V. Raby, in consideration of which T. V. Raby should have no further claim upon him, and that the plaintiff thereby transferred and assigned the debt in the declaration mentioned, and every part thereof, to Raby, on the terms and conditions aforesaid, of all which premises the defendants had notice; and then the replication proceeded to aver that the money was not paid on the 20th January, nor the 25th April, to which day the time of the payment of the debt was extended; and also that the action was brought by the plaintiff as a trustee for T. V. Raby; and the issue upon that is that the plaintiff was not indebted to the said T. V. Raby, in the replication mentioned, in manner and form as in that replication is alleged. The case was tried before me, and I directed a verdict for the plaintiff, subject to certain questions for the opinion of the Court. Upon the trial it appeared that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of 110*l.* for which sum he gave an I O U, and on the 20th October, before the commencement of the plaintiff's imprisonment, and before the title of the assignees accrued, he deposited the I O U with Raby, together with a patent as security for a sum of 90*l.* due to Raby, and agreed that if the 90*l.* was not paid before the 20th January, the I O U should become the absolute property of Raby, and that the debt should be extinguished. I left the question to the jury whether any debt was due at the assignment of the debt, and the jury found that 90*l* was due, and I then directed a verdict for the plaintiff on the issue, reserving leave to the defendant to move to enter a verdict for the defendant. The case was fully argued two days ago, and all the questions bearing upon the right of assignees under the Bankrupt and Insolvent Acts, and with respect to assignments by way of mortgage or security, were ably and elaborately commented upon; but the only question which arises in the present stage of the proceeding is whether in the allegation that the plaintiff was indebted to Raby in a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of money in the declaration mentioned, the amount which is stated under a videlicet is material or not. If there had been an absolute sale of the debt to Raby before the assignees' title accrued, it is true it would be immaterial what was the amount of the debt which was the price of it; but this is not altogether an absolute, it is only a conditional purchase of that debt; for it is provided by the agreement that if the plaintiff should not pay his debt of 90*l.* on or before the 20th of January then next, the said I O U was to become the property of Raby, and in the meantime the debt due to the plaintiff is assigned as a security only for the amount due from the plaintiff to Raby. Now before that time, and before it was determined whether there should be a purchase or not, it is necessary to inquire whether the title of the assignees accrued. Was, then, the right to sue for this debt transferred to the assignees, or not, by the vesting order? It was argued, and we think rightly, that if the debt to be assured was less than the debt assigned, and if it was only a simple assignment of the debt as a security, the right to sue would vest in the insolvent's assignees. In that case they would have an interest in the property for the benefit of the creditors, and they would not have to refund to the cestui que trust. The proper criterion of this case appears to us to be whether they had a right to sue or not. This is decided by the cases of Carpenter v. Marnell (3 B. & P.); Scott v. Surman (Willes, 400), and Parnham v. Hunt (8 M. & W. 743). It was argued by the defendant that if the debt were assigned, then the assignees of the insolvent had no claim, as they would have no interest, and would be bound to pay the whole over to the assignee of the plaintiff, and if this exposition be correct, the amount due under the videlicet is material, and the verdict should be for the defendant. We do not think, however, the amount of the debt at the time of the assignment was of any importance; it is still an assignment by way of security only; and if the assignees, by the order of the Court, lend the money on other security, there would be a surplus applicable to the insolvent's creditors, and the possibility of that surplus would vest a title to recover in the assignees. In this case the only question was whether the debt was due to Raby at the time of the assignment, and not at the time of the vesting order, when the title of the assignees accrued, and their right to the debts and effects of the insolvent determined. Admitting, for the sake of argument, that the debt accrued at the time of the vesting order, when the defendant's title accrued, there would be an answer to the assignees' primâ facie right to the debts due to the insolvent; but that is not the case if the debt accrued at the prior period. We are of opinion that the right of the assignees to sue is the same whether the sum is less, equal to, or greater than the debt assigned, consequently the amount mentioned under the videlicet is immaterial, and the verdict was rightly found for the plaintiff. The case of Dangerfield v. Thomas (9 Ad. & El. 293) was cited to shew that if the debt due to the plaintiff was equal to or greater than the debt assigned, the title to sue would continue in the assignees; but it does not appear that the arguments at the bar there raised the points in this case, and the assigning of the debt at the time of the bankruptcy was not averred. Whether that circumstance would make any difference in this case—whether, in a simple assignment of the debt, the assignees have no power to sue, it is unnecessary now to determine; nor is it necessary to determine whether the replication is good upon the face of it. To raise that question the defendant must bring a writ of error. —— Rule discharged.

WOOD v. LEDBITTER.

Conveyance of interest in land—License, when revocable.

A right to pass into and through, and to remain upon the lands of another, cannot be created except by deed.

A mere license, though under seal, is revocable.

A license, together with a grant, invalid for want of a seal, is a mere license, and therefore revocable.

A license coupled with a grant, though not under seal, the grant in its nature not requiring a seal, is irrevocable.

When A, in consideration of a certain sum paid by B, gives B a card, licensing him to enter upon, to quit, and to re-enter, or to remain upon land of A during a specified time: A may, before the expiration of such time, determine the license, and may eject B as a trespasser, without returning the consideration upon which the license was granted.

Quære, could B maintain an action for breach of contract against A, or against those who issued the card under his authority? (a)

A rule having been obtained for a new trial, cause was shewn against the rule by Kelly, Q.C. Wortley, Q.C. Martin, Q.C. and Peacock, on behalf of the defendant.

Jerris, Q.C. Humfrey, and Petersdorff were heard in reply.

The arguments are embodied in the judgment of the Court. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Afterwards (22nd January) the judgment of the Court was delivered as follows, by ALDERSON, B.—In the case of Wood v. Ledbitter, which was heard before Rolfe, B. the Lord Chief Baron, and myself. This was an action tried before my brother Rolfe at the sittings after last Trinity Term. It was an action for an assault and false imprisonment. The plea (upon which alone any question arose) was, that at the time of the alleged trespass the plaintiff was in a certain close of Lord Eglinton's, and the defendant, as the servant of Lord Eglinton, and by his command, laid his hands upon the plaintiff in order to remove him from the said close, using no unnecessary violence.

The replication was, that at the time of such refusal the plaintiff was in the said close by the leave and license of Lord Eglinton. The leave and license was traversed by the defendant, and issue was joined on that traverse. On the trial, it appeared that the place from which the plaintiff was removed by the defendant was the inclosure attached to and surrounding the Great Stand on the Doncaster Racecourse; that Lord Eglinton was steward of the races there in the year 1843; that tickets were sold in the town of Doncaster at one guinea each, which were understood to entitle the holders to come into the stand and the inclosure surrounding it, and to remain there every day during the races. These tickets were not sealed, nor were they signed by Lord Eglinton, but it must be assumed they were issued with his privity. It further appeared that the plaintiff, having purchased one of these tickets, came to the stand during the races of the year 1843, and was there or in the inclosure while the races were going on. And while there, and during the races, the defendant, by the order of Lord Eglinton, desired him to depart, and gave him notice that if he did not go away force would be used to turn him out. It must be assumed that the plaintiff had in no respect misconducted himself, and that if he had not been requested to depart, his coming upon and remaining in the inclosure would have been an act justified by his purchase of the ticket. The plaintiff refused to go, and thereupon the defendant, by the order of Lord Eglinton, forced him out, using no unnecessary violence. My brother Rolfe, in directing the jury, told them that, assuming the ticket to have been sold to the plaintiff under the sanction of Lord Eglinton, still it was lawful for Lord Eglinton, without returning the guinea, and without assigning any reason for what he did, to order the plaintiff to quit the inclosure; and that if they, the jury, were satisfied that notice was given to the plaintiff requiring him to quit the ground, and that before he was forcibly removed by the defendant a reasonable time had elapsed during which he might have conveniently gone away, then the plaintiff was not, at the time of the removal, on the place in question by the leave and license of Lord Eglinton. On this direction the jury found a verdict for the defendant. In last Michaelmas Term Jervis obtained a rule nisi to set aside the verdict, for misdirection, on the ground that, under the circumstances, Lord Eglinton must be taken to have given the plaintiff leave to come into and remain in the inclosure during the races; that such leave was not revocable, at all events, without returning the guinea, and so that, at the time of removal, the plaintiff was in the inclosure by the leave and license of Lord Eglinton. Cause was shewn during last Term, and the question was argued before my Lord Chief Baron, my brother Rolfe, and myself, and on account of the conflicting authorities cited in the argument we took time to consider our judgment, which we are now prepared to deliver. That no incorporeal inheritance affecting land can either be created or transferred, otherwise than by deed, is a proposition so well established that it would be mere pedantry to cite authorities in its support. All such inheritances are said emphatically to lie in grant, and not in livery, and not to pass by the mere delivering of the deed. In all the authorities and text-books upon the subject, a deed is always stated or assumed to be indispensably requisite: and though the older text-books speak of incorporeal inheritances, yet there is no doubt but that the principle does not depend on the quantity of interest granted or transferred, but on the nature of the subject-matter. A right of common, for instance, which is a profit à prendre, or a right of way, which is an easement, a right in nature of an easement, can no more be granted or conveyed for life or for years without a deed than in fee-simple. Now, in the present case, the right claimed by the plaintiff is a right during a portion of each day, for a limited number of days, to pass into and through, and to remain on, a certain close belonging to Lord Eglinton—to go and remain where, if he went, he would, but for the ticket, be a trespasser. This is a right affecting land at least as obviously and extensively as a right of way over the land; it is a right of way, and something more, and if we had to decide this case on general principles only, and independently of authority, it would appear to us perfectly clear that no such right could be created otherwise than by deed. The plaintiff, however, in this case, argues that he is not driven to claim the right in question strictly as grantee. He contends that, without any grant from Lord Eglinton, he had license from him to be in the close in question at the time when he was turned out, and that such a license was, under the circumstances, irrevocable. And for this he relies mainly upon four cases, which he considers to be expressly in point for him, viz. Webb v. Paternoster (reported in five different books, namely, Palmer, 71; Rolle, 143 and 152; Noy, 98; Popham, 151; and Godbolt, 282); Wood v. Lake (Sayer, 3); Taylor v. Waters (7 Taunt. 374); and Wood v. Manley (11 Adol. & El. 34).

(a) In delivering the judgment of the Court, Lord Denman, C. J. there said, "The rule of law is clear, that where one, by his words or conduct, wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief, so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time."

(a) See Carrington v. Roots (2 M. & W. 248; Sug. Ven. and Pur. 139, 140); Jones v. Flint (10 Ad. & E. 753).

As the argument of the plaintiff rested almost entirely on the authority of these four cases, it is very important to look to them minutely, in order to see the exact points they severally decided. Before, however, we proceed to this investigation, it may be convenient to consider the nature of a license, and what are its legal incidents, and for this purpose we cannot do better than refer to Lord Chief Justice Vaughan's elaborate judgment in the case of Thomas v. Sorrell, as it appears in his Reports. The question there was as to the right of the Crown to dispense with certain statutes regulating the sale of wine, and to license the Vintners' Company to do certain acts, notwithstanding these statutes. In the course of his judgment the Chief Justice says, a dispensation or license properly passeth no interest, nor alters or transfers property in any thing, but only makes an action lawful which, without it, had been unlawful; as a license to hunt in a man's park, to come into his house, are only actions which without license had been unlawful; but a license to hunt in a man's park and carry away the deer killed to his own use,—to cut down a tree in a man's ground and to carry it away the next day after to his own use, are licenses as to the acts of hunting and cutting down the trees; but as to the carrying away the deer killed and the tree cut down, they are grants. So to license a man to eat my meat, or to fire the wood in my chimney, to warm him by; as to the actions of eating, firing my wood and warming him, they are licenses, but it is consequent necessarily to those actions that my property be destroyed in the meat eaten and in the wood burnt. So as in some cases by consequent, and not directly, and has its effect; a dispensation or license may destroy and alter the property.

Now attending to this passage in conjunction with the title License in Brook's Abridgment, from which, and particularly from paragraph 15, it appears that a license is in its nature revocable, we have before us the whole principle of the law on this subject. A mere license is revocable; but that which is called a license is often something more than a license, it often comprises or is connected with a grant, and then the party who has given it cannot in general revoke it so as to defeat his grant to which it was incident. It may further be observed, that a license under seal (provided it be a mere license) is as revocable as a license by parol, and, on the other hand, a license by parol coupled with a grant, is as irrevocable as a license by deed, provided only that the grant is of a nature capable of being made by parol; but where there is a license by parol coupled with a parol grant, or pretended grant, of something which is incapable of being granted otherwise than by deed, there the license is a mere license, it is not an incident to a valid grant, and it is therefore revocable.

Thus a license by A to hunt in his park, whether given by deed or by parol, is revocable. It merely renders the act of hunting lawful, which, without the license, would have been unlawful. If the license be, as put by Chief Justice Vaughan, a license not only to hunt, but also to take away the deer when killed to his own use, this is in truth a grant of the deer with the license annexed to come on the land; and supposing the grant of the deer to be good, then the license would be irrevocable by the party who had given it. He would be estopped from defeating his own grant or act in nature of a grant. But supposing the case of a parol license to come on any land, and there to make a watercourse to flow on to the land of the licensee; in such a case there is no valid grant of the watercourse, and the license remains a mere license, and therefore capable of being revoked. On the other hand, if such a license were granted by deed, there the question would be on the construction of the deed, whether it amounted to a grant of the watercourse, and if it did, then the license would be irrevocable.

Having premised these remarks on the general doctrine, we will proceed to consider the four cases relied on by Mr. Jervis for the plaintiff. The first was Webb v. Paternoster. That, as appears from the report in Rolle, was an action in trespass, brought against the defendant for eating by the mouth of his cattle the plaintiff's hay. The defendant justified under Sir William Plummer, the owner of the fee of the close in which the hay was, averring that Sir William Plummer leased the close to him, and, therefore, as lessee, he turned his cattle into the close, and they ate the hay. The plaintiff replied, that, before the making of the lease, Sir William Plummer had licensed him to place the hay on the close till he could conveniently sell it; and that before he could conveniently sell it, Sir William Plummer leased the land to the defendant. The defendant demurred to the replication.

From the arguments as given in Rolle, it appears that the plaintiff's counsel, who was first heard, contended, first, that the plaintiff's license being a license for profit, and not merely for pleasure, and being also for a certain time only, namely, till he could sell his hay, was not revocable; and, secondly, if the license was revocable, still that the lease to the defendant was no implied and not an express revocation, and therefore was inoperative against him without notice; and for this he referred to Molloy's case (5 Reports, 111). To this latter proposition the Court appears to have assented; but Dodderidge, J. suggested that, even if the license was in force, still the licenser did not by such a license preclude himself, nor consequently his tenant, from turning cattle on the land, and that the licensee ought to have taken care to protect the hay from the cattle; as to this, however, the Chief Justice expressed a doubt.

The defendant's counsel was heard some days afterwards, and he alleged that it appeared by the record the plaintiff had had two years to sell his hay before the defendant's cattle had eaten it; and he argued that the Court would say, as a matter of law, that this was more than a reasonable time, and to this the Court assented.

The plaintiff's counsel, in reply, adverted to the distinction between a license for profit and a license for pleasure; but Dodderidge denied it, and said, that a license to dig gravel, though a license for profit, is revocable; and he said that the true distinction was between a mere license and a license coupled with an interest. Houghton, J. said, that a license executed was irrevocable; but a license executory was revocable. Judgment was eventually given for the defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff had had more than reasonable time to sell the hay. It will be seen, therefore, that the only two points decided were, first, that the question of reasonable time was for the Court, and not for the jury; secondly, that two years was more than a reasonable time.

The decision, therefore, itself has no bearing on the point for which it was cited; and the only support which the case affords to the doctrine contended for by the present plaintiff is from what is said in the report of the case in Popham to have been agreed by the Court, namely, that license for profit for a time certain is not revocable—a proposition to which, with the qualification we have already pointed out, we entirely accede. It is, moreover, by no means certain that the license in Webb v. Paternoster was not a license under seal.

The defendant's counsel appears, from the report in Rolle, to speak of the plaintiff as grantee of the liberty to stack hay, &c. an expression not very appropriate, if used in respect of a party who had a mere parol license, and the Chief Justice, according to the report in Popham and Palmer, says, that the plaintiff had an interest which charged the land, into whose hands soever it should come. And Dodderidge, J. according to the report in Palmer, arguing that the lessee certainly might turn his cattle into his own field, and was not bound to stop their mouths, says, "It was the folly of the plaintiff that he did not, together with the license, take a covenant that it should be lawful for him to fence the hay with a hedge." From these expressions (and there are others to the various reports of the case, having a similar aspect), it certainly seems possible that the license was under seal, and then the only point would be, that which alone was in fact decided, namely, whether, supposing the plaintiff to have acquired by grant a right to stack his hay on the land for a limited time, that limited time had expired. Even supposing the license to have been a mere parol license, yet the strong probability is, that Webb had purchased the hay in question of Sir William Plummer, as a growing crop, with liberty to stack it on the land, and then the parol license might be good, as a license coupled with an interest. Be this, however, as it may, the decision, as we have already pointed out, has very little or rather no bearing on the case before us; and the judgment of Dodderidge, J. as given both in Rolle and Palmer, is in strict accordance with what was afterwards laid down by Vaughan, C. J. and which we consider to be consonant both to reason and authority.

The next decision in order of time is that of Wood v. Lake (in Sayer, page 3).

There the defendant had, by a parol agreement, given liberty to the plaintiff to stack coals on the defendant's land for a term of seven years: after the plaintiff had enjoyed this privilege for three years, the defendant locked up the gate of the close.

No report is given in Sayer of the argument at the bar, but, from a manuscript of the same case referred to by Lord Chief Justice Gibbs, in the case of Taylor v. Waters, we have had an opportunity of consulting, through the kindness of the representatives of the late Mr. Justice Burroughs, it appears that the argument turned only on the point whether the privilege of stacking the coals did or did not amount to a lease; for if it did, then the defendant contended it was void after three years, under the Statute of Frauds, as not being in writing. Lee, C. J., and Dennison, J., held it to be no lease nor uncertain interest in land; but Foster, J. doubted, and desired time to consider. On the last day of Term the Court gave judgment for the plaintiff (Foster non dissentiente), thus establishing the license to be irrevocable during the seven years.

Supposing the Court to have been right in deciding that this was not a lease (which, however, is doubted by Sir E. Sugden; see 1 Vendors and Purchasers, last edition, page 139), yet no grounds are stated on which it could be held good as an easement originating merely by parol.

Up to this case not a single decision is to be found giving countenance to any such proposition, and we are compelled to say that we do not think it can be supported.

The next case on which the plaintiff relies is Taylor v. Waters, reported in 7 Taunton, 374. It was an action by the plaintiff against the doorkeeper of the Opera House, for preventing him from entering the house during the performance of an opera. It appeared that one William Taylor, being in possession of the Opera House, as lessee for a long term of years, by a deed dated the 24th August, 1792, assigned his interest therein to trustees, on various trusts for creditors and other claimants, and ultimately in trust for himself.

After the execution of this deed, Taylor continued in possession by permission of the trustees, and he carried on and managed the concerns of the theatre. In March 1799, he, by deed, granted to one Gourgas, for valuable consideration, six silver tickets, entitling the holders to admission to the theatre. One of these tickets was sold by Gourgas to the plaintiff, in July 1799, but no deed of assignment to him was executed.

In 1800 Taylor's trustees took possession of the theatre. The plaintiff, however, was allowed to attend the theatre by virtue of his ticket, until the year 1814, when the defendant Waters, as servant of the trustees, prevented him from entering the theatre, and for this obstruction the action was brought. The cause was tried before Chief Justice Gibbs, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff, and that verdict was afterwards upheld by the Court of Common Pleas. The grounds of the judgment were that the right under the silver ticket was not an interest in land, but a license irrevocable to permit the plaintiff to enjoy certain privileges therein; that it was not required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing, and, consequently, that it might be granted without a deed. The Chief Justice, in support of that doctrine, relied on Webb v. Paternoster, which, he said, shewed that a beneficial license to be exercised upon land might be granted without deed, and could not be countermanded, at least, after it had been acted upon. The same case, he added, shewed that the interest was not such an interest in land as was required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing, as to which last point all doubt, if there remained any, had been removed by the case of Wood v. Lake. This judgment is stated by the learned reporter to have comprised the substance of the argument on both sides, and which, therefore, he does not give in his report. We must infer from this that the attention of the Court was not called in the argument to the principles and earlier authorities to which we have adverted. Brook, in his Abridgment, Dodderidge, in the case of Webb v. Paternoster, and Lord Ellenborough, in the case of Rex v. Hawdon-on-the-Hill, all state, in the most distinct manner, that every license is, and must be in its nature, revocable, so long as it is a mere license. Where, indeed, it is connected with a grant, there it may, by ceasing to be a naked license, become irrevocable; but then, it is obvious that the grant must exist independently of the license, unless, indeed, it be a grant capable of being made by parol.

Now, in Taylor v. Waters there was no grant of any right at all, unless such right was conferred by the license itself. Chief Justice Gibbs gives no reason for saying the license was a license irrevocable, and we cannot but think he would have paused before he sanctioned a doctrine so entirely repugnant to principle and to the earlier authorities, if they had been brought before the Court.

Again, the Chief Justice is represented as saying that the interest of the plaintiff was not an interest in land within the Statute of Frauds, and that consequently it might be granted without deed. How the circumstance that the interest was not an interest in land within the Statute of Frauds shewed it to be grantable without deed, we cannot discover. The precise point decided in Webb v. Paternoster is not adverted to, and it is assumed without discussion, that the license there must have been a parol license and a naked license, unconnected with an interest capable of being created by parol. With all deference to the high authority from which the judgment in Taylor v. Waters proceeded, we feel warranted in saying that it is to the last degree unsatisfactory, an observation which we have the less hesitation in making in consequence of its having obviously been doubted by the Court of Queen's Bench and Mr. Justice Bayley, in the case of Hewlins v. Shippam.

The fourth and last case relied on by Mr. Jervis was the recent case of Wood v. Manley, in the Queen's Bench (11 Adol. & El. 34). That was an action of trespass quare clausum fregit. The plea was that the defendant was possessed of a large quantity of hay, being on the plaintiff's close, and that by the leave of the plaintiff he entered on the close in question to remove it. The replication de injuriâ. It was proved at the trial that the hay in question was sold in January 1838, by the plaintiff's landlord, who had seized it on a distress for rent. The conditions of the sale were that the purchaser of the hay might leave it on the close until Lady-day, and might, in the meantime, come on the close from time to time as often as he should see fit to remove it. These conditions were assented to by the plaintiff. The defendant became purchaser, and afterwards and before Lady-day the plaintiff locked up the close. The defendant broke open the gate in order to remove the hay. A verdict was found for the defendant, Erskine, J. telling the jury that the license to come from time to time to remove the hay was irrevocable. Mr. Crowder moved to set aside this verdict, on the ground that the license was necessarily revocable, and was in fact revoked, but the Court of Queen's Bench refused to grant a rule, and we think quite rightly. This was a case not of a mere license, but of a license coupled with an interest. The hay, by the sale, became the property of the defendant, and the license to remove it therefore became, as in the case of the tree and the deer put by Vaughan, C. J., irrevocable by the plaintiff, and the rule was properly refused. It appears, therefore, that the authorities really supporting the present plaintiff in the proposition for which he is contending are confined to the two cases of Wood v. Lake and Taylor v. Waters, in neither of which was the real difficulty discussed or even stated. It was in both cases taken for granted that if the Statute of Frauds did not apply, a parol license was sufficient, and the necessity of an instrument under seal, by reason of the interest in question being a right in nature of an easement, was by some means kept entirely out of sight; and for these reasons, even if there had been no conflicting decisions, we should have thought these very cases to be very unsafe guides in leading us to a decision on an occasion where we are called on to lose sight of the ancient land-marks of the common law.

We are not, however, driven to say that we shall disregard these cases merely on principle, giving to them the full weight of judicial decision. They are met by several others which we must entirely disregard before we can adopt the arguments of the plaintiffs. In the cases of Fentimore v. Smith (4 East, 107) and Rex v. Hawdon-on-the-Hill (4 Maule & Selwyn, 565), which were before Taylor v. Waters, Lord Ellenborough and the Court of Queen's Bench expressly recognized the doctrine that a license is no grant, and that it is in its nature necessarily revocable; and they further declare that, in order to confer an incorporeal right, an instrument under seal is essential; and in the elaborate judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, given by Mr. Justice Bayley in Hewlins v. Shippam (5 Barn. & Cress. 221), the necessity of a deed for creating an incorporeal right was expressly recognized, and formed the ground for the decision. It is true that the interest in question in that case was a freehold interest, and on that ground Mr. Justice Bayley suggests that it might be distinguished from Wood v. Lake and Taylor v. Waters; but in an earlier part of that judgment he states, conformably to what is clear law, that in his opinion the quantity of interest made no difference; and the distinction is evidently adverted to by him, not because he entertained the opinion that it really was of importance, but only in order to enable him to decide that case, without in terms saying that he did not consider the case of Taylor v. Waters to be law. The doctrine of Hewlins v. Shippam has since been recognized and acted upon in Bryan v. Whistler (8 Barn. & Cress. 288); Cocker v. Cooper (1 Cromp. Mees. & Ros. 418); and Wallace v. Harrison (4 M. & W. 538); and it would be impossible for us to adopt the plaintiff's view of the law without holding all those cases to have been ill decided. It was suggested that in the present case a distinction might exist by reason of the plaintiff having paid a valuable consideration for the privilege of going on the stand; but this can make no difference. Whether it may give the plaintiff a right of action against those from whom he purchased the ticket, or those who authorized its being issued and sold to the plaintiff, is a point not necessary to be discussed. Any such action would be founded on a breach of contract, and would not be the result of his having acquired by the ticket a right of going upon the stand in spite of the owner of the soil; and it is sufficient on this point to say that in several of the cases which we have cited (Hewlins v. Shippam, for instance, and Bryan v. Whistler), the alleged license had been granted for a valuable consideration, but this was not held to make any difference. We do not advert to the cases of Winton v. Blackwell (8 East, 308) and Liggins v. Hinge (7 Bing. 682), or other cases ranging themselves in the same category, as they were decided on grounds inapplicable to the case now before us, and were, in fact, admitted not to bear upon it. In conclusion, we have only to say that, acting on the doctrine relative to licenses as we find it laid down by Brooke, by Dodderidge, J. and Vaughan, C. J. and sanctioned by Hewlins v. Shippam, and the other modern cases proceeding on the same principle, we have come to the conclusion that the direction given to the jury at the trial was correct, and consequently that this rule must be discharged.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

CLARKE v. THE LEICESTERSHIRE CANAL COMPANY.

Mandamus—Construction of private Acts.

The question whether the Court had authority to grant a mandamus, which is set out on the record, may be raised at any stage of the proceedings.

When mandamus sufficiently discloses the legal ground of complaint.

This case was argued some time since. As it turns almost entirely upon the construction of private Acts, it will be unnecessary to set out the argument. The following was the written judgment of the Court.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C.J. delivered the judgment of the Court. —This was a writ of error upon a judgment given by the Court of Queen's Bench in favour of the defendants. The prosecutor had sued out a mandamus directed to the company, commanding them to make a uniform rate or toll along the whole line of the canal described in the mandamus, and that they should demand and take only a certain amount of toll therein also specified. To this mandamus the defendants had made their return, and the prosecutor had traversed several of the facts in such return; and upon a replication to the traverse, the Court of Queen's Bench had given judgment for the defendants, upon the ground that the matter discussed in the writ itself was insufficient to support such writ. Upon the argument before us, it was objected, on the part of the plaintiff in error, that at this stage of the proceedings it was not open to the defendants to fall back upon the writ of mandamus, and to rely upon any insufficiency of the writ itself; and the case of Green and Others v. Pope (Lord Raymond, 125) was relied upon as an authority for that point. The case cited, however, differs entirely from that which is before us. The case cited was that of an action brought in the Court of Common Pleas for a false return to a mandamus issued out of the Queen's Bench; and all that is observed by the Court upon that objection being made was, that the question whether the mandamus would lie or not was not before the Court; for that it must be taken pro confesso that the mandamus had been granted, and that a false return had been made; and in that case the plaintiff would have been entitled to damages only, not to a peremptory mandamus, as he would have been if the action had been brought in Banco Regis, in which court, however, if the first mandamus was defective, no peremptory mandamus would have gone. But here we are called upon to say whether the Court of Queen's Bench had authority to give the mandamus which is set out upon the record itself, and the case of Rex v. The Margate Pier Company (3 B. & Ald. 220) we think a decisive authority that such question may be raised in any stage of the proceedings. And upon the question whether the mandamus does or does not upon the face of it disclose the legal ground of complaint, as we agree in the conclusion at which that Court has arrived, it will be unnecessary to do more than to state shortly the view we take of the mandatory part of the writ, when compared with the provisions of the statutes upon which it professes to be founded. The writ calls upon the proprietors of the canal company to do one out of two things, namely, either to make a uniform rate of tolls to be taken along the whole line of the canal, or to demand and take rates for the tonnage of all coals and coke which may be carried and conveyed upon the navigation and collateral cut from Leicester to Market Harborough only, equal in proportion to the rate which the company demand and take for the tonnage of coals and coke carried and conveyed from Leicester to Gumley upon the said navigation (within certain limits of toll mentioned in the writ). But as to the first of these proposed alterations, we are of opinion, referring to the provisions of the statutes 33 Geo. 3, and 51 Geo. 3, the company are not bound to comply with the exigency of the writ when so framed; for by the 67th section of the former Act, under which the canal from Leicester and the cut to Market Harborough were originally empowered to be made, the company are authorized to take a mileage toll of two-pence-halfpenny per ton per mile on all coals and coke to be navigated and conveyed upon the said navigation, canal, or collateral cut; and no authority is given to take any other than a mileage toll. It is unnecessary to refer to the statute 45 Geo. 3, recited in the writ, any further than to observe that although it varies the line of the navigation, it makes no alteration in the tolls to be taken thereon. But it is upon the 51 Geo. 3, c. 122, that the prosecutor relies as an authority to call upon the company to make a uniform rate of toll along the whole line of the canal. The Act itself, however, appears to us to bear no such construction. The mileage duty given by the first Act, from Leicester to Gumley, is nowhere repealed by it; on the contrary, the power of repealing such mileage toll is recited in the 70th section of this Act, which is stated to amount to 3s. 9d. per ton from Leicester to Gumley; and the statute, after reciting, further, that the company or proprietors of the Leicestershire and Northamptonshire Union Canal had agreed to reduce that toll from 3s. 9d. per ton to 2s. 6d. on coals and coke passing from that canal into the Grand Union Canal, and carried along the same any distance not exceeding ten miles; and 2s. 1d. per ton on coals and coke passing from their canal into the Grand Union Canal, and carried along the same more than eighteen miles, that section enacts that in the respective cases mentioned, the Leicestershire and Northamptonshire Union Canal Company shall not take more than those sums. Had it been intended that a corresponding reduction should be made in other cases, it would no doubt have been provided for; and, in the absence of any such provision, it appears to us that, notwithstanding the restriction put upon the rights of the company in the two cases specified, their rights in all others remained unaltered. Moreover, this very clause sanctions the taking of two different amounts for coals, &c. carried the same distance along the Union Canal, namely, from the north end to Gumley, and is altogether inconsistent with the idea that the legislature intended to impose on the company the necessity of making an equal mileage toll in every case. If the Union Canal Company had continued to exact the maximum in each of the two cases provided for by the section above referred to, they would still have been taking less than the mileage toll originally granted and exacted in other cases; but it would have been impossible to maintain that they were bound to make a corresponding reduction in all cases. If bound to reduce the toll in all cases, must the reduction have been from 3s. 9d. to 2s. 6d. or from 3s. 9d. to 2s. 1d.? The granting of those two different sums in respect of the same distance rendered the principle of an equal mileage duty inapplicable to the cases specified, and a reduction in those cases could not make a reduction necessary in others; and as each of those sums is mentioned as a maximum, and not a fixed amount to be always levied, the company had power to reduce them; and the principle of a mileage duty was no more applicable after such reduction than before. And as to the second branch of the mandatory part of the writ, it appears to us, as it did to the Court below, to be virtually and substantially the same as the first branch, and therefore that it must receive the same answer as the first. We therefore think that, by reason of the insufficiency of the writ, judgment should be given for the defendants in error.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Thursday, Feb. 27.
(Before Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.)
Re CLARKE.
Bill of sale.

An insolvent having given a bill of sale of his household goods, furniture, and stock in trade, and contracted a subsequent debt, does so without reasonable assurance of being able to pay, and is not entitled to the benefit of the Act.

This case had been adjourned from a former day, in order that the insolvent might file a copy of a bill of sale which had been given by him to a Mr. Nash, about four years ago, whereby he had assigned all his household goods, furniture, stock in trade, &c. for securing the sum of 100*l.* and interest, such bill containing a clause that he (the insolvent) was to continue in possession until he should have received one month's demand of the principal money and interest, and that, in default in payment, Nash was to enter and take possession.

The insolvent was supported by Galsworthy and Nichols, and opposed by Cranch (solicitor) on behalf of a creditor named Cobb.

It appeared that the insolvent had contracted this debt with Mr. Cobb at or about the time notice was given to the insolvent by Nash of default in payment, and that it was his intention to enter the premises under the power contained in the bill of sale. He did so enter at the expiration of the month, and took possession of everything belonging to the insolvent. It was submitted by the opposing solicitor, that the insolvent having contracted this debt to Mr. Cobb during the time this bill of sale was hanging over his head, he could have had at that time no reasonable expectation of being able to pay, and consequently he had no right to come to the Court for the benefit of the Act of Parliament.

His HONOUR having stated the substance of the bill of sale, said that although the Act of Parliament of which the insolvent sought the benefit had not been passed at the time of the execution of the bill of sale, still there were certain other matters requisite to give the insolvent a locus standi in this court; and that the insolvent having, by the bill of sale, parted with his interest in his furniture and stock in trade, had contracted this debt without a reasonable assurance of being able to pay the same, and consequently his case must be adjourned sine die.—Adjourned accordingly.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.
(Before Mr. Commissioner Serjt. STEPHEN.)
Monday, Feb. 24.
Re JOHN JONES.

All blanks in an insolvent's petition must be filled up before presentation, otherwise they constitute a fatal objection.

An opposing creditor is entitled to call for an adjournment of a case, where insolvent has omitted to file copies of deeds under which he has an interest.

Where an insolvent has mortgaged all his property, and kept no copy of the mortgage, opposing creditors cannot insist on the attendance of the mortgagee, at the insolvent's expense, but must summon him to produce the mortgage as their own witness, and at their own cost.

In this case, the insolvent, who had been discharged from custody by an order of the Commissioner, came up for his first hearing.

Homes, for the creditors, pointed out a blank which had been left in that clause of the petition where the insolvent should have inserted the value of his estate: this might be considered a fatal objection, if insisted on (see Re Adams, p. 378, antè); but as the opposing creditors wished to punish insolvent without allowing his estate to revest in him, they would consent to the blank being filled up now.

His HONOUR.—It is a mistaken notion, that where an estate is of no value, the blank left in the form of petition prescribed by the Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 96) need not be filled up: all the blanks must be filled up: where an estate is worth nothing, it should be stated in the petition as worth nothing. In future, no petition will be received with any blanks left unfilled up; but in the present instance, as the creditors consent, the blank may be filled up.

Homes then stated that the insolvent had mentioned in his schedule that he was entitled to some interest in a cottage held under a lease from the Duke of Beaufort, and to a reversionary interest in property under a marriage settlement; copies of these documents should have been filed with the petition, so that the creditors might have examined them before the hearing. He asked for an adjournment until these copies were filed.

His HONOUR.—You are entitled to an adjournment of the case on this ground—the copies must be filed ten days before the day of adjournment.

Homes then mentioned that it appeared by the schedule that the insolvent, shortly before his petition, had mortgaged all his property, of every description, to Mr. Philip Price, his attorney, for securing a sum of 486*l.* He applied for an order that a copy of this mortgage should be filed, and that Mr. Price, the mortgagee, should be produced at the expense of the insolvent.

The insolvent swore that he had kept no copy of the mortgage; that he had applied to the mortgagee for a copy, who had refused to give it, or to attend without having his expenses first paid; and that he had no money whatever.

His HONOUR.—Under these circumstances, I cannot order the insolvent, at his own expense, to bring the mortgagee here; for he swears that he is worth nothing; and if that statement be true, such an order would be tantamount to adjourning his case sine die; indeed it would be ordering him to perform an impossibility. Unless the creditors can shew that the insolvent has property, they must summon the mortgagee at their own expense to produce the mortgage as their witness. Adjournment accordingly.

Monday, March 3.
Re OLIVER and HASTINGS.
Bankrupt's balance-sheet.

This was a meeting for the last examination of the bankrupts. Stone appeared to support them, and Homes attended on behalf of the assignees.

On the debtor side of the balance-sheet, after inserting the amount of capital brought by each of the bankrupts into their business, the next item was as follows:—

"1840, July 20, to 1844, July 4.
"To amount of debts contracted for valuable considerations during this period, and remaining unpaid upon the latter day £2,852 11 3 and on the creditor side of the balance-sheet, the first item was as follows:—

"1844, July 4.

"By amount of good debts due to the estate at this time	£654 12 7¼
By bad debts . . .	412 1 2
By doubtful debts . . .	70 3 4½

but no reference was made to any accompanying lists setting out the various particulars of the debts included in the foregoing items, nor were any such lists filed with the balance-sheet.

Homes objected to the balance-sheet on account of this defect; wherever a bankrupt in his balance-sheet inserts, in one item, the aggregate amount of a number of items, a list should be annexed to the balance-sheet, which list must contain full particulars of all the smaller items.

His HONOUR.—That is the correct course; the bankrupts must furnish the assignees with full lists of the various debts included in the two items of 2,852*l.* 11s. 3d. and 1,136*l.* 17s. 2d.; the one list must contain the dates, creditors' names, residences, and amounts; the other list must contain the dates, debtors' names, residences, amounts, and statement as to each debt being good, bad, or doubtful.

Homes then pointed out an item on the debtor side of the balance-sheet of "Profits of business for four years . £1,300."

The bankrupts had inserted their trade expenses on the creditor side, so that if the above profits of 1,300*l.* were ascertained by deducting the trade expenses from the gross receipts, the bankrupts would have the advantage of such trade expenses being twice taken into their account.

His HONOUR.—It appears from the examination of the person who made out this balance-sheet, that the item of 1,300*l.* was ascertained as the net profits of the business, by deducting the capital and trade expenses from the gross receipts. That being the case, those expenses must be taken to be included in the item of profits, and the bankrupts cannot again take credit for them in the balance-sheet; that would be crediting themselves with the same payments twice over. The trade expenses must be taken out of the balance-sheet, or the gross receipts must be inserted in the place of the above item of net profits.

Adjourned to file a new balance sheet.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER, GUILDHALL.
(Sittings after Hilary Term.)
Monday, Feb. 17.
MOLYNEUX v. OVERSTONE.

Change in the ordinary form of referring causes to arbitration in this Court.

In assumpsit where plaintiff, by his particulars, claims a balance, and the defendant pleads a set-off, the Court, where the items of an account are very numerous, will allow the plaintiff to stop when he has proved an amount equal to the balance claimed. The defendant then proves as much as he can, and the plaintiff may again proceed with additional evidence to neutralize the amounts proved by defendant.

This was an action of assumpsit to which a set-off, with other pleas, was pleaded. The particulars claimed a certain balance of an account running over a considerable period of time, and consisting of many minute items. The defendant resisted every attempt that was made to have the cause referred.

Martin and Lush, for the plaintiff, having proved an amount equal to the balance claimed, were about to give evidence of the whole account.

POLLOCK, C. B.—You have, Mr. Martin, proved more than your balance, and I shall now let you stop. The defendant may begin, and may prove as much as he can, and then the plaintiff may commence afresh.

Granger and James, for the defendant, complained of the inconvenience to which their client would be subjected by having the case thus laid before him piecemeal.

POLLOCK, C. B.—That cannot be avoided. It is impossible that I can permit the public time to be wasted by continuing proof of items such as these, when possibly such proof may, in the end, not be necessary. If your client refuses to refer a cause so more fit for an arbitrator than for a jury to decide, he must submit to the consequences.

The defendant, after some further hesitation, consented to refer, and POLLOCK, C. B. observed:—I wish to suggest the expediency of altering the usual form of reference in this court, and that it should be declared sufficient for the arbitrator to decide the cause generally for the plaintiff or the defendant, without requiring a decision on each specific issue, unless either of the parties should call for it. A number of awards were set aside last Term for no other reason than that they did not follow the requisition of the order, that each individual issue should be separately decided.

Circuit Reports.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.
HANTS LENT ASSIZES.
(Before Mr. Justice ERLE.)
REG. v. CHRISTANCE and CHARDET.

Evidence of the deposition of a prisoner being a marksman.

Semble, that an indictment for stealing so many pounds of copper will not be supported by proof that copper nails were stolen.

In this case, after the prisoners (Dutchmen) had been asked, through an interpreter, if they would be tried by a jury de medietate, but had declined, and an interpreter had been duly sworn,

Sewell, for the prosecution, in the course of the evidence proposed to put in a statement made by one of the prisoners before the magistrate. It was signed by the magistrate, but only had the mark of the prisoner. A person present at the examination deposed, that the clerk took the statement down in writing, and that afterwards the prisoner put his mark to it.

Rawlinson objected that a paper could not be identified by a mark.

Proof was then given of the signature of the magistrate; but

Rawlinson still objected this was insufficient, for the identity of the statement produced was not proved.

It was then proved that the statement was in the handwriting of the clerk of the peace, who was since dead; and that, when finished, it was handed over to the prisoner, and that he put his mark upon it; but the witness would not swear to the mark.

Rawlinson still objected that the proof was insufficient.

ERLE, J. then called the interpreter who had been present at the examination, and had translated to the prisoner all that took place. The interpreter, after reading the examination over, stated, in answer to questions put by his lordship, that he heard the prisoner make a statement in Dutch, that he translated it, and saw the clerk write the translation down, and, to the best of his belief, the words in the statement produced were the English words. His lordship then read the following passage from Russell on Crimes, vol. ii. 885:—"In Smith's case (2 Lew. 139), a writing, purporting to be the examination of a prisoner, and to bear his mark, was tendered in evidence, and the magistrate's signature proved by a bystander, who stated that the clerk was writing when the prisoner was examined, and when the examination was finished he repeated to the prisoner, apparently from the paper, what the prisoner had said; the prisoner then put his mark to the paper; but whether the prisoner's statement was taken down correctly, or at all, he had no means of judging. Rex. v. Chapell was cited, but Parke, B. was disposed to admit the examination, as he thought there was sufficient primâ facie evidence that the prisoner's examination was taken down in fact as the law requires, and if so, it must be presumed to have been taken down correctly, and read over correctly, until the contrary was proved." His lordship then admitted the deposition.

Rawlinson, at the end of the case for the prosecution, objected that the indictment was bad, for it charged the prisoner with stealing ten pounds of copper, and it appeared that the articles were copper nails, and they should have been so described, citing Archl Cr. Laws, 48.

ERLE, J. was inclined to hold the objection good, but suggested that as they were foreigners, and there seemed little evidence against them, it would be more satisfactory that the case should go to the jury, reserving the full benefit of the objection if it should become necessary.

Rawlinson, on the part of the defendants, assented to this, and the prisoners were found

Not Guilty.

THE MINT.—A Parliamentary paper has just been printed, pursuant to the Act 7 Vict. c. 9, s. 1 3 and 4, containing an account of all supplies remaining in the mint, of advances for purchase of bullion for coinage, sales of coin, seigniorage arising therefrom, and repayments into the Exchequer on account of advances, &c. We proceed to give a few statements respecting the mint operations of last year. The supplies remaining in the mint on the 31st of December 1843, amounted altogether to 189,901*l*. consisting of 105,918*l*. silver bullion uncoined, at 66s. per lb. troy; 26,461*l*. copper bullion at 224*l*. per ton; 1,332*l*. silver coin in the stronghold; 3,909*l*. copper coin in the same place; and 10,067*l*. cash balance at the Bank of England. The sums issued out of the Consolidated Fund for the purchase of silver and copper bullion for coinage during the course of the year 1844 amounted altogether to 550,000*l*. The purchase value of silver bullion and dollars bought up during the same period for the purposes above mentioned amounted to 559,744*l*. making together with 1,389*l*. 17s. of gold procured by refining process from silver ingots purchased for coinage, a sum total of 561,134*l*. The market price of the silver varied from 57¾d. to 60⅜d. per oz. The mint value at 66s. per pound troy (or 5s. 6d. per oz.), amounted to 608,308*l*. The loss on the purchase of worn silver for coinage amounted to 5,462*l*. and the seignorage (the difference between the market and mint value) to 64,026*l*. The silver thus purchased consisted chiefly of dollars and bars, with old shillings and sixpences. The amount of copper bullion purchased (from Syms, Willyams, and Co.) was 39*l*. 17s. 2d. purchase value, and 109*l*. 4s. mint value (at 224*l*. a ton), leaving a seignorage of 69*l*. 6s. 10d. The total amount of silver coin or moneys, delivered into the Mint-office during the year 1844 was 627,670*l*.; and that of copper coin, 7,246*l*. The receipts on the cash account for silver and copper coin amounted, during the year, to 531,893*l*. and the payments made into the Exchequer out of the cash received for silver and copper moneys, to 560,068*l*. including 501,389*l*. on account for repayment of advances out of the Consolidated Fund for purchase of bullion, and 58,678*l*. paid on account of seignorage. The annual accounts of the master of the mint with her Majesty's Exchequer, up to December 31 1844, close the list of returns. It appears that the total receipts from the mint (for which the master was debtor) amounted to 794,031*l*. 6s. 10d. and the total payments (by which he was creditor), to 565,588*l*. leaving an amount of assets in the mint, on the 31st of December 1844, of 228,448*l*.; consisting chiefly of silver and copper bullion uncoined, silver and copper coin, and dues from the Paymaster-General for silver and copper coin. The cash balance amounted to 15,282*l*.

Bills in Progress.

BAIL IN ERROR ON MISDEMEANORS.

The following is the Lord Chancellor's Bill to stay execution of judgment for misdemeanors upon giving bail in error.

1. That in every case of judgment for a misdemeanor where the defendant or defendants shall have obtained a writ of error to reverse such judgment, execution thereupon shall be stayed, or in case execution shall have issued, all further proceedings upon such execution shall be suspended, until such writ of error shall be finally determined; and in case the defendant or defendants shall be imprisoned under such execution, or any fine shall have been levied, either in whole or in part, in pursuance of such judgment, the said defendant or defendants shall be entitled to be released from imprisonment, and to receive back any money levied on account of such fine, until such final determination as aforesaid: Provided always, that no execution upon any such judgment shall be stayed or suspended unless and until the defendant or defendants shall become bound by recognizance, to be acknowledged either in the same court in which the judgment shall have been given, or before any one of the judges of her Majesty's superior Courts, with two sufficient sureties, to be approved of by such Court or judge, in such sum as such Court or judge shall direct, to prosecute the writ of error with effect, and in case the judgment shall be affirmed, to pay the amount of any fine which may have been imposed on the said defendant or defendants by the said judgment, and to render the said defendant or defendants to prison, according to the said judgment, where imprisonment shall have been adjudged.

2. That where judgment upon such writ of error shall be affirmed, and imprisonment shall have been adjudged, the period for its continuance in pursuance of such judgment, if such imprisonment shall not have commenced under such execution, shall be reckoned to begin from the day when such defendant or defendants shall be in actual custody under such judgment; and if the defendant or defendants shall have been released from imprisonment in manner hereinbefore provided, such defendant or defendants shall be liable to be imprisoned for such further period as, with the time during which such defendant or defendants may already have been imprisoned under such execution, shall be equal to the period for which such defendant or defendants was or were so adjudged to be imprisoned as aforesaid.

3. That if the Court in which any such writ of error shall be pending shall upon motion in that behalf decide that the defendant or defendants by whom it shall be brought has or have wilfully delayed or neglected to prosecute the same with effect, it shall be lawful for such Court to order the writ of error to be quashed, and thereupon the defendant or defendants who brought such writ of error shall be liable to execution upon the judgment; and if the defendant or defendants be not forthwith rendered as aforesaid to the custody of the proper officer, the recognizance shall be forfeited in the same manner as if the judgment had been affirmed.

THE NEW PAROCHIAL SETTLEMENT BILL.

The following is an abstract of the principal provisions of a new Bill "to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to Parochial Settlement, and to the Removal of the Poor," which was prepared and brought into the House of Commons a short time since by Sir J. R. G. Graham, bart. and Mr. H. M. Sutton, M.P. the Secretary and Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department. It contains just 50 clauses.

Clause 1 enacts the repeal of so much of former Acts of Parliament as relates to settlement in parishes, and to the removal of the poor, whether English, Scotch, or Irish, or of the isles of Man, Scilly, Jersey, or Guernsey.

Clauses 2 to 5 inclusive relate to "settlement." Persons born before the passing of this Act are to retain their settlements. Other settlements are declared,—1, Birth settlement; 2, Father's settlement; and 3, Mother's settlement.

No settlement to be derived from a grandfather, grandmother, or more remote ancestor. The place of birth must be proved by a reference to the register of birth or baptism. Children born in union workhouses to be settled where their mothers are chargeable; and those born in district asylums, hospitals, prisons, &c. are not to have a birth, but the mother's settlement.

Clause 6, relating to "chargeability," enacts that unsettled persons shall be relieved at the charge of the parish where they are destitute, until lawfully removed.

Clauses 7 to 18 relate to the subject of "removals." Persons chargeable to a parish in which they are not settled are declared liable to be removed to the parishes of their settlement, with a reservation in favour of 1. Married women, who are not to be removed from their husbands. 2. Legitimate children, which are not to be removed from their father's parish. 3. Legitimate and bastard children, which are not to be removed from their mothers. 4. Widows and their families, not to be removable for a year after the husband's death. 5. Widows, who are not to be removed from the place of their husband's settlement and death. 6. Persons chargeable through sickness, not to be removed until they have received relief for forty days.

No removal is to be made until forty days' notice to the other parish, unless the removal be previously submitted to. In cases of appeal, the removal must remain suspended until the appeal be decided.

Clauses 19 to 24 provide for appeals against warrants of removal, &c.

Clauses 27 to 32 provide for the removal of the poor born in Scotland, Ireland, and the various island dependencies of the kingdom.

We now approach the most important portion of the Bill, commencing at clause 33, which enacts that the Poor Law Commissioners shall, as soon as may be, without any such agreement by the guardians as is required by the 33rd section of the Act 4 & 5 William 4, c. 76, proceed, by an order under their hands and seal, to declare every union of parishes constituted, or to be hereafter constituted, under the said Act, a union for the purposes of settlement, and shall specify in every such order the day, being not less than fourteen days after the date thereof, when the same shall come into force.

To carry out the Government scheme of centralization to the fullest extent, clause 35 enacts, that "it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, if they see fit, but not otherwise, to declare any union of parishes under any local Act, to be a union for the purpose of settlement, in the same manner and with the same consequences as if such union were constituted under the provisions of the Act 4 & 5 William 4, c. 76."

Thenceforward all the parishes in every union declared for the purposes of settlement will become as one parish for the purposes of settlement and removal, and every pauper who would otherwise be deemed to be settled in any parish in the union will be deemed to be settled in such union, and not in any parish.

The declaration of such union is to be notified to the clerks of the peace, and published in the London Gazette. The guardians are empowered by clause 38 to proceed and act in matters of settlement and removal, and to take up proceedings (by clause 39) commenced before the declaration of the union.

Clause 40 contains a proviso, which seems to confer an important, if not unconstitutional power, upon the Poor Law Commissioners. It enacts, "That the said commissioners shall, before declaring any union for the purposes of settlement, ascertain the amount of poor-rate levied in each parish in the said union for the seven years ending on the 25th day of March, 1845, and, after deducting from such amount all sums actually paid for county, borough, or police rate, or for contributions in the nature of county, borough, or police rate, they shall, by an order under their hands and seal, fix and declare the said average amount of rates levied for each parish in each union." The expenses are thenceforth to be charged according to the averages declared by the commissioners. The overseers are strictly required to assess, levy, and collect the sums ordered by the guardians.

Relief is to be given by the overseers in sudden and urgent necessity, and to be charged to the parish.

The guardians of parishes are to have the like powers, as to settlement and removal, as the guardians of unions.

This and the Poor Law Act are to be construed as one Act. This Act is limited to England and Wales, except so far as relates to the removal of paupers born in other parts of the United Kingdom.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

COMMON LAW COURTS PROCESS.

MONDAY, March 3.—Lord CAMPBELL moved the second reading of three Bills to enable actions to be carried on in the three divisions of the United Kingdom—England, Ireland, and Scotland—without the necessity of personal process within the jurisdiction of the Courts respectively.—Viscount MELBOURNE hoped that care would be taken that the parties served should have due notice. The LORD CHANCELLOR and Lord CAMPBELL said, that a clause to that effect was introduced into the Bills.—Lord BROUGHAM was exceedingly friendly to the principle of the Bills, but objected to some of the details. He should therefore give his assent to the second reading. The Bills were then read a second time.

COURTS OF COMMON LAW PROCESS BILLS.

Lord CAMPBELL moved the orders of the day for going into committee upon the three Bills (for England, Ireland, and Scotland) upon this subject. The noble and learned lord intimated that he had made an amendment, by which he proposed that the service of process abroad must be by a British subject.—Lord BROUGHAM said that that alteration removed, in a great degree, his objection to that part of the Bill. Notaries in France, and many parts of Germany, were highly respectable men, but that might not be the case in other parts of the continent of Europe: and it would not do for parties to suffer judgment against them, perhaps to an immense amount, before they even knew that proceedings at law had been commenced against them through the perjury of persons who were not within the jurisdiction of British tribunals. He would consult with his noble and learned friend whether some such course as this might not answer the object, that a judge should give an order indicating in what way service should be made, as, for example, if the party were in France, or say any spot where the intervention of a notary on the spot would be satisfactory, that there service might be made by such notary; but if the party were in a place where such a course might not be deemed safe, that then the service must be made by a British subject.—The LORD CHANCELLOR suggested, as the subject was one of great importance, that the report upon the bill should be deferred until after the Easter vacation. He wished to see what the operation would be in regard to the courts of equity.—Lord CAMPBELL assented, and after a few words from Lord Ashburton, the House went into committee upon the three bills respectively, and the reports were ordered to be received on the first day after Easter.

MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT.—Borough of Shaftesbury, Richard Brinsley Sheridan, esq. in the room of Henry Howard, esq. commonly called Lord Howard, now Earl of Effingham, called up to the House of Peers; County of Kent, Eastern Division, William Deedes, esq. of Sandling, in the county of Kent, in the room of the Right Honourable Sir Edward Knatchbull, Bart. who has accepted the office of Steward of her Majesty's Chiltern Hundreds.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

No topic claims special notice this week.

REVIEW OF MAGISTRATES' CASES.

GAME ACT—CONVICTION.

IN the case of Fletcher v. Calthorpe and Another (14 Law Jour. M. C. 49), the principle of previous decisions was strongly affirmed and illustrated, to the effect that it is not always sufficient in a conviction or indictment founded upon a statute, to pursue its exact terms. It has been so held in Paley on Convictions. The safer rule is that it is sufficient to follow the terms of the statute, only where they are themselves sufficient; which virtually removes all exclusive dependence on them. In Lord DENMAN's words in the judgment before us—"Whenever a certain act is made punishable by summary conviction, which act may be lawful if performed under certain circumstances, these circumstances ought to be negatived in the conviction. None of us doubt that when the proof must negative such circumstance, the allegation in the instrument of conviction ought to do the same. This principle is well expressed on a similar, although not exactly the same occasion, in Reg. v. Baines (2 Ld. Raym. 1265)."

In the Game Act, 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, s. 1, it is merely declared, that "if any person, &c. shall, by night, unlawfully enter, or be in any land, whether open or inclosed, with any gun, net, engine, or other instrument, for the purpose of taking or destroying game, such offender shall, upon conviction thereof," &c. Now this does not happen to specify any offence at all, or rather does not specify that which the Act intends to make unlawful, for a man might do all the words specify, and enter upon land, &c. with intent to cross over it for the purpose of taking game, not there, but elsewhere, and on his own land. In the case in point the conviction merely followed the words of the statute, omitting entirely to aver that it was there, in the said land, that the defendant meant to take the game. An action of trespass was brought for the arrest and imprisonment on this conviction; the conviction in the words of the statute was pleaded in defence, and in the case before us held bad, on the ground we have stated. It was argued, indeed, that the facts of the case might be supplied in evidence, and that so it might be shewn that the defendant had, in fact, committed the act intended to be declared unlawful; but the Act cannot extend the protection of its omissions to those of a conviction, and Lord DENMAN said, "Proceedings in cases of this nature, which are to deprive a man of his freedom in a summary way, without letting him be tried by his peers, are always to be construed strictly, and never supplied by intendment of matter which does not appear on the face of them." This is a useful rule for the observance of all persons concerned in this branch of magisterial jurisdiction. The mere averment of its being an unlawful act is not enough. It was expressly ruled in this case that that would not suffice. "We do not know," says the judgment, "in what sense that word was used. The justices may have thought it unlawful to enter into the close with the remotest purpose of killing game, or they may possibly mean that the entry was unlawful, as a trespass on the land of another. If such was their meaning, the fact ought to have been averred."

PAUPER LUNATICS.

There was a Bail Court decision last Term, which it may be worth while to note (Reg. v. The Justices of Cornwall, 14 Law Jour. M. C. 46), to the effect that justices for a borough have not jurisdiction to send a pauper lunatic, who is chargeable to the borough, to a county lunatic asylum, under 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, s. 38; and that orders to pay a certain sum to the treasurer of the asylum must shew that such was the sum fixed on.

THE NEW SETTLEMENT BILL.

THE new Settlement Bill is, to a certain extent, substantially the same as the last, to which, during the Long Vacation, we directed the notice of our readers; and we believe it was through the influence of the remarks we then made that some objectionable provisions of the defunct Bill were denounced by the country, and have been abandoned by the Government.

Passing by without comment those parts of this Bill which are a repetition of the last Bill, and dwelling only on its novelties, we proceed to give an analysis of the entire measure.

REPEAL.—The first section repeals all the existing statute laws of settlement.

SETTLEMENT.—Sec. 2 provides that "every person who was born on or before the day of the passing of this Act shall, on the day succeeding the passing of this Act be deemed to be settled by this Act in the parish in which he was, or would have been lawfully settled if this Act had not been passed." Lawfully settled when? Does it mean at the time the Act passes, so that people are to retain the settlement they then had? If so, why, in the name of common sense and our mother tongue, is it not so stated? One side of this alternative in the clause is stark nonsense—"the parish in which he was lawfully settled if this Act had not been passed. Is there any new tax recently imposed in plain English that the concocters of Bills cannot be induced to use it? We guess that they meant in this clause to say "that all persons born on or before the day of the passing of this Act shall thenceforth have and retain the settlement they lawfully possessed on the day of the passing of this Act, and shall thenceforth acquire no other settlement." The operation of the clause as it stands is confined by its express terms to the day succeeding the passing of the Act; it has no force or effect either before or after the day! Between the "was" and the "would have been," there is practically no difference, and the distinction exists, if at all, in the brain of the writer, supposing him to have had any definite idea of what he meant himself, which we much question. We do not apologize for thus stopping to censure the imbecility of the persons who are employed thus to dabble in legislation. It is a great, grievous, and growing evil, and a scandal of no small magnitude, which we feel bound to reprobate. Bills are constantly being passed into statutes which (to say nothing of their immethodical arrangement) are written in language and grammar which would discredit the lowest class in a ladies' boarding-school.

Several of the succeeding sections, being substantially the same as in the preceding Bill, we shall merely recapitulate them.

Sec. 3 provides that hereafter there shall be, 1st, Birth Settlement; or, 2nd, Father's Settlement; or, 3rd, Mother's Settlement. No settlement to be derived from grandfather, grandmother, or more remote ancestor. Sec. 4. That the place of birth shall be proved by Register of Birth or Baptism. By sec. 5 it is provided that children born in union workhouses shall be settled where their mothers are chargeable; and that children born in district asylums, hospitals, prisons, &c. or while their mothers are under orders of removal, shall not have a birth settlement, but shall take their parent's settlement.

Next, as regards Chargeability:—Sec. 6 declares that unsettled persons are to be relieved at the charge of the "parish" where they are destitute, as if they were settled there, until they are lawfully removed, or their destitution there is lawfully at an end.

With respect to Removal, sec. 7 renders persons chargeable to a "parish" in which they are not settled liable to be removed to the parishes of their settlement, with a reservation in the cases of—1. Married women, who are not to be removed from their husbands. 2. Legitimate children, who are not to be removed from their father's parish. 3. Legitimate and bastard children, who are not to be removed from their mothers. 4. Widows and their families, who are not to be removable for a year after the husband's death. 5. Widows are not to be removed from the place of their husband's settlement and death. 6. Persons chargeable through sickness are not to be removed until relieved forty days. Sec. 8 declares that, except as excepted, no person shall be removable to any other parish than that in which they are settled. Sec. 9 gives power to overseers to admit settlements, and agree to amicable removals. Sec. 10 provides for the summons of persons liable to be removed; their examination; the warrant for their removal; and for the examination of persons who cannot attend the summons. This replaces in substance the previous law. Sec. 11 provides that no removal be made until after forty days' notice, unless the removal be previously submitted to. In case of appeal, the removal is not to be made until such appeal is ended, which replaces the existing law. By sec. 12, overseers, or persons employed by them, may execute the warrant of removal. And by sec. 13, parish officers procuring removals without warrant are made subject to penalties of from forty shillings to five pounds, in all cases where they induce bribe or procure poor persons to go to other parishes and there become chargeable. This clause, if better worded, will do great good. Sec. 14 provides for the delivery of paupers under warrants of removal, at the workhouse of a parish or Union, which is to be regarded as delivery to the overseers. Sec. 15 provides for suspension of the removal and recovery of the charges incurred by such suspension; appeal where such charges exceed ten pounds. By sec. 16, overseers may abandon a warrant of removal, paying the costs caused to the other party. By sec. 17 the, clerk of the justices to transmit a duplicate of every warrant of removal, and the original depositions to the clerk of the peace. By sec. 18, the clerk of the peace, on application, is to furnish copies to the overseers of the parish to which the removal is directed to be made.

We have received the following from our valued correspondent, upon the subject which we had suggested for the consideration of our readers:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—You confess surprise at the great increase of appeals relating to cases of parochial settlement within the last four years, and wish for some explanation from your correspondents as to the cause thereof. If you refer to the LAW TIMES of the 18th January last, you will find my letter thereon to contain the leading features to the explanation you require; for, as the present law stands, the appellants and respondents cannot, on the trial, give any evidence beyond what is contained in the pauper's examination and the grounds of appeal; and so many objections have arisen, and are continually taken, on the legal and clerical errors and defects relating to these examinations, and grounds of appeal, and the orders of removal, that little reliance can be placed on the real merits affecting the pauper's settlement, consequently a very great number of appeals are prosecuted solely on these grounds of objection.

It is next to impossible, in the limits of a letter, to trace all the causes of increase in appeals; suffice it, that after the passing of the late Poor Law Act in 1834, for the first five or six years. these appeals were reduced into a small compass; but after the decisions in Ex parte Broseley (7 A. & E. 423), and Clint v. Bristwith (10 A. & E. 685, and 11 A. & E. 624), with some other similar cases, the attention of counsel was drawn to the defectiveness of this law; the consequence was, they have ever since been raising and prosecuting ingenious. and very frequently successful, objections to the examinations and grounds of appeal, and the circumstances connected therewith. This has caused such a great degree of uncertainty, as unquestionably to have given rise to the increase in appeals.

I observe you class the determinations of the appeals in certain positions, which shew a considerable proportion thereof to be on the actual merits; but this calculation would be found, if it were possible to arrive at the real facts, very erroneous; for instance, I have mentioned two cases in my letter, viz. Ex parte Broseley, and Clint v. Bristwith; in both these cases the respondents went into the real merits on which their case relied; on the cross-examination of witnesses, the appellants elicited proofs contrary to the pauper's examination, simply as to the year of service, viz. in 1810, instead of 1813, and the holding of a farm in 1826, and not in 1827, and which were in both instances considered fatal by the Court, and the orders were quashed, refusing a case; consequently, although in fact the decision of the Court was on objection taken to clerical errors or a variance between the evidence and the pauper's examination; yet as no grounds for such decision were assigned, the appeals were considered to be ended on the merits: and a very considerable number of the cases included in your number of 547, if the real facts could be ascertained, would, I have no doubt, bear this construction. In fact the uncertainty of parochial appeals is such, that it is impossible to define it. You will see that in all cases where the respondents' case is fully gone into, if the orders are quashed by the Court, without assigning the grounds on which they determine (which very frequently occurs, and almost invariably if a case for the Court of Queen's Bench is refused), then the case assumes the character of being decided on the merits, although it is as clear as noon-day that the real cause arises from such defects as I have pointed out, and which the Court of Quarter Sessions refuse to particularise, for the express purpose of avoiding further litigation; for without doing so their determination is final.

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS HOUSE.—Mr. Edmondes, who has long officiated as deputy clerk of the peace, has been compelled, through ill-health, to vacate his appointment, and has been succeeded by Mr. Arthur Grey Maude, who has been called to the bar, on the recommendation of the assistant judge, to enable him to fill the situation.

James Allan Maconochie, esq. Sheriff of Orkney and Shetland, died last week in his 56th year. He was called to the Scotch Bar in 1813, and, in various capacities, has rendered important public services.

The Gazette contains notices that the following places have been duly registered for the solemnization of marriages therein:—Baptist Chapel, Kingsbridge, Devonshire; Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, Guiseley, Yorkshire; Independent Chapel, Kenilworth, Warwickshire; Baptist Chapel, South Shields, Durham.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THIS week enables us to complete the written judgments of the Common Law Courts, and until the beginning of next Term, we shall again have space to bring up some of the heavy arrears of matter which have accumulated during the necessary preference given to the reports. To clear off a portion of these arrears we abbreviate the usual commentaries, merely referring the reader to the very important judgments published to-day.

Commission signed by the Lord Lieutenant of the county of Cumberland—Charles Jolliffe, esq. to be Deputy Lieutenant.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Attorney-General and Lady Follett, accompanied by their two eldest daughters, arrived in Park-street, on Saturday last, from Italy. The learned Attorney-General's health has greatly improved, indeed, we may say, been restored. He came from Italy by way of Marseilles and Paris.

Privileges of a Felon.—At the Middlesex Sessions last week, a gentleman of highly respectable appearance (whose name we could supply) claimed exemption from serving on the jury on the ground of having been convicted of felony, and tendered documentary evidence to that effect amidst roars of laughter. Mr. Serjeant Adams held the objection good, but observed he was only surprised that any person should disgrace himself by pleading such an unenviable privilege.—Globe.

Will of the Earl of Limerick.—Probate of the will, limited to property in England, of the Right Hon. Edmund Henry, Earl of Limerick, late of Mansfield-street, in the parish of Marylebone, Middlesex, and of South-hill park, in the county of Berks, who died on the 27th December, 1844, has just been proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, by the executors, the Hon. Edmund Sexten Pery, the son; the Right Hon. Thomas Spring Lord Monteagle; and George Lake Russell, esq. of Lincoln's-inn, the son-in-law; power reserved to Matthew Barrington, esq. of Dublin, to prove hereafter. The personal estate in England, and within the province of Canterbury, is sworn under 30,000*l.* To his wife, Alice Mary, Countess of Limerick, he leaves his house in Mansfield-street, together with the furniture and all things therein (except plate, pictures, and securities), and that she may also select what plate, pictures, ornaments, and jewellery she pleases from the houses at Mansfield-street and South-hill-park, and furniture from the latter, for her own use absolutely. He directs his estates to be sold, except the house at Mansfield-street; and after bequeathing pecuniary legacies to the Countess and to his daughter, Lady Caroline, and 500*l.* to each of his executors, leaves the residue to the Countess for life. —Historical Register.

Will of Sir George Grey.—The will and codicil of the Hon. Sir Henry George Grey, G.C.B. a general in her Majesty's army, formerly of Falloden, in the county of Northumberland, and late of Hertford-street, May-fair, in the county of Middlesex, who died at the latter place on the 11th of January last, at the age of seventy-nine, has just been proved in Doctors' Commons by Lady Grey, widow, the relict, and sole executrix. The trustees are his nephews, the Right Hon. Sir George Grey, bart. and Lord Viscount Howick. Lady Grey is to receive the interest, dividends, and proceeds arising from the trust-moneys for life; then to his nephews, the said Sir George, and William Grey, the son of his brother, the Hon. Lieut.-Col. William Grey. The will is dated 23rd November, 1842; the testator then speaks of his being of infirm body, though of sound mind. The signature to the will is in the handwriting of Mr. Bromley, at the desire of the deceased, and in these words, "Henry George Grey, by William Bromley, expressly directed and authorized by him;" with testator's seal attached. The codicil was made in September, 1844, by which he leaves to his wife's brother, Lieut.-Colonel Benfield Des Vœux, the sum of 2,400*l.* which had been invested in the funds, being part of the fortune he received with his wife. This codicil is signed, in the deceased's name, by Lady Grey, at the direction and in the presence of the deceased. The personal estate within the province of Canterbury is sworn under 120,000*l.*—Ibid.

Will of Thomas Read Kemp, Esq.—The original will and three codicils of the late Thomas Read Kemp, esq. formerly of Brighthelmstone, in the county of Sussex, but late of the city of Paris, who died in that city in December last, has been transmitted to this country, and is now deposited in the Registry of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. Probate was granted on the 29th January, 1845, to Frances Margaretta Kemp, widow, the relict and sole executrix. The will is dated 21st September, 1835, was executed in Brighton, and witnessed by the respective signatures of Messrs. George, Henry, and W. John Faithful, solicitors of that town. He leaves to his wife the leasehold dwelling in which the family have resided at Paris, and directs that when any part of his real and personal estate or other property in England is sold, the same, with all other unemployed capital, shall be invested in good securities, to accumulate and form a fund for a period of ten years, as a means to pay off the charges on the Brighthelmstone estate, and that no further charges shall be made thereon; devises his estate at Brighthelmstone to Frederick Shakerley Kemp, his son by his present wife, and bequeaths to him a legacy of 5,000*l.*; the like sum to any after-born children; and bequeaths to the nine children by his first wife, Frances, the daughter of — Baring, esq. a sum exceeding 42,000*l.* out of his real estates. The first codicil is dated 2nd August, 1839, and witnessed by the Hon. and Rev. Lord Edward Chichester, and his son, Mr. George Chichester, and brother-in-law, R. S. Grady, 14th Regiment. The personal estate is of small amount. —Ibid.

The Will of the late Sir Charles Frederick Williams, Knight, of No. 46, Hyde-park-square, Paddington, late one of the Commissioners in the Court of Bankruptcy, who died on the 17th of January last, has just been proved in Doctors' Commons by Lady Elizabeth Wylde Williams, widow, the relict and sole executrix. He bequeaths the Goose-ham or Gorsham estate, in the county of Cornwall, and about twenty acres of land contiguous thereto, to which he had lately succeeded, to Lady Williams and her heirs for ever. The will is dated 6th January, 1845, and very short; it is in Sir Charles's handwriting; witnesses to the execution, James Manning, serjeant-at-law, and W. H. Hadding, surgeon. Personal estate sworn under 4,000*l.*—Ibid.

Lord Western.—The will and four codicils of the Right Hon. Charles Callis, Lord Western, Baron Western, of Rivenhall, Essex, but late of Felix Hall, in the same county, who died on the 4th of November, 1844, have just been proved in Doctors' Commons by the executors and trustees, the Rev. Sir John Page Wood, bart. clerk, of Cressing, Essex, and James Western, esq. of Great James-street, Bedford-row, Middlesex; power reserved to Henry Carlton Tufnell, esq. of Cavendish-square, Middlesex, to prove hereafter. Personal estate sworn under 35,000*l.* The will and first codicil bear the same date, 27th April, 1844. He devises his manors, advowsons, &c. and all farms, lands, tenements, and real and personal estate, after payment of several annuities and legacies, to Thomas Burch Western, esq. one of the sons of the late Admiral Western, and to his issue; bequeaths by the codicils numerous small annuities and legacies; among others, to his book-keeper a legacy of 200*l.* and an annuity of 50*l.* for his life, and 30*l.* a-year for the life of his wife, expecting him to assist his trustees in making out their accounts; to his bailiff, a legacy and an annuity of 20*l.*; to his shepherd, 20*l.* a-year, to be continued to his wife if she survives him; to his servants, a year's wages; and to his ploughmen and out-door labourers a legacy of a few pounds each. His lordship appears, by the number of legatees named in his will and codicils, to have remembered all persons in his employ and service, leaving to them by name some kind of bequest.—Ibid.

Right Hon. Frederick St. John.—The will and two codicils of the Hon. Frederick St. John, late of Roe-heath Cottage, near Lewes, in the county of Sussex, a general of her Majesty's forces, who died on the 19th November, 1844, have just been proved in Doctors' Commons by the executors, Charles George Beauclerk, esq. of St. Leonard's Lodge, Sussex, and Thomas Baverstock Merriman, esq. solicitor, Marlborough. Personal estate sworn under 14,000*l.* The chief bequests are to his wife; and his books to his daughter, Mrs. Goring. His estates in Sussex and Middlesex to be sold; [illegible] sums under settlements, and all other claims on his estate, leaves the residue to his wife for life, and after her decease two-thirds to go to his son, Robert William St. John, and the remaining one-third to his other sons, Henry St. John and Welbore St. John. The will is dated August 11, 1841, and contained in sixteen sheets of paper; the tenth sheet, giving to the amount of two legacies of 100*l.* each being written thereon in pencil, has been re-copied since applying for probate, bearing the signatures of two notaries at the foot thereof. The codicils are in the deceased's handwriting, the first of which, dated the 1st September, 1842, has a portion of it cut out by the the testator just above his signature in the middle of the page, and beneath the space in the page underneath is written by the testator these words:—"This slip of paper cut out by me subsequent to the execution of my codicil."

[The twenty-first section of the Act provides for this:—"The will, with such alteration as part thereof, shall be deemed to be duly executed if the signature of the testator and the subscription of the witnesses be made in the margin, or on some other part of the will opposite or near to such alteration."]—Ibid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LAW OF SETTLEMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I observe, by the newspapers, Sir James Graham meditates proposing a Bill to amend the Act of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, so far as that Act relates to orders of affiliation.

I take the liberty of addressing you on this subject, and I avail myself of the opportunity of humbly offering to you some remarks on the drafting and getting up Acts of Parliament, a subject which seems to be taking fast hold of public attention.

Any Act which has reference to the poor ought to be framed with unusual care, for this reason, that it relates to a class who have no money and little power to get legal relief for wrongs which, as in this case, may amount to total misery and absolute privation.

First. The Act in question begins with a repeal of all former power on the putative father, so that all illegitimate children born one hour before the six months preceding the 9th August, 1844, have now no remedy whatever.

It is true that by the operation of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76 (practically but little alleviated by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85) this remedy was, perhaps, a mockery of justice, but it ought not to have been destroyed in this summary and reckless manner.

I submit that this amending Act may safely and justly give a retrospective effect for a period of two years, provided there be proof that, during that period, the father has made any payment in support of his offspring.

Secondly. The third section gives the woman, before birth, no remedy whatever. The Act is absurd in this respect, for the while it states that a woman with child may make application, and the magistrates issue a summons, it contains no power to make any order until after birth, or to secure the appearance of the putative father after that event has happened. I submit that the re-enactment of some such provisions as those of the 49 Geo.3, c. 68, would be useful, and, indeed, is indispensable in this respect.

By this same section the order cannot be enforced until after one month from the date of its making. Why should not the order be capable of enforcement within twenty-four hours? It is a monstrous and unnecessary hardship on the mother that, after being deprived for months of all means of subsistence, save, probably, from charity, she would have to wait a month for any retribution. This show of consideration towards the father seems to be singularly misplaced and unfair, when, by clause 6, the woman neglecting to maintain the child is at once liable to be committed to the house of correction, under the Vagrant Act.

Thirdly. With respect to the form of order, I would suggest that the amending Act should give a form. This mode, indeed, of constructing Acts of this sort, relating to persons of the humbler classes of society, is particularly necessary, and, indeed, there should be a clause generally to the effect that no proceeding should be void for defect of form provided the substantial fact or matter was alleged in such form.

Litigation on these subjects on points of law or mere matters of form is not only very absurd, but positively very cruel. The woman has not the means to defray even the magistrates' clerk's fees, much less to meet all the chances of an appeal to the Quarter Sessions, or, as in a recent case, to the Court of Queen's Bench.

The point of trial, in whatever court it may happen to be, should be simply one of the fact of paternity. Of course, I do not mean to suggest that there should be an absence of all form; and for that reason I suggest that the form should be given in the Act. It is impossible not to read the case of Rex v. Justices of [illegible] (as very ably reported in the Law Times of the 1st of February), and not to be struck with the gross libel on all common sense and honesty which that case developes. There is an order (one of the Lumley orders so called) made as intentional and as plain upon the Act as words can be well made to import the meaning of ideas—a string of objections is spun upon it at an expense probably of some twenty or thirty pounds!!! and the unfortunate woman gets ruined upon a matter of form utterly dehors any real fact or merit of the case. I would suggest that the amending Act gives a retrospective power to make new orders in all the cases which have occurred under the statute. Mr. Lumley is one of the assistant Poor Law Commissioners, who, of course, promoted the very Act in question; he publishes, with all the weight of his authority, the forms of orders which have been universally adopted, and they are found "fatally defective!!!"—and possibly all those poor persons for whose relief they were made may now be without means of attaining it, as it may be doubtful how far any order already made can be superseded or abandoned, and another substituted.

I should guard myself against its being supposed that I mean one word of offence towards Mr. Lumley. He went the Oxford circuit, was a revising barrister on this circuit, and, to my own knowledge, is an able, accomplished, and most kindly disposed man. In my own humble judgment, the objections against his order were so many mere crotchets, and hardly to be tolerated in the year 1845. Still as such objections always will be raised, and as judges are perplexed when cases are found to support them (whatever their own more enlightened views may be), it is highly important in all matters of controversy relating to poor persons who have not one farthing wherewith to defend themselves, that they be not the subjects or the victims of such wordy subtleties. And now allow me to address some few observations on the mode of drafting Bills and carrying them through a committee of the House of Commons. I say the House of Commons, for in point of fact most important Bills originate and are settled there.

(To be concluded next week.)

COSTS OF COUNTRY ATTORNEYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—The complaint of "a Country Attorney" in your last number respecting the practice of London attorneys sending down writs and other agency business to be done, and generally requesting immediate attendance to it, and then forgetting to pay your charges, is of too frequent occurrence, I am sorry to say. At the end of their letter they generally add, "your charges shall be paid as directed." This complaint, however, applies to country equally as well as London firms.

It is my custom, on sending in agency charges, always to request the solicitors to send me a post-office order for their amount by return of post, but I very seldom receive one. I sincerely trust that parties owing small agencies will take the hint from your valuable paper, and pay up the same; always bearing in mind that short reckonings make long friends.

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,
George John Parsons.
Haslemere, March 6, 1845.

LORD BROUGHAM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—For reasons best known to himself, Lord Brougham last night appears to have denied the paternity of the Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. I beg, however, to state, that when the printed Bill was first issued from the Parliament Office, it bore this indorsement—"Presented by the Lord Brougham and Vaux." This fact is an answer, as I humbly conceive, to his lordship's assertion.

I am yours, &c.
City, March 5, 1845. H. Grainger.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"An Attorney" (Dorchester) throws out the following suggestions on "The Rogues' Indemnity Act."

A very appropriate title indeed is the above which, in your Law Times of the 22nd Feb. last, you have given to Lord Brougham's Act for the abolishment of imprisonment for debts under 20*l.*

Some immediate remedy must, however, be given for this great evil; otherwise ere long the little tradesmen and shopkeepers will be ruined. All are inquiring how they are to recover debts under 20*l.* This question puzzles even the lawyers; they can inform their clients what are the proceedings, but as to recovering under the existing law, that is another question. If an action is commenced, and judgment obtained by default, nine times out of ten, the debtor gets rid of his effects in the interim. I have known them dispose of the same by auction on being served with notice of declaration, &c. The creditor is thereby saddled with costs, in addition to the loss of his debt, and gets laughed at by his debtor into the bargain. Oftentimes a plea is filed without a shadow of defence, in the hope that the creditor will not incur the expense of a trial.

Might not this latter step be prevented, by requiring an affidavit, in all cases before a defendant is allowed to plead, that he had a good defence on the merits? If he had such defence, where would be the hardship? And if he had not, why should a defendant be allowed vexatiously to drive a plaintiff to trial?

Your correspondent "P." asks why particulars of plaintiff's demand should not be served with the writ. For my part, I never could see that any benefit resulted to a plaintiff or defendant by the writ; but that it only unnecessarily increased costs, as in very many instances it gives no information whatever to the defendant.

Could not all actions be commenced by declaration (as in ejectment), with a notice and particulars, &c. with a demand of plea within eight days from notice? A defendant would then at once know what the plaintiff was suing for. Let there be three copies—one to be filed in the Declaration-office, one to be served, and the other to keep. At the expiration of the eight days, in default of plea, the plaintiff to have the power of signing final judgment. If this should be thought too quick a proceeding, let such judgment be interlocutory only; and in the latter case, empower a judge at chambers, upon production of the copy declaration and affidavit of personal service, to make an order nisi for final judgment, unless cause shewn within a certain period, and in default thereof judgment to be signed and execution issued. The costs of a proceeding like this would not be much.

You suggest that power should be given to a plaintiff, in all actions for debts under 20*l.*, upon a return of nulla bona by the sheriff to any fi. fa. issued, to summon his debtor before the Court of Bankruptcy; but with all due deference to you, I would ask why he should not be enabled to do this in the first instance upon judgment, if he choose to select that mode? as driving a plaintiff to issue execution where there were no goods, would only entail unnecessary delay and expense upon him.

I would observe, that Lord Brougham seems to have taken the "rogues" in an especial manner under his care; for although a plea be vexatious, &c. yet if by any sad mishap to the plaintiff a verdict should go against him by the "glorious uncertainty of the law," the debtor can still take his plaintiff in execution for the costs only; but if a plaintiff obtains a verdict for both his debt and costs, he has no such remedy. Surely it would have been but equitable that a plaintiff should have had the same remedy where a defendant drives him to trial, even if it had been taken away in cases wherein defendant lets judgment go by default.

I do not know whether Lord B. sees your paper weekly or not. If he does not, I think it would not be amiss for us to subscribe to have it sent to him, as the acknowledged organ of that Profession he so much delights to injure.

"Another Country Solicitor" writes thus. The hint is excellent:—

The complaint of a "Country Solicitor" in your last number relative to the frequent nonpayment by London practitioners of the charges made by the country solicitors, to whom they may have sent process for service, appears one for which a simple and efficacious remedy may be devised. Instead, then, of the country solicitor returning the process to the office whence he received it, let him forward the same (stating the amount of his charges) to his own London agent, who will, on receiving that amount, hand over to the attorney issuing the process the writ and affidavit, &c. The general adoption of the hint thus thrown out would put an end to the practice so justly complained of by your correspondent.

"An Articled Clerk" would feel obliged to any reader who could assist him with his experience under the following circumstances:—

Would you, or any of your subscribers, favour me with a reply to the following questions?—

By sec. 6 of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, I find any person who may be bound by contract to serve as a clerk to a practising attorney or solicitor for the term of five years may, either by virtue of any stipulation in such contract, or with the permission of such attorney or solicitor, serve one year with a barrister or special pleader, and in addition thereto, or instead thereof, with a London attorney or solicitor.

I was bound by contract in the country, and served two years and a half, when the person to whom I was articled was declared bankrupt, and between whose bankruptcy and the assignment of my articles to a London solicitor a period o. four months elapsed.

I have one year unexpired of my articles. Could I serve that time with a barrister or special pleader, with such consent as specified in the above Act, or should I serve the four months that I lost?

Can an objection be taken to the service under my articles if I do not serve the four months beyond the expiration thereof?

My articles being dated in Feb. 1841, can I be examined in Easter Term 1846?

A Subscriber relates the following incident:—

At the Middlesex Sessions on Friday, the 28th ult. Mr. Prendergast, as counsel for an appellant against an order in bastardy, took the objection that the information did not appear to have been made upon oath; but neither he, the learned Chairman, nor any of the Bar, was aware of the decision in Reg. v. Justices of Bucks (reported in 4 Law T. 341), until informed thereof by me, when the chairman directed the matter to stand over, until a report of the case could be obtained.

The last number of the Jurist, fresh from the press, was shortly afterwards handed to the Chairman, in which the case was reported, and the order was thereupon quashed. I think it but just that the vast superiority of the Law Times in conveying the earliest information on these points should be known; the case quoted having been decided on the 30th of January, and reported in that publication on the 1st of February last.

"A. T. P." submits the following hint on a subject upon which the country attorneys appear, and not without reason, to be somewhat sore:—

In reference to a remark in the Law Times of Saturday last from a country solicitor, complaining of the practice so frequently pursued by solicitors in London in neglecting to pay agency charges for service of process, &c. I beg to offer the following suggestion to those country solicitors who may be injured by the practice, viz. that they should, after their costs have remained unpaid for a certain time (say six months), and a proper refresher afforded to the memory of the defaulter, send his name to the Law Times, which journal, consistently with its invariable zeal for the promotion of honourable and fair practice amongst the Profession, would, without doubt, readily publish it. And to render this an effectual punishment to the dishonourable practitioners, solicitors in the country should make a point of refusing to serve process for those who have been so exposed. The habit of thus treating country agents is by no means confined to those who are esteemed the pettifogging class, but is well known to extend to many firms from whose standing in the Profession much better ought to be expected.

To Readers and Correspondents.

A Regular Man.—His letter on Mr. Bateman's case is excellent in tone, and truthful; but it is much too long for our columns at this busy season.

S. must keep twelve Terms. His letter is unnecessary. The objections of M. A. are so palpably fallacious that they could deceive nobody.

G. W. (Rochdale).—We regret the error, but it is very difficult to correct such minute figures.

E. J. S.—Thanks for the precedent. It shall be used as soon as leisure permits.

G. W.—If we were to notice all the malicious and spiteful things said about Attorneys we should fill our paper with them. Let us Lawyers answer popular error by honourable conduct.

W. H. A. (Cheapside).—We would gladly insert the names of the Attorneys in each case, but there is no means of procuring them.

Alpha.—The argument is good, but the subject has been so often treated in our columns that it must give place to others of more moment.

A Purchaser (Saffron Walden).—The Verulam Reports are published as often as there is sufficient matter to fill a number. Unfortunately, at present there is not encouragement for an edition of the Statutes. Not 200 orders in all were received, and less than 500 would not meet the cost.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, MARCH 8, 1845.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

The inefficient state of the Law of Debtor and Creditor, as left by Lord Brougham's legislative Frankenstein of last session, has at length fairly roused the mercantile classes in the City to a sense of the insecurity of their properties shaken by the tinkering of the noble lord. Suddenly they have found all debts below 20*l.* to be irrecoverable, and their debtors laughing at them, and they have taken the alarm, and are doing that which the Profession should long ago have urged upon their clients. They are about to appeal to Parliament for a revision of the Rogues' Indemnity Act, and a reform of the entire law of debtor and creditor. To this end an association has been formed, comprising members of many of the most respectable mercantile firms in the City, who have liberally subscribed to defray the cost of bringing the matter before Parliament; in furtherance of which object the heads of a Bill have been prepared, and are now being circulated among the trading classes for approval and suggestion. The following are the proposed provisions:—

In order to save time and expense, it is proposed—

First. That all that shall be necessary for the good service of a copy of a writ be, that it be left at once at the house of the debtor. This would save much of that trouble and expense which are now incurred by the debtor being intentionally out of the way—playing at hide-and-seek—and during which time he is often making away with his property, and preparing his schedule.

Second. That in all debts under 20*l*. the writ shall be returnable in four days.

Third. That if no appearance be put in at the expiration of four days, the plaintiff shall be sworn to his debt, and judgment shall proceed forthwith on the property of the defendant.

Fourth. That, in order to save the time and expense which are now incurred so frequently, by suitors being day after day with their witnesses in the superior courts, waiting for their case being called on, it is proposed that Courts of Requests shall have jurisdiction over all debts under 20*l*. and that the Sheriffs' Courts have jurisdiction over all debts under 100*l*.

Fifth. That a difference shall be made between a debt on a dishonoured bill of exchange, and other debts. That upon the affidavit of the holder of a dishonoured bill of exchange, before a proper officer, four days after the dishonouring of such bill, that it is bonâ fide what it professes, and that the dishonourer has had three days' notice of the dishonouring of such bill, execution upon the property of such dishonourer shall proceed at once.

Sixth. That judges shall have the power of attaching for the benefit of judgment creditors such portions of the salaries of servants—the pay or half-pay of military and naval officers—the pensions of pensioners—annuities of annuitants—or other known periodical receipts of debtors, as they shall deem fitting to the claim of such judgment creditors.

Seventh. That in order to prevent the bringing of frivolous, vexatious, and dishonourable actions for debt, and to prevent frivolous, vexatious, and dishonourable defences being set up against just and good actions, parties so bringing or defending shall, upon the certificate of the judge to that effect, suffer incarceration in a criminal prison, for a period hereafter to be determined.

Eighth. That in order to prevent collusion between landlord and tenant, to the injury of the common creditor, it is proposed that the landlord shall make affidavit before any magistrate of the amount of rent actually owing before the sheriff satisfy his claim.

Ninth. That such part of the Act, commonly called "Lord Brougham's Act," as authorizes the granting of "the interim order," and "a protection from process" to the debtor be repealed; so that when he comes up for his hearing, he may come up in custody, as before the passing of that Act.

Tenth. That in order to prevent any hostile, obstinate, or grasping judgment creditor or creditors forcing the rest of the creditors not having judgments to make the debtor a bankrupt, at great expense and sacrifice of property, in self-defence, it is proposed, that upon a representation to a judge, that the majority of creditors, both as to numbers and amount of debts, accede to the offer of a composition from the debtor, or to other arrangements, it shall be lawful for any judge, on application, to nullify such judgment or judgments, and thereby reduce such obstinate, hostile, or grasping judgment creditor or creditors to the necessity of coming in with the rest. Creditors will then get what is now swallowed up by law.

Eleventh. That no debtor be allowed to take the benefit of any Act for the relief of insolvent debtors more than once in seven years.

These propositions are of grave importance, and we purpose to consider them seriatim, in hope that our comments, which will be purely practical, and suggested by experience, may attract the notice of the parties engaged in the preparation of the measure, as also of those to whom it will be submitted for ratification in Parliament.

The first proposal, that a writ shall be served by leaving it at the house of the debtor, is excellent. But why should a writ be necessary at all? Why not at once serve declaration with a bill of particulars, and, if desirable, extend the time for pleading?

This would dispense with provisions two and three.

The fourth proposition is very objectionable. If the debt be disputed bonâ fide, the courts of requests would be wretched tribunals to try questions of such importance. If the defence be purely frivolous and vexatious, the defendant should be subjected to some direct punishment for his fraudulent attempt to evade payment of a just demand.

The same objection applies to sheriffs' courts. They are, for the most part, wretched mockeries of justice, and should not be intrusted to decide even questions of 20*l*. value, much less of 100*l*.

The fifth provision, giving summary judgment and execution on dishonoured bills, is a vast extension of power to the creditor; but inasmuch as a bill is an admission of a debt, there can be nothing objectionable in principle to treating it as a settled matter, and, unless cause be shewn to the contrary, to let execution go upon it. Perhaps it would be an improvement were the creditor in such case to be required to give four days' notice, to enable the debtor, on good cause shewn to a judge, in chambers to stay proceedings.

All the remaining provisions are unexceptionable in themselves.

But we would respectfully submit to the Association the plan which we have publicly urged upon the Profession, and privately proposed to the author of the mischief, a plan which would supersede many of the above provisions, and meet every case and every difficulty. We repeat it once more: it is this.

That, upon return of nulla bona by the sheriff after execution issued, the defendant shall be deemed an insolvent, and be subject to all the laws affecting insolvents.

That thereupon the judgment-creditor, or any other creditor, shall be empowered to summon the debtor before the Commissioner of Bankrupts within whose district he dwells; if he do not appear, he shall be liable to arrest and punishment for contempt; on appearance, he shall be deemed to be in the custody of the Court until he shall have entitled himself to protection by a full disclosure of his estate and satisfying the Court that his debts were honestly contracted.

The Court shall then proceed with him precisely as with any other bankrupt, taking an assignment of his estate and effects, and if he have acted fairly, grant him a final order.

But if he do not faithfully reveal his effects, or be guilty of any fraud, or it shall appear that his debts were fraudulently contracted or without reasonable prospect of being able to pay them, he shall be subject to such term of imprisonment for the fraud (not for the debt) as the Court shall award, of course limiting its powers.

We believe the above to be the outline of a plan which would effect all that the creditor has a right to demand, nothing of which the debtor could complain; which would attain the ends of justice to both parties, and this not only without restoring the imprisonment for debt, which has been mitigated, but permitting its entire abolition, because it provides a substitute vastly more efficient.

May we hope that it will be added to the Bill in course of preparation by the society?

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

THE following report of a scene at the Essex Insolvent Court has been sent to us. The scheme of conducting a profession in the name of an attorney resident far away, is not confined to Chelmsford; and we hope, wherever it is exhibited, it will be met by the same spirited opposition as was given to this by Mr. DURRANT, and for which he deserves the hearty thanks of the Profession.

ESSEX INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner LAW.)

Professional malpractices.

Mr. Durrant, solicitor, of Chelmsford, said he wished to bring under the notice of the Court a practice which he believed to be highly improper, namely, that of a practitioner from London having his name on the door of a house in Chelmsford, where he does not reside—and, to the best of his (Durrant's) information, never did; but having an agent or clerk here, by whom cases were carried through this court in his name. The attorney's name was Dennes, and the clerk's Old. A similar matter had been brought under the notice of Mr. Serjeant Ludlow by a committee of the Manchester Law Association. The Commissioner had paid particular attention to their observations, and the Court had subsequently strongly condemned the practice. He (Durrant) had stood forward in this case, because, as he was a member of the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association—and he believed the only one in the town—it might seem proper he should do so. The grievance was, that Mr. Dennes, being resident in London, and not in Chelmsford—although he had a person here who acted for him—it was impossible his clients could have the fair benefit of his advice. The Court of Queen's Bench had decided that it was illegal for an attorney to practise in this way. He (Durrant) would call attention to two reported cases. In Hopkinson v. Smith (1 Bing. 13), where a person not an attorney carried on business in the plaintiff's name, at a town five miles from the plaintiff's residence, where the attorney shewed his face only once a week, and never interfered in the business, it was holden he could not recover. In that case the attorney appears to have merely lent his name in consideration of receiving a part of the profit. But when the attorney stationed his articled clerk in a town at a distance from him, and all the business was transacted by the clerk, the result was the same. (Taylor v. Glassbrook, 3 Stark. 75.) Now, in this case, not only did Mr. Dennes not shew his face in Chelmsford once a week, but he (Durrant) hardly knew if he did once in twelve months—in fact, he believed he never was here except when he came down to sign necessary documents for, and to submit them to, this Court. However, Mr. Old was now present, and could, if called on, give some explanation on that subject, and of the nature of his connection with Mr. Dennes. Independently of the general reasons for objecting to the principle of an attorney residing in one town being allowed to practise in another by means of a clerk, it was a particular hardship as it related to this court, because the learned Commissioner would remember that, according to its present practice, the Court would only allow a limited number of attorneys in each provincial town to practise in it for insolvents; and, therefore, while the name of Mr. Dennes remained on the list as an attorney of this court practising in Chelmsford, it formed, to a certain extent, an obstacle to others who might be willing to do so. He (Durrant) was sure the Court would watch over the interests of the practitioners, and, if an improper practice prevailed, would take some steps to put an end to it. He meant to bring this matter before the Council of the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association; but he mentioned it now, that it might not be said to him, "Why did you not bring this before the commissioner in the country?" and that the parties might have an opportunity of giving him (the learned commissioner) any explanations they might think proper.

The COMMISSIONER.—How long has Mr. Dennes practised here?

Old (his clerk).—Between four and five years.

The COMMISSIONER asked, if notice had been given to Mr. Dennes of bringing this matter forward?

Durrant said he gave him notice of it in the morning, but he had left the court. His agent carried on a small general business in the town, and his name was over the shop on one side, and then on another door there was "Mr. Dennes, Solicitor," so that parties might go in there thinking it was his residence, but there was no one there to be seen but Mr. Old.

The COMMISSIONER (to Mr. Old).—Does Mr. Dennes live in Chelmsford or not?

Old said, he had resided at Ilford and occupied a first-floor there, but he lived in London at present.

The COMMISSIONER.—Did Mr. Dennes ever live in Chelmsford?

Old.—He occupies an office and room in my house.

Mr. Dennes here entered the court, and the Commissioner asked him if he lived in Chelmsford or in London?

Dennes.—Occasionally at both. I should say I live more in London than in Chelmsford; but I take out a certificate for Chelmsford. Sometimes I come and stop three or four days, and then go away.

The COMMISSIONER.—How often in the year?

Dennes could not say how often.

Old.—He stops sometimes at Chelmsford three or four days, if business calls him. He has been a week, but that is seldom.

The COMMISSIONER.—Before to-day, how long ago is it since he was here?

Old.—About a fortnight, and he then stopped three or four days.

The COMMISSIONER.—Where is his office in London?

Dennes.—I have no office in London.

The COMMISSIONER.—Where is your residence?

Dennes, after some hesitation, said, in Ironmonger-street, St. Luke's.

The COMMISSIONER.—You seem to have some doubt.

Dennes.—No doubt at all; it is No. 5.

The COMMISSIONER.—Are you rated in Chelmsford?

Dennes.—No.

Old.—I am rated.

The COMMISSIONER.—When Mr. Dennes comes to stay, do you charge him?

Old.—He pays me for the office and room 10*l.* a year.

The COMMISSIONER.—How much do you pay him?

Old.—Nothing; I have a regular salary from him.

The COMMISSIONER.—What is it?

Old.—1*l.* a week.

The COMMISSIONER.—If an insolvent does not pay his account, who is the loser?

Old.—Mr. Dennes: I am certain of that.

The COMMISSIONER.—I shall mention the subject to the other commissioners; but there is no difficulty now in saying this,—that if any other gentleman wishes to practise in this court, the circumstance of Mr. Dennes's name being on the list will be no impediment to the admission of another. That is quite certain.

SHAM LAWYERS.

HERE is another letter from one of this tribe, boldly demanding the 5s. costs. Let the Law Society see to him.

Manchester, Feb. 21st, 1845.

SIR,—I am instructed by Mr. John Nuttall, of this town, to apply to you for the sum of 2*l.* 1s. due from you to him; and if the same be not immediately paid to him, together with the costs of this application, I shall issue a writ for the recovery thereof without further notice.

Yours, &c.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

THE following advertisement appears in the Newcastle Journal of March 1st. If we remember rightly, Mr. WANLESS, on some former occasion, repudiated such practices, when charged with them in our columns.

TO TRADESMEN AND OTHERS.

Mr. Wanless, solicitor, Newcastle, has removed his offices from No. 19, Dean-street, to No. 2, Sandhill (opposite the Fish Market), where he continues to recover book-debts, &c. on the same liberal terms as formerly, viz. a commission of 10 per cent.

A BAR CLUB.

THE propriety of forming a Bar Club has been repeatedly urged upon us. When almost every other profession has its club, surely the Bar might advantageously establish one for its own members exclusively, having all the usual accommodations of a club with the added conveniences of a law library, and other special arrangements, which will doubtless suggest themselves as the plan is matured.

We see many benefits that might accrue from such a club, and undoubtedly to no class would it be more practically useful than to barristers.

An early opportunity will be taken to submit a specific prospectus; but in the meanwhile it will be desirable to ascertain if the suggestion be approved; we shall, therefore, be obliged if those who are willing to join it will communicate their names in confidence, addressed to the editor of the LAW TIMES.

A Provisional Committee will be the first step, and we hope soon to announce its formation.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The fourth numbers of the Criminal Law Cases and of Practice Cases have been issued, completing the first part of both series.

An accident has delayed the fifth and sixth numbers of the Real Property and Conveyancing Cases, but we hope they will be issued early in the ensuing week.

The fifth and sixth numbers of Magistrates' Cases, completing the last Term, will follow immediately.

Having thus disposed of arrears, unavoidable in the commencement of a scheme dependent upon the co-operation of a great number of persons, we hope in future to keep pace with the Terms. Until tried, it would be impossible to conceive the difficulty of working machinery so complicated as that by which only such extensive works as the LAW TIMES and the VERULAM REPORTS can be produced.

The following Forms have been added to the Society's List:—

Notice of Declaration and Bill of Particulars.
Writs of Summons. (Parchment.)
Affidavit of Service of Summons.
Ditto of Summons and Attendance.

A number of additional forms will go to the lithographers on Monday, and will be duly announced next week.

The returns of the circular are now so slow (scarcely averaging one a day) that we shall wait no longer, but next week state the result, and which, if any, of the works proposed have been adopted.

LECTURES ON MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

BY ALFRED S. TAYLOR.

Delivered at Guy's Hospital, 1844.

LECTURE IX.

Poisoning by arsenic—White arsenic.

In this morning's lecture we have to speak of poisoning by arsenic. The term white arsenic is generally applied to arsenious acid. The arsenic acid, is another compound, which is never used for poisoning. Orpiment, the sesqui-sulphuret of the chemist, is commonly called yellow arsenic. It is highly poisonous. Thus there are three kinds of arsenic, the white, the yellow, and the red. The yellow arsenic is commonly called orpiment, and is occasionally used as a poison. The red arsenic (Realgar) is a proto-sulphuret; it is met with in the arts, but it does not often form the subject of criminal investigation. The yellow sulphuretted derives its poisonous property from a quantity of arsenious acid mixed with it.

Let us first speak of the white arsenic, or arsenious acid. This is commonly seen in the form of a white powder, or in opaque white masses. It is described as an acid from its power of forming salts with alkaline bases, but a solution of it has a very feeble re-action on the test paper. White arsenic is described generally as an antiseptic, from its being supposed to have an acrid taste; but this is an error, as it possesses, in fact, very little taste, which may be decided very easily by experiment, the result of which will shew that it has a faint sweetish taste.

Arsenic is an irritant poison. It does not seem to possess any corrosive properties; that is, the changes met with in the alimentary canal of a person poisoned by it are to be referred to the effects of the inflammation excited by the poison, and not to any chemical action. The symptoms vary according to the dose in which the poison has been administered. The usual time at which they come is from half an hour to an hour after the poison has been swallowed. The individual first experiences faintness, nausea, and sickness, with an intense burning pain in the region of the stomach, which is increased by pressure. The pain in the abdomen becomes more and more severe, and there is violent vomiting of a brown turbid matter, mixed with mucus, and sometimes streaked with blood. These symptoms are followed by diarrhœa, which is more or less violent; there is a sense of constriction of the throat, with intense thirst, which is generally very remarkable. The pulse is small, very frequent, and irregular, sometimes wholly imperceptible; in some cases being at 132. There are, besides these symptoms, palpitation of the heart and syncope. The skin is cold and clammy, in a state of collapse, and sometimes very hot. The respiration is painful, from the tender state of the abdominal parietes. Before death we find coma, with tetani, convulsions, and spasms in the muscles of the extremities. Such is the ordinary character of the symptoms in an acute case of arsenical poisoning, where from half an ounce to an ounce of the poison has been taken; but if the individual recover from the first effects, then we may have other symptoms; for instance, redness and inflammation of the conjunctivæ; irritation of the skin and the occasional appearance of a peculiar herpetic eruption. Among the secondary symptoms is salivation. These symptoms chiefly occur in cases where small doses of the poison have been taken for a long time together, and they differ in cases where a large quantity has been taken for one dose. The average period for the commencement of the symptoms is half an hour after the substance has been taken; but they occurred in a quarter of an hour, in a case which proved fatal in this hospital. Dr. Christison mentions a case in which the symptoms took place in eight minutes; but a case occurred in the north of England in 1834, in which they came on almost immediately after the poison had been taken. The latest period appears from a case reported by Orfila, to be five hours. This was in a case which occurred in France, wherein three drachms were taken. All the symptoms I have mentioned may not be met with in every case. Thus the pain, which is usually excruciating, like a fire burning within the body, is sometimes wanting. In a case which occurred in the hospital three years ago, there was scarcely any pain just before death. In those cases where there is an absence of pain, death is commonly rapid. The symptoms of alvine irritation, where there is vomiting, are seldom absent. Intense thirst is a common symptom, but this is sometimes absent.

There has been much speculation as to the mode in which arsenic destroys life. Most deaths occur in from eighteen hours to three days, and probably the average period for ordinary doses is about twenty-four hours; but it may destroy life in a much shorter time. There are numberless instances in which it has proved fatal in six hours. In one instance death took place in two hours and a half, and in another case, communicated to me by Mr. Foster of Huntingdon, life was destroyed in two hours. Dr. Borland has mentioned a case in which two ounces were taken, and the patient died within two hours afterwards. This case was remarkable in another point of view; there was neither pain, vomiting, or diarrhœa; the woman died from a fit of syncope, from the sympathetic influence of the poison. Another material question connected with this subject relates to the quantity of arsenic required to destroy life. According to Dr. Christison, the smallest fatal dose on record, in an adult, is stated to have been thirty grains of the powder of arsenious acid; but undoubtedly a much smaller quantity than this will suffice to kill. Facts of this description can only be elicited by accident, as in cases of murder or suicide so much more of the poison than is necessary is commonly taken. Children are killed by a smaller dose than adults. The smallest fatal dose of arsenic, in a state of solution, amounted to four grains and a half, and the child who took it died in six hours. But there is no doubt that a smaller quantity would suffice to kill a child. Four or five years ago some interesting cases occurred, which enable us to estimate pretty accurately the quantity of arsenic required to kill a human being. A case occurred in London, in 1839. At a large dinner party, it was observed that three persons who had partaken of the port wine on the table, were seized with symptoms of poisoning. The wine was suspected to contain poison, and it was sent to me for examination. It was clear, of the usual colour and odour, and possessed all the characters of good wine; but there was a small quantity of a reddish white sediment at the bottom of the bottle. From the account of the symptoms, the wine was suspected to contain arsenic: this was found to be the case, and the quantity of poison dissolved, amounted to about 42 grains in each fluid ounce. The following were the facts:—a child, aged sixteen months, took a quantity of the wine, containing about one-third of a grain of arsenic. In twenty minutes this child became sick, vomited violently for three hours, and then recovered. A lady, aged fifty-two, took a quantity of wine, containing rather less than two grains of arsenic. In about half an hour she experienced faintness. Violent vomiting came on, and lasted four hours, but there was no pain. She then gradually recovered. A gentleman, aged forty, took a quantity of the wine, containing rather more than two grains of the poison. The symptoms in him were similar, but more severe; and had he taken another glass of the wine, it is probable he would have been killed. It may be proper to observe that although this wine was perfectly saturated with arsenic, not the least taste was perceived by any of the parties. From the result of these cases, I think we might safely say that an adult person might be killed by a dose of from four to six grains of the acid; this may be considered as the average. As to the post mortem appearances, they are generally confined to the stomach and the intestines. They are commonly well marked, in proportion to the largeness of the dose, and the length of time which the individual has survived after taking the poison. Our attention must first be directed to the stomach. Arsenic seems to have a specific effect on this organ; for however the poison may have entered the system, whether through a wounded or ulcerated surface, or by the act of deglutition, this organ has been found inflamed.

A case has recently occurred, in which a quack has been tried on a charge of manslaughter, from his having caused the death of a woman by applying arsenic in a plaster to her breast, which was in a diseased state (Liverpool Winter Assizes, 1844). In this case the stomach was found much inflamed. The mucous membrane of the stomach is commonly found red and inflamed; the colour varies considerably. When the body is first opened, the mucous membrane is of a dull or brownish red tint, but after exposure to the air it becomes of a florid red, by the effects of the atmosphere. The redness is usually more strongly marked at the great extremity; in one case it may be found spread over the whole mucous surface, giving to it the appearance of red velvet; in another it will be chiefly seen on the prominences of the rugæ; and in another we meet with its action at the pyloric end of the stomach. The stomach often contains a mucous liquid of a dark colour, tinged with blood. The mucous coat of the stomach is very rarely found ulcerated, and still more rarely gangrenous. Perforation of the coats is so uncommon a result of arsenical poisoning, that there are only three instances on record. The duodenum and rectum are those parts of the intestines which have been generally found inflamed, and traces of inflammation are occasionally seen in the pharynx and œsophagus. The inferior portion of the intestinal canal escapes the action of the arsenic. Where a person has died rapidly under symptoms of coma, inflammation of the stomach and intestines has been very slight; but these are exceptional cases. The mucous glands of the stomach have been found enlarged; but this is by no means an unusual morbid appearance, without reference to poisoning; any cause of irritation will do it. You may be asked, what is the earliest period of time at which inflammation may be produced in the stomach after taking arsenic? The answer to that question will be, that the earliest period is two hours, for within two hours after the poison has been swallowed, the stomach has been found extensively inflamed. Then again you may be asked, what is the earliest period at which ulceration of the stomach may be met with? The earliest period in a case of criminal poisoning was ten hours. Ten hours after swallowing the poison the individual died, and the stomach was found ulcerated. Various morbid appearances are said to have been met with in the lungs, heart, brain, and urinary organs; but they do not appear to be characteristic of arsenical poison. It is, doubtless, to the stomach and intestines that a medical jurist must look for the basis of medical evidence in regard to post mortem appearances in cases of arsenical poisoning. Sometimes a large quantity of mucus is found in the stomach, and the mucous coat is detached by the violent action.

Now with regard to the treatment. If vomiting do not already exist, as a direct effect of the poison, sulphate of zinc may be exhibited, and the emetic effects promoted by mucilaginous drinks, such as linseed tea. When sulphate of zinc cannot be procured, a good substance for an emetic is powdered mustard, in the proportion of from one to two teaspoonfuls in a glass of water, administered at intervals. The stomach-pump may be usefully employed, if time be not lost in its application, and care should be adopted in its employment. Unless the patient is seen early, remedial measures are seldom successful in saving life. With regard to the stomach-pump, in several cases that I have examined, not the smallest trace of poison has been found in the stomach; thereby shewing how completely the poison had been removed by vomiting and purging. But it is not the poison found in the stomach that kills, but what is found in the body; so that the mere absence of the poison in the stomach amounts to nothing. It is because of the quantity absorbed in the body that it produces fatal effects.

Various antidotes have been suggested in cases of poisoning by arsenic, and latterly we have heard much of the sesqui-oxide of iron, which is prepared by precipitating the persulphate of iron by ammonia. There is great difference of opinion as to the efficacy of this remedy. Many eminent medical jurists have found that giving oxide of iron to animals destroys the effect of the remedy. It is considered by some persons that it acts by combining with the arsenious acid to form an insoluble arsenite of iron; but it has been proved beyond dispute that this is a poison. But this is not the explanation; for something more is necessary than the formation of an insoluble arsenite of iron. According to this view, if an ounce of arsenic has been swallowed, and none of the poison ejected, twelve ounces of the oxide of iron should be given immediately in order to produce any good effect; and this is on the assumption that the poison is in a perfect state of solution in water. But we find that the poison is almost always taken in the form of powder, and is very little soluble in water, and therefore its insolubility prevents this chemical action. If persons were in the habit of taking arsenic dissolved in water, this would be a great means of separating it in an insoluble form, but that is not the way in which it is taken. If the poison were swallowed in the state of a filtered aqueous solution, the oxide of iron might combine with it; but there its antidotal effects are so imperfect as to render it altogether impracticable. With regard to its action, numerous recoveries are said to have occurred from its use; but so far as I have been able to ascertain, in severe cases, emetics and the stomach-pump were freely used, and in the lighter cases recovery would probably have taken place without it. The treatment, in a case of poisoning by arsenic, should consist of washing out the stomach thoroughly with the stomach-pump, promoting vomiting, and exhibiting a viscid mucilaginous liquid, thickened starch or gruel, and it is to this that we may rely for success if it is administered in time. The experiments I have made seem to shew that the oxide of iron does not possess the power of combining with powdered arsenic acid, the only form in which we commonly have to deal with the poison, in a way to act as a chemical antidote; and that if recoveries have really taken place from its use, it must have some other mode of operation.

We now proceed to the chemical analysis of this body. We meet with arsenic in two forms; in a state of white powder, or in semi-vitrous lumps. The powder is called very often mercury, and sold for mercury.

It is often mentioned on trials as mercury. With regard to the properties of arsenic, the first point we attend to in cases of poisoning is the action of water. Arsenic is a very insoluble body in cold water, but when a small quantity is boiled in water it floats on the water in a sort of film. It is like plaster of Paris in its effect on water, and is much about as soluble in cold water. No other poison assumes this form. Organic matters interfere with its solubility; hence it is less soluble in tea and coffee, and other substances, than it is in water. It is very soluble in alkalies, and forms with caustic potash arsenite of potash. With regard to its volatility, if you put a little of it with charcoal or flux into a tube and heat it, it is decomposed, and a ring of metallic arsenic is deposited in the glass; this may be volatilized by a moderate heat, and it then forms octohedral crystals of arsenious acid, which, by the light of the sun, present a very resplendent character. When the powder is moistened with a solution of hydrosulphuret of ammonia no change of colour takes place as with other metallic poisons; on heating the mixture the white powder dissolves, and on continuing the heat until the ammonia is expelled, a rich yellow or orange-red film is left, which is a sesquisulphuret of arsenic. Various methods of reducing arsenic have been adopted;—by condensing it with hydrogen, by metals, and by galvanism: and various agents have been proposed;—charcoal, black flux. The calcined acetate of soda is the best agent, and the black flux is objectionable; but carbonate of potash is deliquescent, while carbonate of soda is not so. It is said that other metals are reducible by this means, such as mercury and cadmium; but the sublimate of arsenic differs from that of these metals in its dark iron-grey lustre, and other remarkable properties.

The Law Review.

The Law Magazine.

We now proceed, according to promise, to present to our readers some specimens of the contents of these periodicals, which we shall continue from time to time, as space will permit.

From the Law Review we take the following, said to be written by Lord Brougham:—

MEMOIR OF MR. BARON GARROW.

Mr. Garrow was, in a certain line of the legal profession, without an equal, certainly—in a portion of that line, without a rival. He had early in life devoted himself to the practice of the criminal law, and he arrived in a short time at considerable eminence. By attending almost exclusively to this branch of business, and exercising upon it his great powers of steady attention, extraordinary quickness in apprehension, and a singular circumspection, he soon reached the lead of the Old Bailey practice, and domineered without a competitor at the bar, and with little control from the bench. He had the good fortune to acquire the friendship of the late learned Mr. Shelton, then clerk of the arraigns in that court, and perhaps the most accomplished criminal lawyer of his day. This gentleman, it was well known, freely unfolded to him his vast stores of knowledge, and where any complicated case arose, filled his mind both with principles and authorities. Such was the great experience of Mr. Shelton, and such the confidence reposed in him by the judges, that his opinion was solicited even by the most learned of their body in cases of much difficulty.

In consequence of some opening upon the Home Circuit, which Mr. Garrow travelled, and which is easily combined with the Old Bailey (then only held eight times a year, but now twelve times, ever since the establishment of the great Central Court), he gradually became a candidate for civil business, and attended regularly in Westminster Hall. His success here was far more rapid than any one expected the "Old Bailey Solicitor" could attain. His talents were found to be perfectly well suited to the Nisi Prius business in general, and he before long had so large a share of it, that, having given up the Old Bailey some time before, he was soon raised to the rank of King's Counsel.

There have probably been few more ignorant men in the profession than this celebrated leader. To law, or anything like law, he made no pretence. What little he could have known was rather mechanical than scientific. He began as Assessor at the great Bedford County election in 1784, under the patronage of the Whigs, to whose party he appertained, without probably knowing very distinctly the meaning of the term, and with certainly no notion of the division in principle which distinguished the Whig from the Tory. The knowledge of a few statutory provisions being all that an assessor has to regard, he could go through the routine of that election safely enough, if not very respectably. Then the little criminal law required at the Old Bailey he could pick up by a few months' attendance there, and for any out-of-the-way point he must trust to the suggestion, or rather the prompting of the moment from his junior or his client.

The practice of evidence, that is, of examination of witnesses, he soon acquired, without rule or the notion of principle, by use and observation, till he knew by sure and unerring instinct what questions might and what might not be put; and when a rare matter presented itself, he must here again be primed or prompted for the nonce. Then with so slender a provision of law, his ignorance of all beside, of all that constitutes science, or learning, or indeed general information, nay even ordinary information, was perfect; and yet one important branch of knowledge had become familiar to him—his intercourse with prisoners, with juries, above all, with witnesses, had given him extensive knowledge of human nature—though not certainly in its higher, more refined, or even more respectable forms.

With all these great deficiencies, with this confessedly slender stock in trade, Mr. Garrow was a great, a very great advocate. To describe him as merely quick, clear-seeing, wary, prompt, nimble, bold, in every sense of the large word, skilful, would be too general, though it would be quite correct if each of these phrases were extended to the superlative degree. But more is wanting to portray distinctly his extraordinary merits. The giddy and superficial vulgar—meaning by this the vulgar of the legal order—would admire without stint his cross-examination. It was, no doubt of the matter, very brilliant; in every sense, striking. He seemed every now and then to destroy, almost to annihilate, an adverse witness; and often he would, without effort and unperceived, be winding about him, throwing a net round, gradually contracting it into a noose, or drawing after him or towards him the witness, his appointed but unconscious prey, all else already seeing the fate that awaited him, and then would on a sudden pounce forth upon him, and tear him in pieces. But, generally speaking, his cross-examina-

He had this great defect, that he treated to attacking the witness hostilely, and made war upon him far too soon, Now, be a counsel ever so expert, there is one limit necessarily appointed to the success of such a hostile operation. If the witness is calm, or confident, or well trained, above all, if, without being honest, he is cool and self-possessed, he may bid defiance to any cross-examination. But in most cases a great deal may be obtained by gentle treatment—by calmly throwing him off his guard—by kindly treating him—by presenting things to his mind without the warning which a hostile attack always gives an acute witness; and of this Mr. Garrow far too seldom availed himself. Men said his Old Bailey practice, by making him familiar with the lower and more tutored kind of witnesses, had spoilt him in other particulars. It is more likely that he could not resist the temptation of making a great impression on the jury and on the bystanders. Those bystanders—and the profession, we again must observe, are not to be excepted from the number—never failed to commit the mistake of supposing a loud and angry examination to be a successful one; and they constantly supposed that the credit of a witness had been demolished when his person had only been scolded.

And here, as to the uses of cross-examination, we may make an extract from Mr. Butler's "Reminiscences." "Cross-examination," says that gentleman, "is sometimes abused, but it is certainly the surest method of eliciting truth that has been devised. When the affair of the necklace of the late Queen of France was in agitation, a person observed to Lord Thurlow that the repeated examinations of the parties in France had cleared up nothing. 'True,' said his lordship, but Buller, Garrow, and a Middlesex jury would, if such a matter had been brought before them, have made it all in half an hour as clear as daylight.'"

But Mr. Garrow's real forte was in truth his examination in chief, which was unrivalled, and which is, indeed, a far more important and not a less difficult attribute than the cross-examination which so captivates the ignorant. It requires the most perfect knowledge of the facts, and the most skilful leading of the witness through them, so as to make him tell the story clearly, connectedly, and strikingly, and to avoid the parts of the case, which, being tender, it would be perilous to let him come too near. But it also demands the most vigilant attention to every word, tone, look, gesture of the witness, because from this close and wakeful survey it will frequently appear how far the instructions may be relied on, how far the same things are likely to be told upon oath and in public, which were before related by the witness privately and unsworn to the client. No description can give the reader an adequate idea of this eminent practitioner's powers in thus dealing with his witnesses. They who had lying before them the instructions on which his examination proceeded, saw a case brought out which they scarcely seemed to have read before. How different the mechanical examinations of ordinary barristers, yawning over their briefs, pursuing the order of the written statement line by line, and only turning into a question, not seldom a leading or irregular question, the short sentences which the attorney has given as what "this witness will say!" Then, when the fire of cross-examination had shaken the credit of the evidence, how admirably did the great tactician, in re-examination, restore, comfort, set it up! These were things which the connoisseur's understanding could relish; they were to the vulgar audience as "a stumbling-block, or perhaps foolishness."

It may easily be supposed that his statement, his narrative, was of a high order. No man more clearly, more continuously presented a picture of his case to those he was addressing. His language was plain, but it was well strung together. He reasoned little, he jested less; he not rarely declaimed, and he had sufficient force to produce his effect. He was worst when he tried to tell some long story of his feelings for his learned friend on the other side, or when he ventured to indulge in the pathetic. But his voice was powerful, and it was pleasing when raised: his action was good and moderate; his countenance, though not very refined, was expressive enough when he was roused; his whole manner was successful. His discretion, his perfect judgment, and entire self-command, exceeded that of most men. Among the other singular anecdotes of his professional life, we used to be told, that going on a special retainer to defend a gentleman charged with a capital offence (it was murder, indeed), he sat in court during the whole trial, and of course watched each word, look, and gesture of each witness, as well as of the prosecuting counsel, and the judge, and the jury, with the eyes of an eagle, and never once uttered a word from the beginning to the end of the proceeding.

Mr. Garrow's ignorance of law, except the most ordinary matters which are of hourly occurrence at Nisi Prius, has been often mentioned with astonishment. But the real wonder was this, that he could suddenly take up a point from his learned coadjutors, and state his objection or answer his antagonists, as clearly, tersely, and accurately as the best special pleader or mercantile lawyer of the day. You generally found him quite to seek, if the same point arose a few weeks, possibly days, after. It seemed as if he had no niches in which to store, no pegs on which to hang the shreds and scraps of law which he was constantly obtaining, as the pressure of the moment made him turn round to his junior, and stoop down to pick them up. Indeed, it was perhaps better that he should not keep them at all; had he retained them, having no means of understanding and arranging them, a kind of patchwork would have been formed of no use for any future emergency, and the poor chiffonnier(a) must have again exercised his humble trade as before.

He was sufficiently aware of his own deficiencies to shun the occasions which might display them. Accordingly, he avoided, when in high office, appearing to argue legal questions before the House of Lords; and on one occasion Lord Eldon, then presiding there, had the cruelty to insist upon his attendance, when some peerage question was in the House. Being told that Mr. Attorney was engaged in the Court of Queen's Bench, he asked "if it was in a horse cause," and if he could not leave it to attend his duty in that House. The case was postponed to let him come another day.(b) He had gotten an argument prepared for him, which he read word for word at the bar; and, unable to give the citations which were made by Mr. Nolan (the writer of the paper) in the most abbreviated form, he read them as written, to the great amusement of the malicious Chancellor, who did not soon forget the legal authorities he had that day been introduced to, such as one Lev. and Cro. Jac. Nor did Lord Eldon confine his jocularity on this subject to the House of Lords. "Two days afterwards (says Sir Samuel Romilly, in his Diary), in the Court of Chancery, on a question whether a manager of a theatre could discharge the duties of his office without personal attendance, I, who had to argue that he could not, said that it would be as difficult as for a counsel to do his duty in that court by writing arguments and sending them to some person to read for him. The Lord Chancellor interrupted me by saying, 'In this court, or in any other?' and, after the Court rose, he said to me, 'You know, I suppose, what I alluded to? It was Garrow's written argument in the House of Lords.' So little respect has his lordship for an Attorney-General whom he himself appointed because he was agreeable to the Prince." It must, indeed, be confessed that all others had better right to laugh on this occasion than Lord Eldon. He it was who had promoted to the head of the Profession a person plainly ignorant of its most common and best-known learning, and he had placed him in a position which gave him an irresistible claim to a seat on the bench, though wholly incompetent to fill it. It was Lord Eldon's duty, however, to resist that claim, and prefer offending Sir William Garrow to outraging justice by so unfit an appointment. We were accordingly fated to hear the unlearned baron, in an equity suit, commend Lord Eldon as the parent of the doctrine of Trusts in Equity. When told of this numerous progeny so unexpectedly put upon him, as it were dropped at his door, his lordship thought it quite sufficient to join heartily in the laugh, as he had formerly done upon the presentation to him of Cro. Jac.

His ignorance was, as we have already said, not confined to his own profession; he seemed as a man without education, probably because he had not been educated; he seemed as a man who never read, probably because books formed no portion of his reading. He now and then saw a play, or went to church; and he heard the Erskines, the Laws, the Dallas's, the Gibbs's, expatiate on various points of learning. From thence he might pick up a few phrases and fewer ideas; but he was most cautious in their application, for fear of awkward mishaps; he was far from adventurous out of his own line, within which his boldness was as remarkable as his prudence was consummate; he hardly ever soared from the ground he loved, dreading a quick fall. Instances are recorded, no doubt, of his yielding to the temptation of visiting higher regions; as when he would discourse of the connection between the mind and the body, on some will-cause which raised the question of sanity. The topic was not judiciously chosen, for it was among the more obscure and indeed inscrutable points of metaphysical science. Nor will future inquirers derive much aid from his effort, in promoting these psychological researches. "You see, gentlemen, the mind and the body have a close, an intimate, I may say, an inseparable connection. Gentlemen, they chum together." Probably he speedily perceived some hint in the judge's face—as when he asked Mr. Gaselee, indulging in a similar barn-door flight—if "we weren't getting into the high sentimental latitudes?"—for the metaphysician came quickly down to the matter before him, and went on with his luminous and plain statement of the case he should prove by witnesses—there being none, we should imagine, to the point of the commorancy and joint occupancy of the two tenants above mentioned.

On the Bench, and especially in the Criminal Court, where he found himself at home, he occasionally ventured on these very perilous oratorical experiments. A flight of his on the Oxford circuit, when passing sentence of death on an unhappy sheep-stealer, will not be soon forgotten. At Stafford, after expatiating at great length and with much solemnity on the heinousness of the offence, he assured the offender that all hope of mitigation was illusory. "I have, however (added he), one precious consolation—this is not the final trial which awaits you—you will ere long appear before another and all-merciful Judge, who will hear with patience all you have to say, and should he feel a doubt, will give it in your favour." It is, perhaps, right to add, that he afterwards recommended a mitigation of the sentence, as indeed was his custom where he felt at liberty to indulge the natural humanity of his disposition. It was, however, by no means unusual with him, perhaps by way of admonition to the bystanders, to excite apprehensions which he never intended to realize.

The success of so consummate an advocate, when he had once made up his mind to quit the Old Bailey and dwell in Westminster-hall, was rapid, and though he never was popular with his contemporaries, like Erskine, the darling, as the pride of the gown, yet did they not at all grudge his progress, so plainly were his extraordinary merits perceived, and so willingly admitted. It may be questioned if either Erskine or Gibbs ever had such hold as Garrow of the common business of the court. It is certain that he retained it far longer than either of them; for he must have been nearly thirty years in the lead both at Westminster and Guildhall, and his business, like Mr. Scarlett's, abode by him to the last. Those who have witnessed it cannot easily forget the struggles between him and Gibbs, after he had fairly driven out of the field, Mingay, an artist of a very inferior description. He was often, indeed, on ordinary cases, an overmatch for Erskine himself; but Erskine could afford to sustain this defeat, or this overreaching, and his temper was sweet as his nature was noble. Not such the temper of Sir Vicary. When Garrow would "run round him," get verdicts from him, beat down his damages by coarse clamour, or horse-laughing, even make points against him, or take them from him (filch them, as he was wont to phrase it); the bystander saw such bitterness manifested in the defeated face, that he could not have wondered at seeing him cry from mere vexation. The business, however, especially at Guildhall, was admirably managed by these three great leaders, to whom Mr. Park and Mr. Topping may be added. They conducted it, too, so as to greatly save the public time. They would confer previously, or as the cause was trying. Abandoning on either side, and at once, the untenable points, they would bring the others at once forward, so as to obtain the opinion of the judge on the law, or of the jury on the fact, and a new cause was called. It was thus, and it was in such times as these, when leaders were strong and briefs were concentrated in a few hands, that Lord Ellenborough was enabled to meet a cause list of six hundred at one sitting. Lord Mansfield having complained of his entry once reaching sixty. But of this despatch much also depended on the presiding and animating vigour of the judge. After being away, towards the end of his life, for a few weeks, and having his place supplied by a puisne judge, Lord Ellenborough came back and disposed of eighteen defended causes in a day. We are, however, very far from holding up such examples as worthy of all imitation. Causes were more fully if not so brilliantly tried before Lord Tenterden, especially during his last seven or eight years. In his great predecessor's time the saying was, in describing the two sides of the hall, or rather the passage which then led into it, and on one side of which Lord Ellenborough judged, while on the other Lord Eldon sat—that the one was the Court of oyer sans terminer, and the other of terminer sans oyer.

The placing of Sir W. Garrow upon the Bench has been adverted to. He was far, indeed, from a brilliant judge, except at Nisi Prius, and there not clearly a very good one. Perhaps he was seen to most advantage when presiding in the Criminal Court, with the routine of which he had been so long familiar. Even at Nisi Prius there was a perpetual fidgettiness observable, arising, no doubt, from a consciousness that some legal point might at any moment occur, calling for a decision to which he felt himself inadequate. But no such apprehension disturbed his self-complacency when he had the dock before him. After the counsel on both sides had exhausted their questions, it was his custom to luxuriate in an examination of his own, and here he often evinced his perfection in the art of which he was an admitted master. Nor did he shrink at times from, as it seemed, lowering his dignity, by the most lavish display of that peculiar knowledge which can only be acquired at the school in which he had studied. There was no mystery in the profession of the "appropriators," in which he was not an adept. There was no term of art in the vocabulary of crime with which he was not familiar. At times the effect produced by him was most amusing. None who were present will forget the impression thus made upon an unhappy coiner, tried before him on the Oxford circuit. This man conducted his own defence, and did so with much skill and more effrontery. The judge seemed quite absorbed in admiration of the prisoner's ingenuity, and contrived to fill him with the delusion that he was so—a delusion from which there was soon to be a fearful waking. "My lord," he vociferated, "there were only two bad half-crowns found upon me. If I was making a trade of it, it stands to reason I'd have had more;" and he looked up to the bench quite confident of its sympathy. Garrow's white eyes glared upon the culprit, and in a tone which assured him all their secrets were in common, playfully replied, "Perhaps, sir, the WALLOP was exhausted." The word and the tone of its enunciation, at once unnerved the prisoner—he felt he had before him a professor of his craft, whom it was quite useless to attempt to mystify, and he resigned himself to his fate. "Gentlemen (said Garrow blandly to the jury, who shared in the ignorance of all around them), a WALLOP is a term of free-masonry amongst coiners. It means the hidden heap of counterfeits to which they resort for a supply when the exigencies of the profession may require one." The Court of Exchequer, then composed of Chief Baron Richards, and Barons Graham, Wood, and Garrow, used to be thus rather more wittily than correctly described, as consisting of one who was a lawyer and no gentleman; another a gentleman and no lawyer; a third, both the one and the other; and a fourth neither. The truth of the description is here sacrificed, as usual, to the point of the epigram.

In Parliament, it needs scarce be observed, this very celebrated advocate had little or no success. Indeed he cordially hated the place, and was with difficulty induced to enter it, or having entered, to address it. Speak, however, he did; and he began to say that he had made, on entering Parliament, a covenant with himself not to speak, against which he was now compelled to act. His speech was a very bad one, and Mr. Windham, inheriting from Mr. Burke his dislike of lawyers, began his comment on this expression, as in a declaration; he "complained of covenants broken." "Many parties," he observed, "had a right to complain of the breach which had been committed—the House—the subject—himself—but the party most entitled to complain," he added, "was the covenantee, he with whom the covenant had been made." Unlike the epigrammatic description which has been quoted above, the truth of this remark was fully as manifest as the wit.

In private life Mr. Garrow was not only blameless, but every way to be commended. In all its relations he was unimpeachable; and beside the kindly nature of his social intercourse, he was to be admired for extraordinary generosity to all who wanted his aid. He gave and he lent large sums of his hard-earned gains to assist those who were in embarrassment or in distress. It is singular, that, probably from never having frequented good society, or, indeed, almost any society at all, he was in private one of the most shy and bashful men, though very, very far otherwise in public.

NECROLOGY.

LORD WYNFORD.

To the list of illustrious and celebrated individuals who since the commencement of the present year have ceased to be numbered among the living, we have to add the name of William Draper Best, first Baron Wynford. His lordship expired on the 3rd instant, at his seat, Leesons, Kent, aged 78, having been born in 1767.

The deceased peer was a native of Somersetshire, and received the rudiments of education at the grammar school of Crewkerne, in that county. As the church was the profession for which he was destined, he was removed at the age of fifteen to Wadham College with a view to obtain a fellowship, but after he had resided at the University two years he became entitled, by the death of a first cousin, to the remaining part of a considerable estate, the whole of which had been once in the possession of his branch of the family. He then relinquished all thoughts of entering into orders; and in his 17th year left Oxford. Having determined on adopting the law as his future professional career, he was entered of the Society of the Middle Temple, and was called to the bar in Michaelmas Term, 1789.

The first cause in which Mr. Best attracted notice was that of Peppin v. Shakspeare, the brief in which fell into his hands owing to the absence of a learned gentleman who was engaged in the cause. The question to be argued was, "the rights of a lord of a manor in respect to the appropriation of the wastes." Lord Kenyon, then Lord Chief Justice, in delivering the judgment of the Court, paid many compliments to the "talents and industry" which Mr. Best had shewn in the management of the argument. So flattering a eulogium from so justly eminent a judge was the sure precursor of future fame. Mr. Best soon got into extensive practice both on the home circuit, which he selected for his provincial career, and in Westminster-hall. The case of Sinclair, on the prosecution of De Colonne; that of Capt. Innis, for shooting a French prisoner, which he argued before twelve judges; also Rex v. Astlett and Rex v. Despard, with other important civil and criminal cases, which will be found in the reports of that period, shew that Mr. Best was in full practice of the very first-rate and most profitable description.

Aspiring to still higher eminence, Mr. Best, by the advice of his friends, assumed the coif in Hilary Term, 1800, and chose for the motto on his ring, "Libertas in Legibus." The Legislature was next the object of his aim, and at the general election in 1802 he was returned for Petersfield. In May, 1803, the King's message relative to France had been delivered to the House, and the question of peace or war with that country gave rise to an animated debate. Sergeant Best spoke on that question; declaring that "if the smallest spot on earth were demanded of us in the manner, and under the circumstances, that France had demanded Malta, he would refuse it, because he would consider it as essentially connected with the safety and the interest of the British empire." In July, 1803, we find Mr. Sergeant Best in opposition to the Magistrates' Protection Bill, and also to some other measure introduced towards the close of Mr. Addington's administration. On June 18, 1804, we find his name in a minority of 223 to 264 on Mr. Pitt's Additional Defence Bill; and he also divided, in Feb. 1805, with 106 to 313 on Mr. Grey's amendment to the address to the throne on the Spanish war. In the same year we find him voting with 217 members who pronounced on the culpability of Viscount Melville; and a few days afterwards he vindicated the commissioners of naval affairs. Amongst other things he moved "for an account of all pensions granted by the Crown from the 1st of May, 1804, to the 1st of April, 1805; for an account of all augmentations of salaries by sign manual, letters-patent, or warrant; and for the appointment of a committee on the eleventh report of the naval commissioners." In an able introductory speech he maintained that some of the fundamental laws of the constitution had been grossly violated, as appeared from the facts disclosed in that important report. Among other matters of serious import, he charged that money had been raised by the Government without the consent of Parliament, by means of Exchequer Bills. Mr. Serjeant Best also introduced and carried through Parliament a Bill for improving the livings of the metropolitan clergy, who expressed their approbation and gratitude by the donation of a magnificent piece of plate, bearing a suitable inscription.

From these facts it will be seen that the deceased nobleman's early politics were of a Liberal tendency. In March, 1809, Mr. Sergeant Best was elected Recorder of Guildford, in the place of Lord Grantley. In the following year he was counsel for the Earl of Leicester against the Morning Herald, for a libel published in that journal upon that individual, the odious circumstances of which have been recently revived by proceedings in Parliament, in connection with the title and estates of the Townshend family. The damages nominated by the verdict were 1,000*l*.—a result chiefly owing to the speech of "the silver-tongued" advocate. We believe, however, that they were never paid. An intention to move the court for a new trial had the effect of inducing the plaintiff to retire from the litigation.

In 1813 Mr. Sergeant Best was returned to Parliament for Bridport. We no longer find him among the advocates of Liberal opinions; his votes and occasional speeches were henceforward in entire conformity with the desire of the minister. In 1819 Sergeant Best received the first instalment of the reward for his services to the Tory administration. He was raised to the bench as one of the Judges of the Court of King's Bench, and received the honour of knighthood. Shortly after he was made Lord Chief Justice of the Commons Pleas, which he held till 1825, when he retired upon his pension, and was elevated to the peerage by the title of Baron Wynford. As a judge, his lordship's conduct has been the subject of severe remark. During the latter part of his parliamentary career, he had gradually relinquished his early Liberal predilections, and had become a high Tory. On the bench, his political prejudices were not always kept in subordination to the strict impartiality which ought to mark the judicial office. Such was his frequent intemperance in summing up a case, that he obtained the sobriquet of "the Judge-Advocate;" and his conduct was brought under the notice of Parliament, Mr. Creevy having made it the subject of complaint in the House of Commons.

The circumstances which led to the retirement of Sir William D. Best from the chief seat in the Common Pleas are not generally known. We believe the following statement contains the true version, and will not now be read without interest. When Sir Charles Wetherell vacated the attorney-generalship, ministers found themselves in some perplexity, shewn by the unusual time which elapsed before the nomination of a successor to the post. After having once before suffered another to be put over his head the first law-officer, Sir Nicholas Tindal (then Solicitor-General) could not, without being a party to his own degradation, again submit to such an indignity. To have promoted him to the attorney-generalship would have involved the necessity of an appeal to his constituents; which, if disastrous, as it was likely it would be, and following upon Mr. (now Sir Robert) Peel's rejection at Oxford, it would have been not only disagreeable, but probably fatal to the Government. A vacancy was therefore created for him on the bench. Sir N. Tindal would have preferred to have been made Chief Baron of the Exchequer; and it was actually proposed to Chief Baron Alexander that he should retire upon a peerage; but the proposition was rejected. The Chief Baron had no claim to a pension, and had no disposition to resign the solid advantages of his post for the empty honours of a peerage. The next application was to Chief Justice Best, who had already thrown out hints of a desire for a coronet. The prospect of obtaining the object of his hopes had such an effect upon a constitution already impaired by hereditary gout, as to bring him at once within the meaning and intent of the Acts of Parliament regulating the retirement and pensions of the judges. His case was decided as being within the statutory provisions; and his lordship retired with a pension of 3,750*l*. But, although compelled to withdraw from the bench, no longer able to perform its duties, and under a statute which requires that the judge to whom the pension is granted shall be afflicted with "a permanent bodily infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office," Lord Wynford was nominated to the office of deputy speaker of the House of Lords—in direct violation of the terms, as well as the spirit, of the wholesome statute. On the formation of the Grey administration in 1830, this disgraceful job was set aside. The disappointment inflicted on Lord Wynford was never forgiven.

The deceased peer married, in 1794, the second daughter of Jerome Knapp, esq. who has been some years dead, and by whom he had ten children, four of whom only, however, survive him, namely, the Hon. William Samuel, who succeeds to the title, born 1798, and married the youngest daughter of William Hoytt, esq. of Berkshire; the Hon. Captain Thomas Best, R.N. married to the second daughter of Lord Kenyon; the Hon and Rev. Samuel Best, rector of Abbott Ann, Hants, and married to the youngest daughter of Sir James Burroughs, late one of the judges of the Common Pleas; and the Hon. Grace Anne, married to Philip Luke Godsal, esq.—Globe.

Lord Wynford was a man of many and varied accomplishments — a scholar, an orator, a lawyer, a man as highly distinguished for his conversational as for his Parliamentary talents; a man of pleasure, and yet a severe student; one whose days seemed given to the engrossing profession of the law, and his nights to the business of legislation; yet he always found time to mingle in gay society, and to be more a man of the world than members of the legal profession are generally supposed to be. He was a man of sudden impulses, but of kindly feelings; of very warm temper, but in general of most amiable deportment. It is no flattery to say of him, that he was an able advocate, an upright though hasty judge, in many respects an enlightened senator, and most certainly an accomplished gentleman. Though endowed with great intellectual power, he never trampled on a fallen opponent. No man better understood or seemed more heartily to love that of which Englishmen are justly proud—their maintenance of "fair play." Easily excited to indignation against crime, he always seemed to regard the offender with feelings of deep compassion. The bench where he presided was one of justice, but it was also one of mercy.—Times.

MR. BARON GURNEY.

We regret to announce the death of Sir John Gurney, late one of the Barons of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer, which took place on the 1st instant, at his residence in Lincoln's-inn-fields, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. In 1793 he was called to the bar, and in 1797 he married the daughter of W. Hawes, Esq. M.D. In 1816 he was appointed a King's counsel, and in 1832 he was promoted to the bench, on which occasion he received the honour of knighthood. It will be recollected that the learned judge resigned his judicial office on account of ill-health a few weeks since. The name of Gurney is associated in the mind of almost every reader with acts of enlarged munificence. The habits of Sir John Gurney were in perfect harmony with the reputation for benevolence which so many members of his family enjoy. It is said that his clerk was in the habit of dispensing several hundreds a-year in small donations upon cases carefully selected and liberally relieved. The deceased judge was a man eminent for his attention to religious duties, and it is believed equally eminent for the practice of many Christian virtues. On religious subjects, however, he was a man who not only thought for himself, but more than once changed his opinions. In early life he was a member of an Independent congregation at Clapham, of which the Rev. G. Browne was the minister. As he advanced in years he manifested an evident leaning towards Unitarian opinions; but before his elevation to the bench he joined the Church of England. It need scarcely be added that his life and character caused him to be regarded as one of its most worthy members.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

JOHN COUNTER, Appellant, v. JOHN M'PHERSON, SAMUEL CRANE, and ALEXANDER FERGUSON, Respondents.

Where appellant had entered into a contract to demise certain premises for a term to the respondents, and previously to the commencement of the term to repair the old premises and build a new warehouse; and the respondents entered accordingly at the day agreed upon; but before the appellant had completed the building and repairs, and before the lease was executed, and a fire soon after destroyed the premises:

Held, that the respondents were not bound to execute a lease and rebuild the destroyed premises, the appellant not having completed [illegible] contract, and that till such completion the premises were at his risk.(a)

This was an appeal from a decree of the Executive Council of the province of Canada, bearing date the 20th day of February, 1843, whereby the decree of the Court of Chancery for the province of Upper Canada, pronounced by the Vice-Chancellor, and bearing date the 9th day of December, 1841, was reversed, and the bill of complaint of the present appellant was dismissed with costs.

The object of the suit, which was instituted by the present appellant on the 27th day of July, 1840, was the specific performance of an alleged agreement entered into between him and the present respondents for a lease, to be granted by him to the respondents for five years, from the 1st of April, 1840, of a wharf and warehouses in the town of Kingston, which after the 1st of April, 1840, but before the appellant had duly performed the agreement on his part, were destroyed by accidental fire. By the agreement, which appears to have been only partially reduced into writing, the appellant was under an obligation to erect, according to a plan agreed upon, a new warehouse upon part of the ground to be demised, and to put the old stores or warehouses into repair; and the amount of the rent was to be determined with reference to the amount of the appellant's expenditure in erecting the new warehouse. One of the principal grounds of the resistance, on the part of the respondents, to a specific performance of the agreement insisted on by the appellant was, that at the time of the fire the appellant had not completed the building and repairs, which, according to the alleged agreement, he had agreed to execute; and was not therefore in a condition to call upon the respondents to accept a lease, or to execute a counterpart, containing the usual covenants to repair, and for payment of rent.

The agreement was contained in a series of letters between the appellant and the respondents.

The counsel for the appellant were, Bethel and Shabeen, for the respondents Kindersley, G. Turner, and E. J. Lloyd.

The case was some time ago argued at great length on both sides; and the judgment of the Lords of the Privy Council was delivered on Monday last by Mr. PEMBERTON LEIGH.

As the judgment, which is of great length, contains a review and history of the whole case, and of the arguments on each side, the judgment only is reported.

JUDGMENT.

In this case a bill was filed by the appellant in the Court of Chancery in Canada, seeking the specific performance of an agreement entered into by the respondents. The Vice Chancellor made a decree in favour of the plaintiff. From this decision the respondents appealed to the Governor-General in Council, who reversed the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, and dismissed the plaintiff's bill, with costs. From this order the present appeal is brought.

The terms of the agreement between the parties are to be collected from a correspondence which began in the month of August 1839, and terminated on the 3rd of January, 1840. That these letters constitute a valid agreement is not disputed by the respondents, although it has been contended on their behalf at the bar that the contract is one with respect to which a court of equity ought not to interfere, and that the parties should be left to their legal rights and remedies.

The case appears to be this:—The appellant was the owner of a wharf and three stores at Kingston, in Upper Canada. Upon part of the property the appellant carried on what is called a "forwarding business." One of the stores was in the occupation of a Mr. Jackson, and another in the possession of the respondents, under a sub-contract with a public company, who had taken a lease from the appellant, and whose interest would expire on the 1st of April, 1840. In this state of circumstances the respondents entered into a negotiation for a lease of the whole of the premises for a term of five years from the 1st of April, 1840. After much discussion, it was finally agreed between the appellant and respondents, that the appellant should put in order the existing stores, and should build a new store, or warehouse, according to a plan referred to in the correspondence, but not proved in the cause; that these works should be completed by the 1st of April, 1840, and that the respondents should then take a lease for the term of five years from that day, at a rent of 250*l.* per annum, if the sum expended by the appellant in the erection of the new buildings should not exceed 600*l.*, and if the sum so expended should exceed 600*l.* then at an additional rent, calculated at the rate of 1[?] per cent. upon the excess. Possession of the whole of the property was to be delivered to the respondents on the 1st of April, 1840, and they were to engage to restore the premises at the end of the term in as good a condition as that in which they were when possession was taken. It appears also that the appellant was to relinquish his "forwarding business" in favour of the respondents. In pursuance of this arrangement, the building of the new warehouse was commenced, but when the 1st of April arrived, it is admitted on all hands, that the warehouse was far from being completed, and the evidence shews, in our opinion, that the necessary repairs to the old buildings had not been done; and as to part of these buildings had not been commenced. No complaint, however, or at all events no objection to the completion of the contract, was made on that ground by the respondents, and if time was of the essence of the contract, we have no doubt that all right of objection on that score was waived by them. They continued in possession of that part of the premises which they previously held, which, but for the contract, they should have given up on the 1st of April, and the works in progress were continued with their approbation.

In this state of things, on the 1st of April, 1840, the rights of the parties stood thus. The appellant was bound by his contract to perform his agreement by putting the old stores in order and completing the new building in reasonable time; and upon this being done, the respondents were bound to accept a lease according to their agreement. But they could not be required to accept a lease until the works were done, nor could the rent, until that time, be ascertained. If the appellant refused to perform the works, or neglected to do so within a reasonable time after notice, the respondents would be at liberty to put an end to the agreement. The obligation on the defendants to accept the lease was conditional on the appellant's putting the premises into the state in which he had contracted to demise them to the respondents. The waiver of the respondents extended not to the works being done, but only to the time within which they were to be completed. After the 1st of April the appellant accordingly continued the works which had been begun, and commenced repairs upon the old buildings; but while the works were in progress an accident occurred which has given rise to the present litigation. On the 18th of April, 1840, a fire broke out upon the premises, which destroyed or materially injured all the stores. The appellant insisted that the respondents, at their own expense, should rebuild and restore what had been destroyed or injured, and accept a lease on the terms of their agreement. This the respondents refused to do, and on the 27th of July, 1840, the present bill was filed.

It is material to attend to the allegations of the bill, and the relief sought by it, in order to understand the real nature of the question, and of the only question which it raised. After stating the correspondence and some other matters with respect to which there is no dispute between the parties, it alleged that "the respondents, in the month of April 1840, entered into possession of the premises, and continued in possession up to the time of filing the bill." It stated that, "in the same month of April, part of the premises were destroyed by fire, and other parts materially injured thereby, and that the appellant had applied to the respondents specifically to perform their agreement, and to accept a lease upon the terms of such agreement, and to rebuild and repair the said premises accordingly," which they refused. After some charges, not material to the present purpose, the bill charged, "that the said warehouse was erected and fit for occupation, on the 1st day of April, or within a few days thereafter, and that the respondents had actually taken possession of the said warehouse for many days before the same was burnt down and destroyed, and had actually caused the inside thereof to be boarded up or lined for the reception of wheat in bulk, and had erected, or were erecting, machinery to convey wheat in bulk to the upper stories, whereby the appellant was prevented from completing the said warehouse. And the bill charged that the respondents received goods as custom-house warehousemen after the 1st of April 1840, and deposited the same in the said warehouse, and also deposited therein a considerable quantity of flour, and not less than 4,000, 3,000, or 2,000 barrels, and accepted, took, and retained the possession of the key of the said warehouse."

These allegations, though not perhaps in all respects quite consistent with each other, appear to amount to this, that previously to the fire, the appellant had substantially performed his agreement, by erecting and making fit for occupation the new warehouse; and the bill accordingly contained no suggestion of any thing remaining to be done in that respect by him.

The prayer of the bill was, that the said agreement might be specifically performed and carried into execution, and that the said respondents might be decreed to accept a lease of the said premises from the said appellant, and to execute to the said appellant a counterpart thereof upon the terms of the aforesaid agreement, the said appellant being ready and willing and thereby offering to execute such lease, and in all other respects to perform his part of the said agreement; and that an account might be taken, by and under the direction and decree of the Court, of all sum and sums of money paid, laid out, and expended for or on account of the said improvements, and that in the said lease the rent of the said premises might be fixed and determined at the said sum of 250*l.* and together with an addition thereto, at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, upon such sum of money as should appear to have been expended upon the said improvements over and above the said sum of 600*l.*; and that the said respondents might be decreed to repair and rebuild the said premises, and to enter into all usual and necessary covenants, and to keep and leave the same in good and sufficient repair, and for general relief.

(a) As to the decisions at law on this subject, see the case of Walton v. Waterhouse (2 Wms. Saund. 421), and the notes).

The respondents denied that they had ever taken possession of any part of the property under the agreement, and they insisted that they were not bound under the circumstances either to rebuild the stores or warehouse, or to accept any lease with that obligation. Upon a record so framed the substantive question between the parties was this—which of them was to suffer by the fire which had taken place; and unless the appellant was justified in requiring the restoration of the property by the respondents at their own expense, he was not entitled to any relief upon his bill.

With respect to the only questions of fact in dispute, namely, the condition of the buildings when the fire took place and the acceptance of possession by the respondents, the parties went into evidence the result of which appears to us to be as follows:— We think that, after the 1st of April, the possession remained very much as it had done before; the respondents continued in the occupation of that portion of which they were previously in possession, although their old title to such possession had ceased. The appellant remained in possession of that part which he held, and a part seems to have been unoccupied. The old buildings had not been repaired, and the new warehouse was so far from being completed and fit for occupation, that at the time of the fire it had neither doors nor windows, the floor of the second story was not laid, and that of the first was not complete.

On the other hand, it appears that the delay had arisen in part from some alterations in the plan which had been suggested by the respondents, to which the appellant had assented, provided they were done at the expense of the respondents. Of the unfinished building (as far as any possession could be had of it), both the appellant and the respondents seem to have had the use, by placing under the shelter of the roof such goods as they found it convenient to deposit there. Upon this state of the record and of the evidence, the Vice-Chancellor pronounced the following decree:— That the agreement contained in the letters set forth in the bill, and bearing date the 19th day of August, 1839, the 29th day of August, 1839, the 20th day of August, 1839, the 1st day of January, 1840, the 2nd day of January, 1840, the 3rd day of January, 1840, and the 3rd day of January, 1840, ought to be carried into execution, save and except the putting in order of the stores therein mentioned before the commencement of the lease thereby agreed to be executed, which was waived by the defendants, and did decree the same accordingly; and it was ordered that it be referred to the Master of the said court to inquire and state to the said Court what amount was expended by the plaintiff on the new buildings in the pleadings mentioned, beyond the sum of 600*l.*; and it was further ordered that a lease should be executed by the appellant to the respondents of the premises in question in the said cause, for the term of five years, from the 1st day of April, 1840, at the yearly rent of 250*l.* and 12 per cent. per annum on such sum as the said Master should find to be expended by the plaintiff on such new building as aforesaid beyond the sum of 600*l.*; such lease to contain a covenant on the part of the defendants for the payment of the said rent during the said term, and to restore the said premises at the expiration thereof in the same plight and condition as the same were at the commencement of the lease, and such other provisions as should be conformable to the said agreement, save as afore-said; and the said respondents were to execute a counterpart of the said lease, and they were thereby enjoined from shewing in any action at law that such lease was not delivered on the day of the date thereof. And it was further ordered, that the said lease should be settled by the Master in case the parties should differ about the same, and that the respondents should pay unto the appellant, or his solicitor, the costs of the said suit, to be taxed by the said Master.

An appeal was brought by the present respondents against this decision to the Governor-General in Council, who, on the 20th day of February, 1843, reversed the decree, and dismissed the bill, with costs. The propriety of this last order we have now to consider.

The case was argued on both sides before us with great ingenuity and ability. On the part of the appellant it was contended, that he was entitled to have the buildings restored by the respondents to the condition in which they were when the fire broke out; but as upon the evidence it was impossible to argue that the appellant had completed the works which he had contracted to perform, it was admitted, that after the respondents had restored the buildings to their imperfect state, the obligation of completing them would rest with the appellant.

The appellant's claim was rested on the principle that a party who has entered into a binding contract for the purchase of an estate, becomes in equity the owner of it, and is entitled to any profit, and subject to any loss which may afterwards occur to it; and it was said that in this case, although the period at which the works were to be done had passed before they were completed, yet, that the respondents having waived any objection on that score, the contract was still subsisting, and the principle was to be applied. The case of Pain v. Miller (6 Ves.) was particularly relied on. In that case the defendant had contracted for the purchase of a house; the house was destroyed by fire after the period had passed within which the title was to be made out and the contract completed; but further time to make out the title had been allowed by the purchaser, who had accepted it before the fire took place, and, under these circumstances, the purchaser was held bound to pay his purchase-money. The more familiar cases of the purchase of a life annuity, and the annuity dropping before the assignment, and the purchase of estates held upon a life, and the life dropping, were also referred to. (Mortimer v. Capper, 1 Bro. 156; and Kenny v. Wexham, 6 Mad. 355.) We have carefully examined these cases and several subsequent authorities on the same subject, the last of which is Vesey v. Ellgood (3 Drury & Warren, 76).

Of the general doctrine so stated we apprehend that there is no doubt; but the question is, whether that principle, or any doctrine to be found in any of the authorities, maintains the appellant's claim in this case. In ordinary cases of absolute and unconditional contracts, the risk is the risk of the purchaser, because that which is the subject of the risk is in equity considered to be the property of the purchaser. But treating the contract to take a lease as a contract to purchase, the warehouse was never in that sense purchased by the lessees until it was completed by the lessor; and until that had been done, therefore, it was not the property of the lessees. They had never contracted to take an unfinished warehouse; they had never engaged to do any repairs, or to accept or restore any unfinished or dilapidated buildings; and although after the 1st of April, 1840, the contract was still binding in equity, provided the appellant performed it on his part, yet until he had so performed, no obligation attached on the lessees. They could not object that the lessor had not performed his engagement within the time limited, but they had a right to require that he should perform it before they were called on to accept a lease. They were to receive a complete building at the commencement of the term, and to restore a complete building at the end of it, and to pay a rent calculated upon the amount of the expenditure. The accident of the fire interrupted and delayed the completion of the work, but it could not relieve the appellant from his obligation to complete it. It was said that this case was decided by the judges of appeal upon some rules acted upon by courts of common law, but inconsistent with the principles of courts of equity. We are not aware that upon the main question in this case there could be any difference between the decision of a court of law and a court of equity. The question is, was it or not incumbent on the appellant to repair the old buildings and complete the new before he could require the respondents to accept a lease according to their agreement? If he was so bound, there is, in our opinion, nothing in the circumstances of this case which could relieve him from that obligation. The fire could have no such effect, nor would the circumstance that the delay in the completion of the building was in part attributable to the appellant's compliance with the suggestions of the respondents. The contract, in equity, was subsisting, although by the omission of the appellant to complete his part of it by the time stipulated, it might have become void at law; and if the appellant had been willing to restore the buildings, the obligation of the respondents to accept a lease might have been differently determined in law and in equity. But the construction of the contract, or the liability of the appellant within some time to perform what he had engaged to do before he called upon the respondents to accept a lease, was not at all altered.

Had our opinion upon the main question been different from that which we have found, it would have been necessary to consider several points of great importance which have been discussed at the bar, and in particular, as has been contended on the one hand, that the Court ought so to modify the relief prayed by the bill, or could so modify it, as to do substantial justice between the parties; or whether, as has been insisted on the other hand, having regard to some of the terms of this contract, the alleged want of mutuality of remedy, and the difficulty (or as it has been called, impossibility) of placing the parties by any decree in the situation in which they ought by the contract to stand, the appellant should have been left to any legal remedy which he might have.

The view which we take of the rights of the parties makes it unnecessary for us to enter into any discussion of these questions, further than as an examination of the relief which it has been proposed to ask appears to us to elucidate the principle upon which our decision is founded.

It was said that there were two modes in which substantial justice might be done; one was by decreeing a lease to be executed, dated on the 1st of April, 1840, containing covenants by the appellant to repair and complete the buildings, and by the respondents to keep in repair and restore them at the end of the term, and it was said that there would then be a subsisting lease, and an action against the appellant for the non-performance of his engagement to build and repair.

But, in the first place, the respondents never entered into any such engagement, they never agreed to accept the appellant's covenant to do the work after the commencement of the term; and if they had, the obligation on the appellant to complete the building, notwithstanding the fire, would have remained precisely the same. Another mode suggested was this; that the lease should be dated as on the day of the fire, and that the respondents should be considered as taking the premises as they stood before the accident on that day, and should undertake, by some covenant, an obligation to restore them to that condition; and that the appellants, on the other hand, should covenant to complete them when restored. Now, it is obvious, that this is to impose upon the parties a contract which they never entered into, either by expression or implication; and although where a binding contract is subsisting, the completion of which, in its exact terms, becomes impossible through accident, without any default of the party seeking relief, a court of equity will struggle with points of form, it cannot, for that purpose, alter the substance of the agreement, or impose upon either party obligations totally different from those which by the agreement he had contracted to perform.

In this case, there is no reason why the Court, upon any principle of moral justice, should at all desire to interfere. Both parties are equally innocent; and the only question is, upon which of them the loss arising from an inevitable accident is to fall. The claim to relief has accordingly been very fairly rested in argument by the appellant upon the general principle that the buildings, when the fire took place, were, in equity, the property, and therefore standing at the risk, of the respondents.

For the reasons assigned, we are of opinion that this principle is not applicable to the case, and that the decision appealed from is right, and must be affirmed.

With respect to the costs, as there have been conflicting decisions below, the case was very naturally brought here by appeal; but we think that, upon the main question, the respondents have, from the beginning, been right; and that some material allegations of the bill, which must have been within the knowledge of the appellant, are directly contradicted by the evidence; we do not think, therefore, that there is any reason for excepting this case from the ordinary rule, and we think that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Dec. 4, 1844, Feb. 11, 1845.

THE MARQUIS OF HERTFORD v. LORD LOWTHER.

Construction—Cumulative or substitutional legacies—Exceptions.

The testator had a certain kind of foreign stock, and by two different codicils refers in terms to that stock, and disposes of it to the same person by both codicils: Held, to be a specific legacy, and that the second gift was a substitution for the first, and not cumulative. But where two different sums of money were given by the same codicils, though in some degree connected by expression with the specific gift, those pecuniary legacies held to be cumulative, there being no sufficient indication of intention to overturn the general rule.

This question arose upon the construction of two of the codicils to the will of the late Marquis of Hertford. By a codicil dated the 17th of September, 1835, executed at Boulogne, the Marquis of Hertford, after some other bequests and directions, proceeded thus: "To Matilda, Countess Berchtoldt, besides Austrian metalliques for one hundred and four thousand florins, I give five thousand pounds." After making several intermediate codicils not affecting the present question, the Marquis of Hertford, by another codicil, dated the 27th day of January, 1837, made the following bequest and statement:—"This is a codicil to the will of me, Francis Charles, Marquis of Hertford. Whereas I have by indorsement on two little parcels, containing one hundred and four Austrian bonds of one thousand florins each, given them to Matilda, Countess Berchtoldt, I confirm the said disposition, and add to it twenty thousand pounds English currency." The Master had reported that the Austrian bonds mentioned in the second codicil referred to the same thing as the Austrian metalliques mentioned in the first codicil, and the Countess Berchtoldt having excepted to that report, the Master of the Rolls disallowed the exception. From that decision the Countess appealed. It appeared that at the time of the death of the Marquis of Hertford he had no such Austrian securities as those mentioned in the two codicils, and, consequently, unless the gift in the first codicil should be held a general legacy, it had been adeemed by the testator, he having disposed of the specific securities in his lifetime.

Burge and Tripp, for the Countess Berchtoldt, cited a case in Godolphin, p. 438, 4th edition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The first codicil is quite consistent with his having made up two little parcels containing one hundred and four thousand florins, and then he afterwards makes his will, and says, "Besides the Austrian metalliques, I give 5,000*l*." That is quite consistent. It is material to know whether Austrian metalliques are the same thing as Austrian bonds. Does not metallique mean the stock, the bond the evidence which enables the holder to receive the interest, and ultimately the principal, at Vienna? In this country, if you sell stock, you transfer it, in order to enable the receipt of the interest.

Burge.—It was intended to give the Austrian metalliques as a specific gift. It does not appear that the same sort of securities is intended in both codicils.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If the parcel had contained Spanish dollars, what would that be?

Burge.—The presumption of law is that he intended that particular description of stock.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I feel a little in the dark as to what Mr. Burge has said of the difference between Austrian bonds and Austrian metalliques. There is nothing before me upon which I can rely in point of statement as to the nature of the property. If there is no identity between the two, there is an end of the question. It is better that the parties should agree on some statement. If there is something generally known as metalliques, the first codicil would pass that; and if the bonds in the second codicil are something different, then the legacies are cumulative. It is unsatisfactory to come to any decision on this matter in the absence of accurate information as to the nature of these stocks. Let it stand over to make inquiries.

Tuesday, Feb. 11.

Tripp contended, that if the gift in the codicil of 1835 had stood alone, it would have been a general gift, and might have been satisfied by the purchase of so much Austrian metalliques; that it was a demonstrative legacy; and that there was no safe ground to satisfy the Court that the gift of Austrian bonds in the second codicil was a substitution for the gift of Austrian metalliques in the first codicil. It was said on the other side, in the court below, that this was no gift at all.

Tripp cited Robinson v. Addison (2 Beav, 515); Onions v. Tyrer (1 P. Wms. 343); Gage v. Sharp (1 Myl. & Keen. 529).

Sir C. Wetherell and Schomberg contrà, contended, that it was a gift, with a descriptive reference to something besides the will, namely Austrian metalliques, the existing documents which represent 104,000 florins. It had reference to a physical gift. Here there was enough to control the effect of the word "besides." There is no case in which the Court has held foreign stock in the way it has English stock, as equivalent to money. In the first codicil, the testator gave Austrian metallic stock; by the second, he refers to the documents which relate to the title to that stock.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It appears that the Marquis of Hertford did purchase 100 bonds of 1,000 florins each, which were in his possession at the time making both the first and second codicils.

Schomberg cited Ashton v. Ashton (3 Peere Williams, 387); Bethune v. Kennedy (1 Myl. & Cr. 114); Lord Powis v. Lord Mansfield (3 Myl. & Craig, 359).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I think the case stronger than when before the Master of the Rolls. The affidavit of Mr. Hopkinson states, that he often bought and sold securities of this kind. The Master of the Rolls seems to have considered the gift to have referred to some specific object. If a person has 3,000*l*. in the Three per Cents. and he makes a gift and refers to that sum, it will be specific, unless circumstances shew that it is demonstrative.

Tripp, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The testator had in his possession 104 bonds for 1,000 florins each of Austrian metalliques, when he said, "Besides Austrian metalliques for 104,000 florins, I give 5,000*l*." I conceive that he referred to these Austrian bonds, which he had bought a few years before. Besides this, two years afterwards, when he was still in possession of these bonds, he makes another codicil, in which he says in effect, that he has put in a parcel and given to the Countess of Berchtoldt the same sum of Austrian bonds. This points to the same legacy, and throws light upon it; and when he says, "I confirm that disposition," it is obvious that he means the same thing. I have no doubt that the disposition in the second codicil is a substitution for the first codicil. There is a distinct reference in each codicil to the same subject-matter. The decision of the Master of the Rolls is right, and the Master decided the appeal must be dismissed.

Exceptions had also been taken by the plaintiff to the Master's report, which stated that the legacy of 5,000*l*. in the first codicil, and that of 20,000*l*. in the second codicil, were cumulative. The Master of the Rolls had disallowed that exception, and the plaintiff appealed.

Sir Charles Wetherell and Schomberg contended that the gift in the second codicil, where the testator said, "I confirm that gift and add to it 20,000*l*. English currency," was an entire gift, and operated as a substitution for all the benefits given by the first codicil, the 5,000*l*. as well as the metalliques. They cited Hurst v. Beach (5 Maddock, 351).

Tripp, contrà.

Sir C. Wetherell, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There are certain rules for construing bequests of this nature, one of which is, that where two different sums are given, the legacies are held to be cumulative. That may of course be moulded by other circumstances which indicate a contrary intention. But I think in these codicils to the will there is not sufficient indication of intention to overturn the general rule. Here, in two different instruments, he has given two distinct sums, and there is no indication sufficient to displace the general rule which renders such gifts cumulative. The costs of both appeals will come out of the testator's general personal estate. The will is framed as if the testator had directed a general reference of a large sum to the distribution of the Master.

Wednesday, Feb. 19.

Re BANNISTER, a Lunatic.

Perishable property of the lunatic—Practice in lunacy—Maintenance.

The next of kin of this lunatic presented a petition praying that the property of the lunatic, which consisted entirely of Long Annuities, producing an income of 350*l*. might be sold, and the produce invested in Three per Cent. Consols. The cost of maintaining the patient at the lunatic asylum, where he had resided for several years, amounted to 250*l*. a year, and it was shewn that the property, when invested in Consols, would produce more than that amount of income. The lunatic is sixty five years of age, and consequently, should he live fifteen years, or to the age of eighty, the Long Annuities would then expire, and he would be without any means of subsistence.

Amphlet supported the petition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If the sum of 250*l*. a year is sufficient for his maintenance, the sum of 100*l*. a year can be laid by to accumulate, and thus supply a fund for his maintenance should he survive the termination of the Long Annuities. This will amount to the same thing as selling the annuities and reinvesting in Consols. There is no necessity for any reference as to the propriety of selling the Long Annuities. Upon the production of an affidavit from the people at the asylum that the sum of 250*l*. is sufficient to insure the lunatic all necessary comforts, I will reduce the allowance for maintenance to that sum without a reference. The affidavit must be very full and distinct, so as to satisfy me that the lunatic's comforts will not be lessened.

Re OTTE, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Non-completion of securities by the committee of the estate—Costs.

Lowndes supported a petition by the committee of the estate, who was the brother of the lunatic, praying that he might now be allowed to perfect his securities. He had been ordered to complete them by the 4th of Nov. last, but had been unable to do so; he was, however, now prepared to give in sufficient sureties.

Lloyd, for the committee of the person, the sister of the lunatic, would state the circumstances, and leave it to his lordship to consider whether the committee was a fit person to be continued in that office. The commissioner made a report approving of Mr. Otte as committee of the estate, on the 14th of June, 1843; and an order to confirm that report was made on the 4th of July, 1843, by which the committee was directed to complete his securities by the 1st of Sept. in the same year. Nothing, however, was done, and urgent representations by committee of the person were made to Mr. Otte to proceed, and much inconvenience resulted in the lunacy from the allowance not being provided for out of the proper funds. Another petition was presented by the committee of the person to the same effect as the previous one, and stating the change of circumstances which had occurred, which was heard on the 24th of July, 1844, which fixed the 4th of November following for the completion of the committee's securities. Mr. Otte then applied to the commissioner for an enlargement of the time for putting in his securities; but up to the 27th of December he did nothing more than execute the bond. A further unexplained delay up to the 8th of January, happened, and then one of the sureties approved of refused to execute the bond, or make the necessary affidavit. The commissioner, seeing the effect of the delay was to affect prejudicially the comfort of the lunatic, directed that a warrant should be taken out for the appointment of a new committee, and Mr. Golding was appointed. It was for his lordship's consideration whether the petitioner was a fit person, having shewn himself so remiss, to be appointed to manage the estate of another person. At all events, the committee of the estate must pay all the costs to which the estate of the lunatic had been subjected by his delay.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Does Mr. Otte know what these costs will be? He must make good to the estate all the costs which have been occasioned by his delay.

Lowndes, in reply.—The petitioner had been informed that he must pay all the costs of the petition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The costs are not limited to the costs of that petition, for the estate has suffered loss, and he must indemnify it against all costs. Not to enter into any detail as to the costs, if the committee had completed his securities, no such state of circumstances as the present would have existed. He now applies for leave to complete those securities, and he must make good all the costs occasioned by reason of his not having before completed them. I have stated the principle, but of course it will not apply to costs improperly incurred, if there have been any such. I understand there is no imputation on Mr. Otte's character, and that he is a proper person to be appointed committee of the estate. But he has by his delay occasioned injury and loss to the lunatic and her estate, and he must indemnify that estate. The question still remains open to the commissioner to consider whether he is a proper person under the circumstances to be appointed committee. I should like to know how he explains this delay.

Lowndes.—A Chancery suit was pending, in which a fund had been ascertained in which the lunatic was interested. Some money had to be paid in by a trustee.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Is he to be an actor in the suit? if so, the delay may be of serious consequence. If the fund has been actually carried over, the delay may not be of much consequence.

Lloyd.—The affidavits shew that the proceedings in the cause had been stopped by the delay.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What is the cause of the delay?

Lowndes.—The trustee ordered to pay in money only did so in July 1844. Having resided for many years abroad, Mr. Otte had but a limited acquaintance in England. Sufficient sureties for the sum required (1,600*l*.) have now been found, who are willing to enter into the necessary obligations. The estate of the lunatic consists solely of a sum of 16,000*l*. in the funds; so that the business of the committee of the estate will consist only of receiving the dividends and handing them over.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Considering the relationship of the parties, let him be appointed, on his indemnifying the estate of the lunatic, and Mrs. Golding, the sister, against all costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred in the lunacy by reason of the delay in perfecting the committee's securities. It would only add to the expense to refer the matter to the commissioner. If any difficulty occurs, the commissioner will communicate with the taxing officer.

Lloyd.—The petitioner should not be appointed until the costs are paid.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—That would cause delay. He has been let in upon the terms of paying the costs, and if he shall not pay those costs, he is liable to be turned out. The securities are to be completed in a fortnight.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Thursday, Feb. 13.

BAKER v. WETTON.

Practice—Mortgage—Right to redeem—Statute of Limitations—Demurrer.

S. B. in the year 1819 made a conditional surrender of certain copyholds of which she was seized, according to the custom of the manor of E. to C. C. W. to secure the repayment of a sum of money. In 1837, C. C. W. was, in default of payment, as he alleged, admitted tenant of the premises according to the custom in fee, subject to the equity of redemption, upon payment of the sum advanced by him, and interest.

The bill stated that the said C. C. W. shortly after the date and execution of the mortgage (i. e. 1819), entered into possession, or into the receipt of the rents and profits, and was then in possession of the property, or receipt of rents, and that out of the rents and profits, and from various sums of money received from the said S. B. during her lifetime, he had been more than repaid the principal and interest. S. B. died in January 1810, a widow, and intestate, leaving C. B. the wife of W. B. her only child and heiress-at-law, and heiress according to the custom of the said manor of E. her surviving, and therefore W. B. and C. B. his wife, the plaintiffs, claimed to be entitled to the equity of redemption in the premises. The bill prayed for an account of the principal and interest paid by the defendant C. C. W. on the execution of the mortgage, and of the interest since accrued due thereon. Also of the sums of money received by him during the mortgagor's lifetime, and of the rents and profits received by him, the said C. C. W.; and that the same might be applied in the first place to pay the interest, and in the second place to sink the principal, and the residue, if any, to be paid to the plaintiffs. But if any thing should appear to be due to the mortgagee, then upon payment of the same, that he might surrender the mortgaged premises to the use of the plaintiff C. B. or as he should direct.

To this bill the defendant put in a demurrer; first, for want of equity, the bill shewing that the defendant had been in possession for more than twenty years; secondly, for want of parties, the personal representative of S. B. deceased, not being upon the record.

Demurrer, for want of equity, overruled, allowed as to want of parties, with liberty to amend.

The bill was filed 7th January, 1845, and it appears that one Sarah Boucher, sometimes called Sarah Cranham, late of the parish of Egham, Surrey, widow, made a conditional surrender, by way of mortgage, of certain copyhold property, held according to the custom of the manor of Egham, to C. C. Wetton, of the same place, for the purpose of securing to him the repayment of the sum of 180*l.* with interest, on a certain day therein named, but long since past.

The bill stated that the said C. C. Wetton was, on or about the 27th of November, 1837, in default of payment (as he alleged) of the said sum of 180*l.* and interest, at the time appointed for payment thereof by the condition, admitted tenant of the hereditaments according to the custom of the said manor, to hold to him, the said C. C. Wetton, his heirs and assigns, subject nevertheless to the equity of redemption thereof upon payment of the said sum of 180*l.* and interest. It moreover stated that the said C. C. Wetton, shortly after the date and execution of the said surrender by way of mortgage, entered into possession of the said mortgaged hereditaments, or into the receipt of the rents and profits thereof, and that the said defendant had ever been and was then in such possession or receipt, and had received the same rents and profits to a very considerable amount in the whole; and that he had received from or on account of the said Sarah Boucher in her lifetime, various sums of money on account and in satisfaction of the said principal sum of 180*l.*; and that by means of the rents and profits of the said hereditaments which had been received by the said defendant, and of the several sums of money from time to time, and of the several sums of money from time to time paid to or received by him, the said defendant, from or on account of the said Sarah Boucher in her lifetime, the said defendant had been greatly more than repaid the principal sum of 180*l.* and all interest thereon.

Sarah Boucher, the mortgagor, died in the month of January, 1840, a widow, and intestate as to the said copyholds, and left the plaintiff, Caroline Baker, then and now the wife of the plaintiff, W. Baker, her only child and heiress-at-law, and heiress according to the custom of the said manor of Egham, her surviving, and therefore the plaintiffs claimed, in right of the plaintiff Caroline Baker, to be entitled to the equity of redemption of the said hereditaments. The bill prayed that an account might be taken of the principal money advanced by the defendant to the said Sarah Boucher, deceased, on the execution of the mortgage, and of the interest which had since accrued due thereon. Also an account of the sums of money which were received by the defendant from, or on account of, the said Sarah Boucher in her lifetime, and also of the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises which had been received by, or on behalf of, the defendant; and that what should, upon taking such accounts, be found to have been from time to time received by the defendant on account of the said rents and profits or otherwise from, or on account of, the said Sarah Boucher, might be applied in the first place in payment of the interest, and then in sinking the principal, and the residue (if any) might be paid over to the plaintiffs by the defendant. And that the defendant, in such case, or if it should appear that anything was remaining due to the defendant on the mortgage, then, upon payment of what should be found due, might be decreed to surrender and assure the mortgaged hereditaments to the use of the plaintiff, Caroline Baker, her heirs and assigns, or otherwise as she should direct; and the defendant might deliver up possession to the plaintiffs, together with all deeds, &c.

To this bill the defendant put in a demurrer for want of equity, and for want of parties; it appearing on the bill that a legal personal representative of Sarah Boucher in the bill named was a necessary party, but that no such person had been made a party to the bill.

Bethel and Heathfield, for the demurrer, contended that, under the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 28, no suit can be brought to redeem a mortgaged estate after twenty years from the time when the mortgagee entered upon possession, or from the last written acknowledgment.(a) That here there was no acknowledgment in writing, nor were the accounts alleged to have been signed by the mortgagee. The want of equity was therefore clear; for the bill stated that shortly after 1819 the mortgagee entered into possession, that is, shortly after twenty-five years ago. It could not mean to embrace four or five years; and if the term "shortly" was of vague signification, it ought to be interpreted in favour of the defendant, and not to assist the plaintiff. Moreover, the plaintiffs had alleged, upon taking the accounts, it would appear that the defendant had been overpaid; therefore, the personal representative of Mrs. Boucher ought to have been a party to the bill.

Cases for the defendant: Vernon v. Vernon (2 M. & C. 145; Kemp v. Prior (7 Ves. 237).

The Vice-Chancellor.—I will not trouble the plaintiff as to the equity; to that extent I overrule the demurrer.

Bilton, in support of the bill, as to the demurrer for want of parties, contended that the plaintiffs had a right to file their bill without bringing the personal representative of Mrs. Boucher before the Court. Moreover, he was informed that there was no personal representative of that lady in existence.

The Vice-Chancellor thought that, according to the allegations contained in the bill, the personal representatives ought to be brought before the Court; for as the facts were stated, the personal representatives might say, you (the defendant) have been overpaid, and thus subject the parties to a second suit.

Demurrer for want of parties allowed with costs. Leave to amend by adding parties, or otherwise, as plaintiffs may be advised.

(a) By the 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 28, after reciting that doubts had been entertained as to the effect of the above-mentioned statute of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, so far as it related to mortgages, it provides that persons entitled to or claiming under any mortgage of land, &c. may make an entry, or bring an action at law or suit in equity, to recover such land, &c. at any time within twenty years next after the last payment of any part of the principal money or interest secured by such mortgage, although more than twenty years may have elapsed since the time at which the right to make such entry, or bring such action or suit in equity, shall have first accrued.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Nov. 9 and 18.

Churchill v. Marks.

Will—Construction—Restraint upon alienation—Forfeiture—Insolvent—Costs.

A testator gave to A B, for his natural life, the dividends upon a sum of 5,000l. stock, and directed that if he should die or become bankrupt the dividend should be paid to his wife for her life, she to lay it out for the good of his children, and upon the youngest of the children becoming of the age of twenty-one years, the stock to be sold and the money to be divided between such of the children as should be then living equally, but no one of the said children should be allowed, or should ever sell or part with his or her share or interest in the said money until it should be divided; if on proof of any one or more of them having done so, then his or her share should from that time become the property of the other children. After the death of A B, and during his wife's life, and before the youngest of his children attained twenty-one, one of the children took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, and it was held that the restraint upon alienation was effectual, and that the insolvent's share went among the other children, and that the costs of the assignee must be obtained by him out of the insolvent's estate, if any.

James Churchill, by his will dated the 1st of Jan. 1830, gave to his brother, George Churchill, for his natural life, the interest or dividends from 5,000*l.* New Three-and-a-Half per Cent. stock. The will then proceeded in these words:—"He shall never sell or part with the said interest or dividend in any way whatever during his lifetime until it becomes due; and if the said George Churchill should die or become a bankrupt, then the said dividend shall be paid to his said wife, if she shall then be living, for her life. She is to lay it out for the good of his children; but if she should be the longest liver and get married again, then she shall have nothing more to do with the money; the executors or executor shall then have full control over the money, and shall lay it out as they shall think best for such of the children as remain under age; and when the youngest child becomes of the age of twenty-one years, then the said 5,000*l.* shall be sold, and the money shall be then equally divided between such of the said George Churchill's children as shall then be living equally, share and share alike; but no one of the said children shall be allowed or shall ever sell or part with his or her share or interest in the said money until it shall be divided; if on proof of any one or more of them having done so, then his or her share will from that time become the property of the other children; and when the said stock shall become sold, his or her share shall be divided between those other children who shall not have sold: this stock to stand in the name of my executors." The testator died on the 15th of October, 1831, and on the 10th of January, 1836, George Churchill, the brother, died, leaving his widow and six children him surviving.

On the 27th of July, 1840, James Churchill, one of the children of George Churchill, was arrested for debt, and on the 7th of August, 1840, he presented a petition to the Insolvent Debtors Court, under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. Upon that petition the vesting order was made by the Insolvent Debtors Court on the 8th of August. The insolvent's schedule was signed on the 3rd, and filed on the 4th of September, 1840, and on the 27th of February, 1841, he was discharged. Robert Marks, one of the defendants in this suit, was appointed assignee on the 29th of March, 1841. George Churchill's widow died in the month of May 1843. On the 16th of January, 1844, the youngest of George Churchill's children attained the age of twenty-one years, and at this time four only of the children were living, one of them being James Churchill, the insolvent. The object of this suit was to ascertain who was entitled to the fourth share, which, but for his insolvency, would have been the property of James Churchill.

Simons, for the plaintiffs, cited Brandon v. Aston (2 Y. & C. C.C. 24), and Martin v. Maugham (V. C. of Eng. 17th July, 1844).

Koe and Tripp, for the defendant Marks, the assignee, cited Ross v. Ross (1 J. & W. 154); Co. Litt. 206 b, sec. 334; 222 b, sec. 360, and 223 a, sec. 360, and Doe v. Carter (8 Term Rep. 74).

Amphlett, for another defendant.

The Vice-Chancellor said that his present impression was that by the insolvency there had been a parting with the property within the meaning of the will. The next question then would be whether the clause in the will was effectual.

Nov. 18.—The Vice-Chancellor.—The language of the will of the testator, James Churchill, is more brief and restricted than that which I had to construe in Brandon v. Aston, but I remain of opinion that by means of the petition presented by the insolvent and the vesting order upon it, he parted with his interest, if any, under the will within the meaning of that expression contained in it. It has been stated and admitted that these proceedings took place after the deaths of the testator and the insolvent's father, while the insolvent's mother was living, and the widow of his father, and while one of the children of the insolvent's father was a minor. It has not been suggested that the widow did not duly perform the duty imposed upon her by the words "she to lay it out for the good of his children," words which I think certainly cannot be considered as extending beyond the income during her life; and except such interest as the insolvent might have in the application of the income during her life, he had not, under the circumstances which I have mentioned, according to the true construction of the will, acquired, in my judgment, any vested interest in any part of the fund in question at the time of the presenting the petition or of the vesting order. I repeat that I do not consider Brandon v. Aston to have been wrongly decided. I now wish to have the question argued whether the restraint on alienation was effectual.

Koe and Tripp, for the assignee, then argued against the validity of the restraint, and cited Bradley v. Peixoto (3 Ves. 323); and Green v. Harvey (1 Hare, 428).

The Vice-Chancellor.—I am at present of opinion, that, whatever might have been thought of this case 250 years ago, the decisions uniformly recognized as binding for more than a century have rendered it necessary to hold that this clause, worded as it is, is in effect valid. They do not, perhaps, decide it in terms, but they decide it in substance and effect; and therefore, construing this will as I do, I must hold that this clause of forfeiture, shifting clause, or whatever it ought to be called, worded as it is, and with reference to this particular will, must be decided by me to be valid.

Koe then applied for the costs of the assignee out of the testator's estate, but

The Vice Chancellor said that he should make no order for him either to pay or receive costs, but he must get his costs out of the insolvent's estate, if any.

March 3 and 4.

Foster v. Breynton.

Injunction—Reference for impertinence—Impertinence. Motion for injunction to stay trial, there being a reference to the Master upon exceptions for impertinence in the bill, refused with costs.

Where an agreement was set out in verbis, and there being many transactions to be stated in the bill, the plaintiff, some time after the setting out the agreement, repeated a part of the agreement as an introduction to a branch of the transactions, such repetition was held not to be impertinent.

This was a suit for the specific performance of a contract for sale, and also to restrain an action of trespass, commenced against the plaintiff, on account of acts done by him and his agents upon taking possession of the property. On the seventh day after the defendant's appearance, he filed forty exceptions to the bill for impertinence, and an order of reference to the Master upon the exceptions was obtained; the venue being laid in Staffordshire, and the commission day being the 14th instant.

Wigram and Osborne now moved for an injunction to stay the trial, notwithstanding the exceptions, which they alleged were put in for the purpose of delay.

Bilton, for the defendant.

The Vice-Chancellor refused the motion for the injunction, with costs; but said that he would hear the exceptions himself.

March 4.—The exceptions for impertinence were gone through, and in every instance, excepting two, overruled at once.

Bilton, for the defendant.

Osborne, for the plaintiff.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The third and twenty-fourth exceptions stand thus: the plaintiff seeks the specific performance of an agreement for the purchase of an estate; the title is accepted, or all but accepted: various negotiations occurred during the progress of the examination of the title; and ultimately a question about the possession led to an action of trespass. Whether the plaintiff should ultimately appear or not entitled to stop this action, it must be remembered that he is entitled so to frame his bill as to make the answer to it serviceable to him in the action. Independently of this, the authorities of this Court upon specific performance contain cases in which the right to a specific performance has been affected by the conduct of the parties, and therefore, where discovery in such a suit is sought, it is highly relevant that the circumstances under which possession was taken should be accurately stated, and it is therefore that I have held the bill in all other respects but these two not impertinent. These two remaining exceptions stand thus. An agreement is set out in verbis, in a bill, long, but not over long, the transactions not being few; some way on in the bill, for the introduction of some head of the transactions, and to call attention to it, the plaintiff states, unnecessarily I agree, that the agreement provides so and so, though the agreement was before fully stated. Such a thing may be done improperly and oppressively, but if done to make the statement more clear and intelligible, I think it would be harsh and wrong to say that it would be necessarily impertinent, and I therefore hold the bill in these respects to be pertinent, considering the manner in which, and the object for which, this statement is introduced. I have received a communication from one of the judges of this Court, whose opinion I have asked upon the question, and that learned judge says, that he considers the repetition is not impertinent, if not improper to make the statement clear.

HART v. STEVENS.

A husband who receives interest on a promissory note given to his wife dum sola, is a competent witness, on an action brought upon the note by his wife's administrator, to prove the payment of the interest on the note in order to take it out of the Statute of Limitations.

Assumpsit on a promissory note by administrator of a married woman.

Plea—the Statute of Limitations.

On the trial, the plaintiff put in the husband's evidence to the effect that he had received payment of the interest on the note, and that it was thereby taken out of the Statute of Limitations. The note had been given to the wife before her marriage, and it was contended, for the defendant, that the note had been reduced into possession by the husband by the receipt of the interest, and that it vested in him, and, therefore, he had a direct interest, and could not be a competent witness under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85. The learned judge, at the trial, held otherwise, and there was a verdict for the plaintiff, which it was now sought to set aside and enter a nonsuit.

JUDGMENT.

PATTESON, J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was an action on a promissory note by the administrator of a woman to whom it had been given before marriage; the plea was the Statute of Limitations. The only witness called was the husband, who proved repeated payments of interest to himself in his wife's lifetime. She objected to his receiving interest, and it was argued on the judgment of the Court in Macneillage v. Holloway, that he himself had become the owner or rather the holder of the note, having reduced it into his possession by the receipt of interest. For this latter proposition, we think there is no foundation: the decision in that case is wholly inapplicable here. The observations of Lord Ellenborough in giving judgment are undoubtedly too strong, and have been much corrected and modified by this Court in Richards v. Richards, and by the Court of Exchequer in Gaters v. Maddeley. But even if they were in strict accordance with the law, they would not avail the defendant in this case, for they suppose the reduction into possession by the husband during his wife's lifetime, of which his merely receiving interest in the way stated in this case is not even any evidence. We have no doubt that the husband was a competent witness under the late Act, notwithstanding his possible benefit from his wife's estate. It was further argued that, if competent, his evidence did not avail for the purpose for which it was given, namely, the taking the note out of the Statute of Limitations; but it was clear that it did, for if he receives the interest, not in his own right, but as the agent for his wife, which he clearly did, the interest must be paid to her. Therefore this rule must be made absolute. Rule absolute.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Friday, March 7.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Serjeant STEPHEN.)

Re JOHN JONES.

Statement in petition of the value of insolvent's estate must include all his estate, whether incumbered or or unincumbered, notwithstanding the word "unincumbered" in the form of petition.

What is a vexatious defence?

Having defended an action with reasonable grounds for doing so is no ground of opposition, but if the defence was vexatious, the final order will be refused.

This insolvent came up for his first hearing by adjournment from the 24th February (see ante, p. 436), when it appeared that he was entitled to several properties charged with mortgages, and that the values of these several equities of redemption were not inserted in the petition.

Bridges stated that the words in the form of petition, required by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, were so ambiguous as to leave it uncertain whether the value of incumbered property was to be inserted in the petition. The words were, "That your petitioner is desirous that his estate should be administered under the protection and direction of this honourable Court; and that he verily believes such estate is of the value of £ —, at the least, unincumbered, and beyond the value of his wearing apparel, &c." The insolvent has not added the value of property which he has mortgaged, because he could not say that such property was unincumbered.

His HONOUR.—The meaning is not very clearly expressed: but the word "unincumbered" in the form relates to the word "value," and not to the estate; consequently the value of these equities of redemption must be obtained and inserted. The first hearing must be adjourned for that purpose.

Homes, for the assignees, had no objection to this course; but as he was instructed to endeavour to get the interim protection withheld, he hoped in a few minutes to make out a sufficient case of vexatious defence to call for such punishment.

It was then proved that insolvent had joined in a promissory note with one D. Jones, for the payment of 500*l* to Mr. Morgan; that he had defended an action brought by Morgan for the recovery of the note, pleaded several special pleas, and driven the plaintiff to trial, by which the costs, which would have been about 10*l*. if judgment had gone by default, had been increased to upwards of 80*l*.

Homes, for the execution creditor, Mr. Morgan, submitted that this vexatious defence was a sufficient ground for refusing to name a day for the final order, or, at all events, for a suspension of the protection. (Re McNeir, 2 Law T. 76.)

His HONOUR.—There are some circumstances in this case which lead me to infer that the insolvent did not vexatiously defend this action. I perceive that Mr. Baron Alderson dismissed a summons to strike out one of the pleas, because the insolvent had satisfied him that a distinct bonâ fide defence was intended to be set up under each plea. As this case is to be adjourned, I shall, at the adjourned hearing, require the insolvent to satisfy me that he had reasonable grounds for defending the action in the manner he has done. He may have his protection renewed until the adjourned hearing, but if he does not then satisfy me that he was justified in pleading these several pleas to the action, I shall certainly refuse him his final order. Adjournment accordingly.

SPRING ASSIZES.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.

Salisbury, Monday, March 10.

(Before Mr. Justice COLERIDGE.)

REG. v. ANDREWS and OTHERS.

A constructive arming sufficient under 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, s. 9, and therefore if any one of the party is proved to be armed, that will be sufficient evidence that they were all armed.

The prisoners were indicted under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, s. 1. The indictment was as follows:—"J. A. (then naming the other prisoners), late of the parish of Foffants, otherwise called Fofant, otherwise called Forant, in the county, &c. together with divers other persons to the jurors unknown, being to the number of three or more together, on the 25th of February, A.D. 1845, at the parish aforesaid, about the hour of three in the night, being respectively armed with guns and other offensive weapons, did then and there together, by night as aforesaid, unlawfully enter into certain land called Foffants, otherwise called Fofant, otherwise called Forants," &c. continuing the indictment to the close in the usual form.

It was proved on the part of the prosecution that two only of the men were armed with guns, the rest having sticks only. The close was proved to be called Fovant, and that it was known by no other name.

For the prisoners it was contended that all of them but the two armed with guns must be acquitted, and the case of Reg. v. Davis (8 C. & P. 759) was cited, which, it was said, was an express decision by Mr. Justice Patteson on this point. There it was held that a constructive arming was not sufficient; and as two of the prisoners were averred in that indictment to be armed, and it was proved they were not, Mr. Justice Patteson directed the jury to acquit them. Then all the prisoners were alleged to be armed with guns and other offensive weapons. The prosecution need not have averred this so widely, but should have specified such as were armed, which would have been sufficient under the statute. But having thought proper to allege that they were respectively armed, &c. he was bound to have proved them so.

Secondly, the indictment was uncertain as to the parish and as to the wood, since they were both described under three several names.

COLERIDGE, J. said he should direct the jury, in opposition to the case of Reg. v. Davis, from which (with several of the other judges) he dissented. At the same time, if necessary, out of respect to Mr. Justice Patteson's opinion, he would reserve the point for the consideration of the fifteen judges. He did not consider there was any thing in the other objection, as all the names were idem sonans.

The prisoners were convicted.

Merewether, for the prosecution.

Hodges and Edwards, for the prisoners.

REG. v. HICKS.

It is no objection to an indictment under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 58, that the indictment charges that the prisoner received the money, &c. not then having caused the offender to be apprehended, sed quære.

The prisoner was indicted under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 58, which enacts that every person who shall corruptingly take any money or reward, directly or indirectly, under pretence or upon account of helping any person to any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, which shall by any felony or misdemeanor have been stolen, taken, obtained, or converted as aforesaid, shall (unless he cause the offender to be apprehended and brought to trial for the same) be guilty of felony, &c.

The indictment charged the offence as follows:—"Feloniously did receive of A B certain money and reward, to wit the sum of two shillings and sixpence, upon account then and there of helping the said A B to certain goods, &c. lately before feloniously stolen, &c.; the said (prisoner) not then having caused the offenders by whom, &c. to be apprehended."

Bull, for the prisoner, objected that the indictment was insufficient. The statute specified no time when the party taking the money was bound to cause the offender to be apprehended. At any rate, he must be allowed a reasonable time to do this before the provisions of this very penal statute would operate against him. But, as this indictment was framed, a party convicted upon it would have rendered himself liable to all the penalties of the statute because he had not apprehended the felon at the very moment when he took the money, an injustice which the statute never contemplated. The words of the indictment are, that the prisoner received the money upon account, &c. not then having caused the offender to be apprehended.

ERLE, J.—I do not think the objection can be supported.

The prisoner was convicted and sentenced to six months' imprisonment.

Northampton, Tuesday, March 4.

(Before Mr. Justice MAULE.)

DOE dem. BEALES v. STIMPSON.

Ejectment—Several demises—Election.

Declaration in ejectment, containing two demises, one by the testator, and the other by his devisees in trust.

The title of the trustees under the will having been proved,

Flood, for the defendant, submitted that the lessor of the plaintiff must elect on which demise he would take the verdict.* It was clear that the defendant ought to have the verdict entered for him upon one of them.

Whitehurst and Barlow, for the lessor of the plaintiff, contended that this was not a case of two contemporaneous inconsistent demises, and that, therefore, they were not bound to elect.

MAULE, J. however, said he thought they were bound to elect; and the learned counsel then elected to take the verdict upon the second count, stating a demise by the devisees in trust.

GARRETT v. DRYDEN, Bart.

Sheriff—False return—Landlord's rent.

Case against the sheriff for a false return.

The plaintiff had been co-tenant with one Gudgeon, of a farm at Milton, in the county of Northampton, to Dr. Henderson, who, also being in possession of certain warrants of attorney against the plaintiff, had entered up judgment upon them, and issued execution thereon. The sheriff, in fact, levied a sum of 380*l.* but he returned a smaller amount, deducting about 60*l.* as arrears of rent due for the farm, and another sum of about 40*l.* due for the rent of other premises, and which had been secured by a bill of sale of a certain stack, forming part of the property seized and sold. The rent was paid by the sheriff to Gudgeon; but it ultimately came into the hands of Dr. Henderson.

Humfrey and Miller, for the defendant, contended that, upon these facts, the plaintiff must be called; and cited Wintle v. Freeman (11 Ad. & E. 539), and Lewis v. Musgrove (reported in a recent number of the LAW TIMES), for the proposition that if the goods seized under a fi. fa. are exhausted by payment of the landlord's rent, expenses, and the sum due on a prior writ, the return of nulla bona is proper. The stack was the property of Dr. Henderson under the bill of sale, and he only consented to the sale of it on the condition of his debt being paid.

Hill and Waddington, for the plaintiff.—This is a different case; first, the rent was not paid to the landlord by the sheriff; and secondly, the landlord was the party issuing the execution; and, therefore, the full sum levied ought to have been returned. As to the stack, the debt charged upon that was in respect of rent due for other premises; and that sum, therefore, ought not to have been deducted.

MAULE, J. was of opinion that Wintle v. Freeman governed this case, and that it made no difference whether the party at whose suit the writs were issued was or was not the landlord, or whether the money retained as rent was handed over immediately to the landlord, or mediately through a third person. In the present case no doubt Gudgeon was in the position of surety for Garratt, and Dr. Henderson looked to him, and therefore it was that the money passed through his hands to Dr. Henderson, the landlord.

The plaintiff was accordingly nonsuited.

Lincoln, Monday, March 10.

(Before Lord Chief Justice TINDAL.)

If an attorney delays to sue out a writ in an action against a constable until after the expiration of the time within which the action must be brought, or if he omits the words "by statute" in entering the defendant's plea upon the record, in consequence of which omission a verdict given for the plaintiff is subsequently set aside: these are such instances of negligence as will afford a good defence to an action brought for the recovery of his bill of costs.

Assumpsit on an attorney's bill.

Plea—Non assumpsit.

The defence was, that the plaintiff had so negligently conducted the defendant's business that he had derived no benefit from his services (see Templer v. M'Lachlan, 2 N. R. 136; Huntley v. Bulwer, 6 Bing. N.C. 111; Bracey v. Carter, 12 Ad. & Ell. 373); and it appeared that, having received authority from the present defendant to commence an action against one Green, a constable, the plaintiff did sue out a writ against him in an action of trespass within the six months limited by stat. 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, s. 8, but took no proceedings upon that writ; that afterwards, and after the expiration of the six months, he sued out another writ, upon which he proceeded; that in that action the defendant Green pleaded "Not guilty, by statute;" but the present plaintiff, in making up the record, neglected to copy the words "by statute;" and the defendant at the trial, being unable consequently to give the special matter in evidence, the plaintiff (defendant in the present action) obtained a verdict, which was, however, set aside, and a new trial granted upon motion to the Court above. Upon that, the present plaintiff declined to proceed further, and consented that a nonsuit should be entered. The costs incurred in the course of these proceedings formed the principal part of the plaintiff's bill; and credit was given in the particulars of demand for an amount larger than the residue.

TINDAL, C. J. in summing up, told the jury that he was of opinion that the neglect to bring the action in proper time, and to copy the defendant's plea correctly on the record, exhibited a degree of negligence which disentitled the plaintiff to recover his costs, that negligence having rendered his services wholly useless to the defendant; and as to that portion of the bill which was not open to the same objection, the credit given in the particulars of demand might be applied to that, and was more than sufficient to cover it.

The jury accordingly found a verdict for the defendant.

Clarke, Serjt. and Wildman, for the plaintiff.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

Aylesbury, Monday, March 10.

(Before PARKE, B.)

REGINA v. WILLIAMS.

Indictment—Property—Sale, joint and special.

The indictment charged that the prisoner stole three trusses of hay, the property of T. Morris, then being in a barge on a certain canal.

Gunning, for the prosecution, called a witness, who stated that, being the owner of a barge, he was employed by the prosecutor, who lived at Coventry, to take some coal to Warwick, and to bring back some hay, and that Morris was to pay him for so doing. On cross-examination, the witness stated that he knew one Ridley at Coventry, and that Morris had told him that he and Ridley had bought the hay in question, which was in a stack, between them; and he added, that he knew from that circumstance that the hay was the joint property of both Morris and Ridley; on this,

Power, for the prisoner, submitted that the case had failed in proof, for it now appeared that the hay was the joint property of Morris and Ridley, whereas the indictment laid it as the sole property of Morris. It was the duty of the prosecutor to make out the case as laid, and his own witness had disproved it.

Gunning, contrà.—The property is well laid in Morris alone; for he alone is answerable to the boatman for the carriage to Coventry, which confers on him such a special property in it as is sufficient to sustain the indictment. Besides this, however, it does not appear by legal evidence that the hay is the joint property of the prosecutor and another, for what Morris may have said to the witness on that subject is not properly receivable.

PARKE, B.—That is so. I think the case must go on; there is certainly such a special property in the prosecutor as is sufficient for the purpose of the indictment, and the sole property is, therefore, well enough proved, for the conversation with Morris and the witness is not evidence.

Guilty; three months' imprisonment.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SMALL DEBTS.

MONDAY, March 10.—Mr. H. BERKELEY gave notice, that on an early day (we understood) after Easter, he would call the attention of the House to the Act of the last session, for the abolition of imprisonment for small debts, with the view to the introduction of a Bill for the more easy recovery of small debts, and for giving to creditors for small sums greater protection against fraudulent debtors.

COUNTY RATES.

TUESDAY, March 11.—Sir J. YARDE BULLER obtained leave to bring in a Bill to amend the laws relating to the assessing, levying, and collecting of county rates.

BASTARDY BILL.

WEDNESDAY, March 12.—Sir J. GRAHAM moved the order of the day for the committal of this Bill.—General JOHNSON observed that the present Bill did not appear to remedy a defect in the Bill of last session, which gave the power to summon the putative father before the birth of the child, but not to deal with the party when summoned.—Sir J. GRAHAM said the object of the present Bill was rather to correct certain errors in form, than to deal with the substance of the Bill of last session. The summons was issued before the birth, but, of course, no order could be made until after the birth of the child. But the object was, that if the father should not then be forthcoming, the order might be made in his absence.—Mr. WAKLEY asked whether the right honourable baronet was aware of any instances in which the magistrates had refused to afford this opportunity of establishing paternity before birth?—Sir J. GRAHAM had heard of no such cases.—The House then went into committee, and the several clauses were agreed to.—Sir J. GRAHAM moved the following clause:—"And be it enacted, that when any order made under the provision of the said Act shall, prior to the passing of this Act, have been quashed for any defect therein, and not upon the merits, it shall be lawful for the mother of the bastard child, in whose favour such order shall have been made, to take proceedings for the obtaining of another order, according to the provisions of the said Act, at any time within the space of three calendar months after the passing of this Act, although the period limited for her application to the justice under the said Act shall have expired." He proposed also to add a proviso to the effect, "that when the putative father has given notice of appeal against the order made upon him, and fails in his recognizance, notice shall be given to the mother, to save her the inconvenience and expense of appearing."—Agreed to.—Sir J. GRAHAM then brought up the following clause:—"And whereas power is given by the said Act to the putative father to appeal against an order made upon him by the justices in petty sessions assembled, giving notice of appeal as therein specified, and also sufficient security, by recognizance or otherwise, for the payment of costs, to the satisfaction of some one justice of the peace: be it enacted, that the condition of any such recognizance shall be for the appearance of the said putative father at such general quarter sessions of the peace as is required by the said Act, and his trial of the appeal thereat, and the payment of such costs as he shall be then and there ordered to pay; and if at any time before the hearing of the appeal the putative father, who shall have entered into any such recognizance, shall give notice in writing of his abandonment of the appeal to the mother of the child, in whose favour the order shall have been made, and to the justice or justices before whom the said recognizance shall have been taken, and shall pay or tender to the said mother all sums then due under the said order, and such costs and expenses as she shall have incurred by reason of such notice of appeal, the said recognizance so entered into by the said putative father shall not be estreated, nor in any manner put in force, or otherwise proceeded with."—The clause went through the several stages and was agreed to.

JUSTICES' CLERKS BILL.

Sir J. GRAHAM then moved the second reading of the Justices' Clerks and Clerks of the Peace Bill.—Captain EGERTON pointed out the great expense which this Bill would occasion, not only to the counties, but also to the magistracy of the different counties. He suggested to Sir J. Graham the propriety of postponing it, in order that it might receive further consideration.—General JOHNSON hoped that Sir J. Graham would divide this Bill into two, and would separate that part of it which related to clerks of the peace from that which related to the clerks to the magistrates. The one was an ancient office, and the other a mere modern creation.—Mr. DARBY was also afraid that this Bill, so far as it regarded the clerks to magistrates, would create additional expense to counties. He also thought that the machinery of it was too complicated, and that it would not be advantageous even to the poorer classes, for whose benefit it was intended; for, as the fees were now to be carried to the county stock, they could not be remitted by the magistrates, as they were at present.—Mr. BROTHERTON hoped that Sir James Graham would not consent to postpone the second reading of this Bill. The Bill was a very good one, and people were only sorry that it did not go further. He thought that instead of being a burden, it would be a saving to the counties.—Mr. DICKINSON hoped that Sir J. Graham would listen to the application which had been made to him to divide the Bill into two parts. If he did not, and if several changes were not made in the Bill in the committee, he should be compelled to vote against it on the third reading.—Mr. HENLEY doubted whether the duty of magistrates' clerks would be equally well performed when they were paid by salaries as they were now, when they were paid by fees. The plan of remunerating them by fees might also lead to a very hasty and careless administration of justice before local magistrates.—Sir J. GRAHAM: The objections which had been made to the Bill were rather to its details than to its principles; but the two were so blended that they could scarcely be separated. Now, this was the occasion for discussing the principles of the Bill, and the chief one was, that justice was better administered by public servants receiving salaries than by public servants receiving fees. He then proceeded to shew that the ends of justice would be better answered, and the interests of the rate payers would be better advanced, by the details of this Bill than they were by the law at present. As to the difficulty which, it had been suggested, would arise from the magistrates having no longer any power to remit the fees to which parties were liable who came before them, because those fees were to be carried in future to the county stock, he had only to observe that he had no objection to consider in committee a proposition for giving the magistrates the power of remitting such fees. The Bill would not occasion any additional expense to the counties; but even if it did, it would be better that such were the case, than that the monstrous injustice should continue of levying fees from innocent persons unjustly accused of crime on their discharge from custody before a magistrate.—After a few words from Mr. Turner and Captain Pechell,—Mr. B. ESCOTT said he was sure that his friends who had objected to the details of the Bill could not be aware of the enormities which it removed. He shewed that clerks to the magistrates had taken many fees to which they had no legal title, and to which parties had been rendered liable for no other purpose than to expose them to annoyance and oppression, and concluded by warning the House not to measure the amount of compensation to be granted to these officers in the shape of salary by the amount of their peculations.—Mr. W. MILLS thanked Sir J. Graham for having introduced this Bill, and vindicated the magistrates' clerks from the sweeping charge of having appropriated to themselves many heavy fees to which they had no legal right, and which Mr. B. Escott had therefore denounced as peculation.—Mr. HAWES expressed his gratitude to Sir J. Graham for having introduced a Bill which would be so eminently useful in improving the administration of justice.—After a few words from the Solicitor-General,—Mr. WAKLEY gave Mr. B. Escott high credit for the labour and assiduity with which he had ferreted out all the enormities connected with the fee system in our subordinate courts, and trusted that he would turn his attention to the fee system in the superior courts at Westminster. A magistrate some time ago had filed a criminal information against him. He was served in consequence with a piece of paper which told him nothing. Wishing to know what he was accused of, he applied to his legal adviser, who informed him that he could not learn the nature of the accusation against him until he had paid a fee of 3*l.* or 4*l.* to some officer of the court for the affidavits filed against him. He afterwards found that he had to pay a still heavier fee before he could file the affidavits necessary to his own defence. He denounced such a system as obnoxious to the free and impartial administration of justice.—The Bill was then read a second time.

THE LAW OF DIVORCE.

THURSDAY, March 13.—Lord BROUGHAM presented a Bill for giving to the Privy Council jurisdiction in cases of divorce. The noble lord said he should defer making any statement on the subject until the second reading.—The Bill was then read a first time.

REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE ON RAILWAY BILLS.

The select committee appointed to inquire into the best mode of constituting committees on railway bills in the present session of Parliament, and of the most expedient manner in which railway bills, having relation to similar objects, may be brought under the consideration of the same committee; and who were empowered to report from time to time to the House;—have considered the matters to them referred, and have agreed to the following resolutions:—

1. That a committee of five members be appointed, to be called the Classification Committee of Railway Bills, and that three be the quorum of such committee.

2. That copies of all railway bills presented to the House, and a list of all projected railways, of which plans and sections have been deposited in the private bill office, be laid before the said committee, together with all reports and minutes of the Board of Trade upon such projected railways, which shall have been laid, or which shall from time to time be laid, before the House.

3. That the Committee of Classification shall form into groups all railway bills or projects which, in their opinion, it would be expedient to submit to the same committee.

4. That committees on railway bills during the present session of Parliament shall be composed of a chairman and four members, to be appointed by the Committee of Selection.

5. That each member of a committee on a railway bill or bills, shall, before he be entitled to attend and vote on such committee, sign a declaration that his constituents have no local interest, and that he himself has no personal interest, for or against any bill or project referred to him; and no such committee shall proceed to business until the whole of the members shall have signed such declaration.

6. That the promoters of a railway bill shall be prepared to go into the committee on the bill on such day as the Committee of Selection shall, subject to the order that there be seven clear days between the second reading of every private bill and the sitting of the committee thereupon, think proper to appoint, provided that the classification committees shall have reported on such bill.

7. That the Committee of Selection shall not appoint an earlier day for the first meeting of the committee on any group of bills than the twenty-sixth day after the presentation to the House of the reports of the Board of Trade on all railway projects included in this group, unless all the petitions for bills relating to such projects shall have been sooner presented.

8. That the Committee of Selection shall give each member not less than fourteen days' notice of the week in which it will be necessary for him to be in attendance for the purpose of serving, if required, on a railway bill committee.

9. That the Committee of Selection shall give each member a sufficient notice of his appointment as a member of a committee on a railway bill, and shall transmit to him a copy of the fifth resolution, and a blank form of the declaration therein required, with a request that he will forthwith return it to them properly filled up and signed.

10. That if the Committee of Selection shall not within due time receive from each such member the aforesaid declaration, or an excuse which they shall deem sufficient, they shall report to the House the name of such defaulting member.

11. That the Committee of Selection shall have the power of substituting, at any time before the first meeting of a committee, another member for a member whom they shall deem it proper to excuse from serving on that committee.

12. That power be given to the Committee of Selection to send for persons, papers, and records, in the execution of the duties imposed on them by the foregoing resolutions.

13. That no member of a committee shall absent himself from his duties on such committee, unless in the case of sickness, or by leave of the House.

14. That if the chairman shall be absent from the committee, the member next in rotation on the list (who shall be present) shall act as chairman.

15. That committees shall be allowed to proceed so long as three members shall be present but not with a less number, unless by special leave of the House.

16. That if on any day, within one hour after the time appointed for the meeting of a committee, three members shall not be present, the committee shall be adjourned to the same hour on the next day on which the House shall sit which had been fixed for that day.

17. That in the case of a member not being present within one hour after the time appointed for the meeting of the committee, or of any member absenting himself from his duties on such committee, such member shall be reported to the House at its next sitting.

18. That each committee shall be appointed to meet on each day of its sitting, not later than twelve o'clock, unless by the regular vote of the committee.

19. That parties promoting railway projects which have been grouped together by the Classification Committee, shall be permitted to appear before the committee on a railway bill belonging to such group, and to offer evidence either against the bill immediately under the consideration of the committee, or in support of their own projects.

20. That in committees on a bill or bills, when such evidence has been given, it shall be within the competency of a committee to adjourn their proceedings until the bill or bills for such other projects shall be before them, care being taken by the Committee of Selection that in all such cases the bills for the so opposing projects shall be referred to the committee by which the first bill or bills had been considered.

21. That as soon as the Committee of Classification shall have determined what railway bills or projects are to be grouped together, they shall report the same to the House, and all petitions against any of the said bills or projects shall be presented to the House three clear days before the meeting of the committee thereon.

22. That as soon as the committee on a group of railway bills or projects shall hear, so far as may be necessary, parties appearing in support of such petition, so as to receive without interruption the whole of the evidence on the general merits of all the bills or projects before them, and also on the details of the bill or project, or bills or projects, which they shall be of opinion ought to be adopted, in order that if the committee should consider that a bill or bills not yet read a second time at the time of inquiry, ought to be preferred, they may be enabled, when that bill or bills shall be formally committed, to dispense with receiving any further evidence, and to confine their proceedings to making such amendments in the clauses as their previous investigation may have shewn to be necessary.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

Legacy Duty, &c.—Mr. Hume has obtained, by order of the House of Commons, his usual annual return of the capital on which legacy duty has been paid, and of the amount of revenue received in the United Kingdom for stamp duty on legacies, in the year ending the 5th of January last. This return, which was consigned to the printing-office of Parliament on the 6th instant, affords the following information:—It appears, in the first place, that the gross total amount of capital on which the several rates of legacy duty have been paid in Great Britain during the year 1844, was 44,393,887*l*., of which amount the sum of 24,117,769*l*. was paid at the rate of 1*l*. per cent.; 107,262*l*. at the rate of 2*l*. 10s. per cent.; 13,708,061*l*. at the rate of 3*l*. per cent.; 11,317*l*. at the rate of 4*l*. per cent.; 1,496,230*l*. at the rate of 5*l*. per cent.; 362,472*l*. at the rate of 6*l*. per cent.; 10,593*l*. at the rate of 8*l*. per cent.; and, lastly, 4,580,179*l*. at the extreme rate of 10*l*. per cent.; shewing, thus, that the general rates—that is, those from which the largest amount accrues to the revenue—are those of 1 and 3 per cent. The abstract of the gross total amount under all these rates since the year 1797 gives a sum of 1,293,819,797*l*. sterling, of which 638,687,437*l*. was under the 1*l*. per cent. rate, 333,764,984*l*. under the 3*l*. per cent. rate, and 139,191,122*l*. under the 10*l*. per cent. rate. A return from Ireland, which follows, shews that the total amount of capital in the sister kingdom on which the several rates of legacy duty have been paid in 1844, is 2,140,021*l*. of which 1,274,772*l*. was paid at the rate of 1 per cent. and 564,552*l*. at the rate of 3 per cent. The total amount of legacy duty received on this capital was 53,618*l*. being in round numbers at the average rate of 2*l*. 10s. per cent. on the capital paying the duty. The total amount of the duty on probates and administrations received in Ireland during the year 1844-45 was 61,031*l*., making, with the duty received on legacies, a grand total revenue of 114,649*l*. It further appears, on examining the other portions of this return, that the gross total amount of revenue received in Great Britain during the year 1844 was, for stamp duty on legacies, 1,198,552*l*. and for stamp duty on probates, administrations, and testamentary inventories, 966,852*l*. In Ireland the same amounts were respectively 53,618*l*. and 61,031*l*. It follows that the revenue of the United Kingdom was enriched to the amount of 2,280,053*l*. from these stamp-duties alone, on legacies and probates, &c. The office accounts do not admit of any distinction of the duties received on direct or reversionary bequests. The gross total amount of duty received since the year 1797 in the whole of the United Kingdom was, on legacies 38,396,923*l*. and on probates, administrations, and testamentary inventories, 30,719,090*l*. The last branch of the return informs the reader that the total amount of duty received in Ireland, from 1797 to 1845, a period of 48 years, was, on legacies, 767,869*l*. and on probates and administrations, 1,116,853*l*. In Scotland, the duty received on legacies since 1797 amounts to the sum of 2,111,641*l*.; and that received on probates, administrations, and testamentary inventories to the sum of 1,456,329*l*.

New Bastardy Bill.—A new measure has just been introduced by Sir J. Graham, entitled, "A Bill to make certain provisions for proceedings in Bastardy." Upon taking up the printed edition of this Bill it appeared to be bulky; but the enactments are by no means extensive, as they are comprised in three clauses, the remainder of the letter-press being appropriated to a number of forms, for the purposes of the Act, annexed in a schedule. The preamble observes, that divers questions have been raised as to the validity of certain orders in bastardy, made by justices under the Act of the last session (the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101), entitled "An Act for the further amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England," which questions are wholly beside the merits of the cases; and that it is desirable to remove such questions, and to prevent the recurrence of the same or similar questions in future. The Bill then proceeds to enact, that where any proceedings have been had or taken before the passing of this Bill, or shall hereafter be taken, in matters of bastardy, under the provisions of the recited Act, and shall have been set forth according to the forms in the schedule, the same shall, so far as relates to the form of such proceedings, be taken respectively to have been and to be valid and sufficient in law; with a proviso that nothing shall apply to orders which have been quashed on appeal to any General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, or by the Court of Queen's Bench. The mother of the bastard child is to be examined by the Court of Quarter Sessions, on appeals against an order in bastardy, but no such order shall be confirmed, unless her evidence shall have been corroborated in some material particular by other testimony. The parties may be heard at the Petty Sessions by counsel or attorney.

Bankruptcy.—The following is a brief summary of a return just made to an order of the House of Lords for an account of the "various balances owing by Peter Harris Abbot at the period of his default as official assignee." The first is a summary of the deficiencies under commissions, of which the following are the totals:—Amount of deficiencies under commissions where moneys have been received since an audit or dividend (subsequent to Peter Harris Abbot's appointment) and where funds have been retained in hand without audit or dividend being called for, 49,717*l*. 7s. 11d.; amount of ditto being small balances retained at audit, or dividend in hands of official assignee, 657*l*. 12*l*. 10d.; amount of ditto, being small sums received by Peter Harris Abbot under various old estates, extracted from his private ledger, and included in a return made to the House of Commons in 1839, 1,188*l*. 19s. 4d.; total, 51,564*l*. 4s. The next is a summary of deficiencies under fiats.—amount of deficiencies under fiats, being composed of balances and subsequent receipts, 28,514*l*. 11s.; amount of deficiencies under fiats, being composed of small balances, which appear to have been in the hands of Peter Harris Abbot, 2,118*l*. 8s. 7d.—30,632*l*. 19s. 7d. Thus, under commissioners total deficiencies were 51,564*l*. 0s. 1d. and, under fiats, they were 30,632*l*. 19s. 7d.; making together a sum of 82,196*l*. 19s. 8d. The return is made by Mr. William Pennell, official assignee.

Court of Session (Scotland).—A return of the number of causes instituted and decided in the Court of Session, from the 1st day of January, 1844, to the 1st of January, 1845, has just been presented to Parliament, and printed by order of the House of Commons, pursuant to the Act 1 Wm. 4, c. 69. There appear to be five Lords Ordinary—Lord Cunninghame, Lord Murray, Lord Ivory, Lord Wood, and Lord Robertson. In the "outer house," as it is called, the number of causes enrolled for the first time before all the Lords Ordinary amounted to 1,457, the number of decrees in absence to 476, the number of final judgments pronounced in litigated causes to 800, of which 267 were pronounced by Lord Cunninghame, 25 by Lord Murray, 73 by Lord Ivory, 229 by Lord Wood, and 206 by Lord Robertson. The total number of causes ready for debate, but not heard, amounts to 94, and the total of causes ad avizandum to 18. In the "inner house" the number of reclaiming notes presented against judgments of Lords Ordinary in the course of the same year amounted to 289, viz. 207 in the first, and 82 in the second division. The number of incidental and summary applications presented during the same period amounted, in the first division, to 580, of which 558 passed as matters of form; and in the second division to 362, of which 330 passed as matters of form. The number of final judgments pronounced in litigated causes, without the intervention of a jury, amounted to 122 and 96 in each division respectively. The number of causes tried by jury to 25 and 23 respectively. The number of causes ready for judgment on hearing counsel or otherwise amount, in the first division, to 59, of which 19 are to be tried by jury; and in the second division, to 34, of which 15 are to be tried by jury.

Petitions of the People.—The seventh report of the select committee of the Commons' House, which issued on Wednesday, states that there are altogether 37 petitions for encouragement to the Irish Church Education Society, signed by 3,103 persons; 11 petitions against the contemplated union of the dioceses of Bangor and St. Asaph, signed by 558 persons; 17 petitions for relief from taxation (to be granted to the agricultural interest), signed by 6,896 persons; 19 petitions for a repeal of the duty on malt, signed by 3,666 persons; 23 petitions against the re-imposition of the property and income-tax, signed by 1,815 persons; 20 petitions in favour of a County Courts Bill, signed by 2,642 persons; 57 petitions for an alteration in the Medical Practice Bill, signed by 2,026 persons; 13 petitions against any increase in the naval and military establishments of the empire, signed by 1,241 persons; and 60 petitions against the nuisance of public-houses, signed by 10,305 persons.

Convicts.—By a return (published on Monday last) it appears that there are 2,397 convicts confined in prisons in the United Kingdom, of which number 145 were, on account of their health, unfit to be removed.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

The second reading of the Justices' Clerks Bill involved a warm discussion—the opposition to it appears to be formidable. The objections to its provisions were very contradictory, and it will doubtless be much altered in Committee.

Many Magistrates having intimated their intention to take the Law Times at the commencement of the next volume, the present Subscribers will perhaps oblige by informing their brother Justices that the fifth volume will begin on the 5th of April.

BILL TO AMEND THE BASTARDY ACT.

When, in a late number, we stated our belief that this bill was designed to legalize the Lumley blunders, and provide for receiving the mother's evidence on appeals, some thought us premature, and that the announcement should have been reserved for the first of April. Not a bit of it. Here is the Bill itself, and here are its own words:—

> Whereas divers questions have been raised as to the validity of certain orders in Bastardy, made by justices under the Act of the last session of Parliament, intituled "An Act for the further Amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England," which questions are wholly beside the merits of the cases; and it is desirable to remove such questions, and to prevent the recurrence of the same or similar questions in future; Be it therefore enacted, by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That where any proceedings have been had or taken before the passing of this Act, or shall hereafter be had or taken, in matters of bastardy, under the provisions of the said recited Act, and shall have been set forth according to the forms in the schedule hereunto annexed or to the like effect, the same shall, so far as relates to the form of such proceedings, be taken respectively to have been and to be valid and sufficient in law.

To the Bill is attached a schedule containing the Lumley forms.

The preamble requires a slight modification. It reads better thus:—"Whereas divers perplexing questions have been raised touching the invalidity of certain orders of bastardy made by our well-beloved Golden Lumley, Esq. under the Act, &c. which questions, though held fatal to the said orders by our justices of the Court of Queen's Bench are held to be vexatious and wholly beside the merits of the said orders by the said Golden Lumley himself, to whom it is extremely desirable to remove such questions and prevent their recurrence in future, as well as to relieve him, the said Golden Lumley, from the necessity of learning the rudiments of law before he administers it; Be it therefore enacted," &c.

The form of order attached to the Act wholly omits all mention of the evidence either of the woman or the corroborating witnesses being taken before the petty sessions upon oath, which, according to law, is requisite. Thus the Bill is expressly intended to uphold Lumley instead of law. We regard this as a remarkably pleasant instance of the utility of Parliament; a fit and proper application of the powers of the Constitution! Queen, Lords, and Commons put into motion to the rescue of Golden Lumley from the results of his own blunders! And then the philanthropy and benevolence of the Constitution towards this favoured official is quite touching. We know of nothing half so motherly in fact or fiction, except Mrs. Hardcastle and her Tony Lumpkin. The Bill provides that "nothing herein contained shall apply to any order made or professed to have been made under the said Act, which shall have been quashed on appeal to any General Quarter Session of the Peace or by the Court of Queen's Bench."

We recommend all the putative fathers to appeal en masse forthwith, before this delectable Bill shall have passed, and by this means they may rid themselves of the intended favour of having illegal orders fastened upon them.

The Bill makes no provision for fresh orders where bad ones have been quashed. S.

THE NEW SETTLEMENT BILL.

WE resume our review of this Bill.

APPEAL AGAINST WARRANT OF REMOVAL. Section 19 provides that the parish aggrieved by a warrant of removal may appeal, giving notice of the grounds of appeal. The appeal is to be respited only on affidavit of special circumstances. Warrants of removal made before the passing of the Act may still be appealed against, as if the Act had not been passed. As to statement of periods of appeal, 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 81. By section 20, overseers may have access to the pauper touching his settlement. Section 21 fixes fourteen days' notice of appeal in all cases. This is a great improvement on the present law, which leaves the period to the discretion of each court of sessions. By section 22, on the trial of the appeal, the duplicate of the warrant, and the original depositions transmitted to the clerk of the peace, may be referred to, in order to see if the witnesses made certain statements therein, and to supply their evidence if since dead; but then follows the same provision to do away with all objection to the illegality and insufficiency of the evidence on which the removal has been made, to which we directed animadversion last year:

Provided nevertheless, that on the trial of any such appeal no warrant of removal shall be quashed or set aside, either wholly or in part, on the ground that such depositions do not furnish sufficient evidence to support, or that any matter therein contained raises an objection to, the warrant or the statement of the grounds of removal except when such objection to the warrant or statement arises upon depositions given in evidence, in consequence of the death of the party making such depositions, and in that case such objection shall have the same weight and effect as if it were raised by the oral evidence of such party.

That is to say, "All you parishes who have a mind to speculate at the expense of your neighbours, in getting rid of your troublesome poor, be under no further scruple as to proving your right to remove before you make the experiment! Don't trouble yourselves to inform the parish you wish to burden of the grounds of your attack upon it; let your evidence be as insufficient as you like, the information it conveys as scanty or deceptive as suits your purpose; be as informal and incorrect as you choose; give full indulgence to your ignorance and indolence; for here is a clause for your protection, declaring, in express terms, that insufficient evidence shall suffice; and that no objection shall be made to it. We, the Legislature, therefore invite you to make removals and cast charges on other people, throwing on them the burden of disproof, without giving yourselves any trouble in first proving your own right to make the attack. The incidence of the onus probandi, and a rule of law as old and sacred as law itself, shall be and hereby is reversed for the special benefit of parochial stupidity, trickery, and fraud." We think it probable enough that there are some, if not many, of our readers, who may think it, at first sight, a fine thing to be saved from the snares of technicality, and rescued from the clutches of the Queen v. Clint (11 A. & Ell. 624), but we believe that they will soon have practical reason to lament their liberty, and appreciate, when it is too late, the judgment and discretion which prompted Lord DENMAN to utter in that case these memorable words:—"The removing parish must be cautious in sending notice of the settlement which is to be relied upon; and the appellants have a right to bind the respondents to that settlement. It is said that this is hard and unjust; but I think there would be more hardship in allowing experimental removals on imperfect statements, which might leave one party free to prove any case, and wholly mislead the other." We really think that Sir JAMES GRAHAM is bound to shew cause for overruling the judgment before he throws a license into the law of removals which neither exists elsewhere, nor carries on its face any sort of justification. The sole pretext for it is the inconvenience of being just, and the trouble of being legal. This requires prompt censure from the country. Let it be well considered that there is a principle involved in this matter. Justice imperatively requires full, accurate, and plain information to a party whom it is intended to charge with a burden, or affect with a detriment, against which the law gives him an appeal. Parishes ought not to surrender this on the ground of some fancied gain in the trouble of drawing up documents, which, at a trifling cost, they can get legally drawn for them.

By sec. 23, costs incurred by reason of notice of removal, or of appeal, and costs of trial, and costs caused by statements of frivolous or vexatious grounds of removal or appeal, are to be awarded and certified by the Court: recovery of such costs. By sec. 24, costs may be taxed by the proper officer at any time, although the Court be not sitting. The case of Reg. v. Long (1 Q.B. 740) ruled otherwise. The clause is to amend the objection.

MAINTENANCE OF PAUPERS UNDER WARRANTS OF REMOVAL AND DURING APPEAL. —This section (25) merely replaces the existing law.

SERVICE OF NOTICE.—Sec. 26 provides that these may be sent by post.

REMOVAL OF POOR BORN IN SCOTLAND, IRELAND, AND THE ISLANDS OF MAN, SCILLY, JERSEY, AND GUERNSEY.—Secs. 27 to 31 inclusive mainly replace the existing law and repeat the provisions of the last Bill. Sec. 32 provides that guardians of unions in Ireland, and the heritors and kirk session or borough magistrates in Scotland, may appeal against such warrants. The removing parish may abandon its warrant, on payment of all costs incurred, including those of sending the pauper back to such parish.

THE CONSTITUTION OF UNIONS FOR SETTLEMENT.—This is the important new feature of this Bill. The 33rd section, after reciting the provision in the present Act, 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 33, permitting guardians of parishes to agree that such parishes shall be considered as one for the purposes of settlement, enacts,

That the Poor-Law Commissioners shall, as soon as may be, without any such agreement by the guardians as is required by the said recited Act, proceed, by an order under their hands and seal, to declare every union of parishes constituted or to be hereafter constituted under the said recited Act, a union for the purposes of settlement, and shall specify in every such order the day, being not less than fourteen days after the date thereof, when the same shall come into force.

Sec. 34 then provides,

That the said commissioners shall, in declaring such unions for the purposes of settlement, as aforesaid, have regard to the expediency or propriety of any alteration to be made in such union before the same is declared, and may delay the declaration of the same, or the coming in force of their order, when it is necessary to effect any such alteration.

Sec. 35 extends the same provision to unions under a local Act. Sec. 36 then enacts that unions shall be as one parish for the purposes of settlement, from the day of the declaration that they are so, and that

Every pauper who would otherwise be deemed to be settled in any parish in the union, shall be deemed to be settled in such union, and not in any parish, and every pauper who would otherwise be liable to be removed from or to any parish in the union shall be liable to be removed from or to such union, and not from or to such parish, and no pauper shall thereafter acquire or be deemed to have any settlement in any parish of such union, or shall be liable to be removed from one parish in such union to another parish in such union.

We shall conclude our comments next week.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—As I see that you have the proposed Bastardy Amendment Bill in consideration in your columns, I venture to offer one suggestion on the subject.

I would suggest that no woman, who can be shewn within a given time to have cohabited with more than one man, or who can be proved to be a person of lewd life, ought to be permitted to obtain an order on any person for the maintenance of her bastard.

One reason for this is, that she is required to swear to the father, and this in the great majority of cases no such woman can do without perjury, inasmuch as she can not possibly herself know to whom the honours of paternity should justly be given. I might adduce medical authorities for this, but it is evidently a subject the details of which would be disgusting to your readers. I will, therefore, only advise that if any reader doubts it, he should forthwith obtain the opinion of some respectable accoucheur on the point.

A second reason for such a regulation is, that it is contrary to the spirit of our laws and to common sense, that the strumpet should be enabled to fix on some one person (probably the man who can either pay best or has refused to bribe her to silence) out of her many admirers, to bear the burden of her and his vice.

The English law recognizes no action for seduction even, much less does it encourage the arts of the harlot, by permitting her to extort from the person she has seduced, a premium for her wickedness. It even refuses to recognize a bond entered into by the victim on an immoral consideration.

Two cases have recently come under my notice exemplifying the injustice of the present law. In one, the woman was shewn to have cohabited with several men about the time she stated the child was begotten, and to have behaved generally in an indecent manner; but the magistrate said, that if she swore to one, they were bound to believe her, unless her evidence was disproved, and this, although she had distinctly contradicted herself on oath in some of the circumstances she alleged.

In the second, the woman, a common prostitute, was shewn to have had connection with other men; and it appeared that she had used every art to induce the alleged father, a lad of about nineteen, to be connected with her; notwithstanding which the order was made.

I do not at all impute any improper motive to the justices in these cases, who, though I think they were mistaken, evidently acted against their own feelings, under an idea that their duty required them so to do; but I mention the circumstances to shew the evils which result from the law as it at present stands.

That the woman who is seduced should have every facility afforded her for obtaining the poor redress of the maintenance of her child I fully admit; but that a common strumpet should be permitted to make the consequences of her vice a scource of profit is a disgrace to the law of the land.

I am yours, &c. J. D.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I wish to draw your attention, and by means of your paper, that of my professional brethren who hold the situation of magistrates' clerks, to a Bill lately introduced to the House of Commons by Sir James Graham, for payment of justices' clerks by salaries instead of fees.

The principle stated in the title of the Act is undoubtedly good, but the Act contains a clause which, in my opinion, will very unjustly affect as well those who now hold the situation as the public, and will also convey a serious reflection on the magistrates throughout the country.

The 12th section enacts "That no clerk shall be concerned, either by himself or any partner, or in any manner directly or indirectly, as an attorney or agent in any matter brought or to be brought before the justices whose clerk he is, or in any prosecutions arising out of or consequent on any proceedings before the justices whose clerk he is, under a penalty of 50*l*."

By this clause a magistrate's clerk will be prevented from undertaking any criminal prosecution, or from being concerned either for the appellant or respondent in any appeal against any order or conviction by the magistrates whose clerk he is, even although those magistrates might be desirous of employing him to defend any proceedings taken against them in consequence of any such order or conviction. Again, several cases may arise where magistrates have the power of directing proceedings to be taken against certain parties, particularly under the Highway Acts, and yet in these cases their own clerk will be prevented from being employed by them in the matter; and numerous examples could be adduced where the magistrates' clerks will be deprived of a large portion of their legitimate practice, because certain Acts of Parliament (in many cases local Acts) have directed some preliminary proceedings to be adopted before two magistrates.

With respect to criminal prosecutions, I submit that it is not only unjust on the magistrates' clerks to prevent them from being concerned in such matters, particularly in large towns, where the magistrates' clerk has hitherto devoted the most of his time to that line of business, and from his engagements with the magistrates may have had no time to cultivate a connection in other business; but it is also calculated to affect the public injuriously, inasmuch as all criminal prosecutions will devolve on those who have had little, and in some cases, no experience in that line of their profession; and by thus depriving magistrates' clerks of all employment in criminal matters, the public will be injured in another view, because the magistrates have a right to expect that their clerk will be able to advise them as to the latest decisions, and to inform them of the leaning of the courts from time to time, which information they cannot acquire unless they are in the constant habit of attending the criminal trials at the assizes.

The proposed enactment also conveys a serious reflection on the magistrates, as it infers that they do not decide the matters brought before them according to their own sense of right and justice, but according to the sinister influence of their clerk, exerted by him in proportion to the hope he may entertain of gaining some pecuniary advantage from the adoption of ulterior proceedings.

The clause will also restrain the liberty of the subject, by compelling a party not to employ a certain solicitor in particular cases, even although that solicitor may, in all other cases, be the confidential adviser of such party, and who might consider him, of all others, the most competent to undertake that particular business.

If it is considered right in principle thus to restrain the practice of the magistrates' clerks, such alterations ought to be limited to those who accept the office hereafter; but to compel the present holders of the office either to resign their situations, or to submit to a deprivation of their income, will only afford another proof of the tyrannical omnipotence of Parliament. The proposition is one which few persons would have expected to emanate from a "Conservative" Government.

I am yours, &c.

T. T. Trevor.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

No incident claims special notice. We have but to refer the reader to the various contents of this day's journal, and especially to the summary of the decisions of the last Term.

REVIEW OF THE CASES DECIDED IN ALL THE COURTS OF COMMON LAW

During Hilary Term and Vacation, 1845.

Pursuant to our custom, we now lay before our readers the decisions of the greatest practical importance during the last Term. Some, as Wood v. Ledbitter, and Williams v. Burrell, will be regarded as leading cases, but the majority of the points presented for judicial decision seem to become daily more technical.

Attorneys and Solicitors.—We cannot but express our extreme satisfaction at the decision and language in Ex parte Bateman (4 Law T. 331.) We regard it as of the utmost importance to the character of the whole Profession that there should be no opportunities afforded for unfair influence of the one branch upon the other. Lower the character of the Bar, and assuredly the character of the attorneys as a body will suffer. Lord Denman, C. J. than whom there does not exist a more liberal-minded judge, saw the full force of this, and, without casting the slightest imputation in the particular instance, he decided, with the concurrence of the rest of the Court, that no one shall avail himself of service as an articled clerk to an attorney whilst he continues a barrister, for the purpose of being admitted as an attorney. "The only inquiry," said the Lord Chief Justice, "we have to make is—is it a course that ought to be allowed to exist?—I think it ought not. The danger to the character and honour of the Profession is great and manifest."

Taxation of bill.—An outlaw cannot obtain taxation of a bill. (Re Mander, 4 Law T. 355.)

ARBITRATION.

An award should find upon all the issues.—In our summary of the decisions of Michaelmas Term, 1843 (2 Law T.), we stated, that when a cause was referred and the costs were to abide the event, the arbitrator was bound to find upon each issue. In the last Term this rule has again been distinctly laid down in the Court of Exchequer, and its propriety recognized by the Court of Queen's Bench. In Kilburn v. Kilburn (4 Law T. 375), the defendant in the cause referred had pleaded non assumpsit, payment, and set-off, and the arbitrator had awarded that the defendant ought to pay a certain sum, and that judgment should be entered for the plaintiff for that amount, and the award was held bad. In Morgan v. Thorn or Thomas (4 Law T. 339; 9 Jur. 92), the award was upset for a similar defect. But, in consequence of these decisions, Pollock, C. B. suggested in the last case, and also at Nisi Prius (Molyneux v. Everstone, 4 Law T. 436), that in all cases where a cause is referred by order of reference, a condition should be introduced that it should be sufficient for the arbitrator to award in favour of the plaintiff or defendant generally, unless either party shall request him to find some particular issue, or issues. A finding of this sort in Waddle v. Downman (12 M. & W. 562) was held good because the terms of the reference were held to mean that a verdict was to be entered generally for the defendant. We would here remark that there is no real discrepancy between the decisions of Bourke v. Lloyd (10 M. & W. 550) and Cooper v. Langdon (9 M. & W. 60). In the latter case a general verdict was directed to be entered for the defendant, and as there were no distributable issues, the non assumpsit being a traverse of a special promise, the Court held that this was substantially a direction to enter a verdict on each issue, and it was accordingly so entered, and the plaintiff brought error on the very ground that all the issues were so found; but it was decided that there was no inconsistency amounting to error in finding for the defendant upon non assumpsit, and other pleas admitting a contract, such as a plea that the contract was rescinded in favour of the defendant (10 M. & W. 785). The case that does clash with Cooper v. Langdon is England v. Davison (9 D. P. C. 1052), but that was the decision of Mr. Justice Coleridge, sitting alone, and the other, of the full Court of Exchequer. Pearson v. Archbold (11 M. & W. 477) supports Bourke v. Lloyd; and we think that Cooper v. Langdon is within the language of Pollock, C.B. in Kilburn v. Kilburn, for it could be "clearly inferred from the finding in which way the issues were found." An award, therefore, generally, in favour of the defendant, may still be good if there is no plea on the record, which, like the general issue in indebitatum assumpsit, could be found partly for the plaintiff and partly for the defendant. Still, in future, we should always advise, in the absence of the clause suggested by Pollock, C.B. that the arbitrator find on each issue.

Finality and uncertainty.—In Mair v. Parrott (4 Law T. 290), the award was set aside because it directed a certain thing to be done according to the most approved method. "An arbitrator," said Lord Denman, C.J. "incurs great risk if he does not acquaint himself scientifically with the work he undertakes to award upon."

Setting aside award for improper reception of evidence.—Again we have to report a case (Clewes v. Middleton, 4 Law T. 332, and 9 Jur. 160), in which, like that of Dobson v. Groves, suprà, 219, the arbitrator thought proper to depart from the course required by every principle of justice, and examine a witness in the absence and without notice to the other party. Most properly the award was set aside. Here, as in the case that cannot be too often quoted, Reg. v. Justices of Herts (4 Law T. 291), the enlightened judges who sit in the Court of Queen's Bench are fully alive to their especial duty of watching over the whole administration of justice, and sanctioning no precedent, however innocently intended, which may lay the foundation for the practice of drawing justice from impure sources.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES.

Acceptance of foreign bill.—The distinction in favour of a foreign bill, which allows an acceptance thereof either verbally or by a promise set out on the face of the bill, is well established; and it may now be also considered as settled, that when such promise of acceptance has been made to a person by whose direction and on whose account the bill was drawn, it cannot be cancelled so as to deprive the drawers of their remedy even with the consent of the person on whose account it was drawn. (Grant v. Hunt, 4 Law T. 313.)

BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

What promise made by a bankrupt before his certificate is sufficient to render him liable after he has obtained his certificate.—It has been long established that no new consideration is necessary to support a promise in writing, since 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, by a bankrupt after his certificate to pay an old debt. The cases of Roberts v. Morgan (2 Esp. 736), and Brix v. Braham (1 B. 281), and others, seemed also fully to bear out the position laid down in the text books that there was no difference between a promise made before and one made after the certificate. A doubt, however, on this point was raised in Kirkpatrick v. Tattersall (4 Law T. 398), but now it may be considered as settled. Parke, B. in delivering the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, said—

> The only difference between a promise to pay before and after the certificate is, that in the former case it would be more doubtful whether the debtor meant to pay notwithstanding he was discharged under his bankruptcy, but it is clear that the promise is equally binding. The promise before certificate is more open to suspicion and more likely to be void; but that does not arise in this case. The only question is, whether there was a distinct and unequivocal promise by the bankrupt binding him to pay notwithstanding the certificate.

Accordingly it was held in that case that a written agreement by the bankrupt, a few days before his certificate, to pay the whole of his debt to the plaintiff by instalments, was a sufficient promise.

Discharge under Insolvent Acts does not release rent due.—Phillips v. Sherville (4 Law T. 412) is an important decision, as it shews that the Insolvent Acts do not operate in derogation of the rights of landlords any further than the Bankrupt Acts. It was decided in Newton v. Scott (9 M. & W. 434) and in Error (10 M. & W. 471), in accordance with the dictum of that very learned judge, Mr. Baron Parke, in Briggs v. Lowry (8 M. & W. 760), that the certificate does not operate as a release of a debt for rent, and consequently does not bar the landlord of the remedy by distress; and in the principal case this doctrine was held to apply to an insolvent, and therefore that after-acquired property remaining upon the premises might be distrained, notwithstanding that the sum due to the landlord for rent had been inserted in the schedule. The judgment confessed by the insolvent to the assignee was relied on as distinguishing the cases, because the rent was thereby become a judgment debt; but this was answered by the Court of Queen's Bench in two ways—first, that the judgment is not confessed to the landlord; and, secondly, that it is not co-extensive with the remedy by distress, since under the judgment only the debtor's goods could be seized, while by the distress any goods upon the premises would be seizable.

Power of commissioners to remand after refusal of final order under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. Construction of proviso at the end of s. 28.—The Court of Exchequer have taken the same view of these points as the Court of Queen's Bench, and in the same case, the prisoner Partington having been dissatisfied with that judgment. (Re Partington, 4 Law T. 356.) It may be, therefore, considered as fully settled, that the commissioners have power to remand independent of the 24th section, and that the proviso in sec. 28, limiting the term of imprisonment to twelve months, applies only to imprisonments after the refusal of the final order, and not to persons imprisoned for any period of time prior to that refusal. (See the judgment, 4 Law T. 172 and 220.) (a)

CONTRACT.

Duty of vendor to register a transfer.—The cases of Wilkinson v. Lloyd in the Queen's Bench (4 Law T. 432), and Fullarton v. Mittleholgzer, in the Exchequer Chamber (4 Law T. 376, and see 3 Law T. 75), seem at first sight to clash with each other; but, we think, upon examination,

(a) This case is also reported in 9 Jurist, p. 92; but although the learned counsel, who made the application, handed to the Court the Law Times, where alone the former case was reported, our cotemporary has thought proper to omit all notice of this circumstance in its report. We need hardly remind our readers that we constantly cite the Jurist, and that we shall continue to do so.

the distinctions between them will quite justify the difference in the judgments. In the first, it was held that an ordinance made in the colony of Berbice, in pursuance of a statute by which it was declared that "no instrument whereby the services of any apprenticed labourer should be transferred should be good or valid in law to pass, or convey, or affect such service, unless an annotation or memorandum of such instrument should be recorded in a book to be kept for such purpose in the colonial register's office of each of the respective districts in the said colony within one month after executing such instrument," did not render a contract not so registered void, or compel the vendor to give it efficacy by duly annotating it; but that that duty was imposed upon the vendee, and, notwithstanding his neglect, the vendor could sue upon a breach of the terms of the contract. In the other case, it was held, that the vendor of shares in a public company, which, by the deed of settlement, cann t be transferred without an entry in the books of the company, with the consent of the directors, is bound to prove such entry, and that the vendee, on the vendor's default, may recover the purchase-money, as upon a total failure of consideration. We apprehend that the distinction here is, that in the first case a statutory regulation was introduced, which all persons were bound to take notice of, and to act in accordance with it, and that the vendee knew that the services would not pass without a due registration of the deed by which they were intended to be sold, and nothing but the mere performance of the formality was requisite, which, by the possession of the deed he was fully able to effect. So it is the duty of the grantee of an annuity to enter the memorial; nor does it seem to be in the power of the grantee, mero motu, without any act on the part of the grantor repudiating the grant, to avail himself of the defective memorial (Weddel v. Lynam, 1 Esp. 309; Davis v. Bryan, 6 B. & C. 651; Faircloth v. Gurney, 1 D. P. C. 724.) But in Wilkinson v. Lloyd, the contract of the vendor of the shares was rather resembling a promise to make the vendee a partner in his stead; he (the vendor) being fully aware, from the terms of the settlement deed to which he had voluntarily become a party, and under the authority of which he was endeavouring to obtain a sum of money for the transfer of these shares, that he had, by being a party to the deed, declared that, without the consent of the directors, they should not be transferred. There was privity between him and the other shareholders, represented by the directors, but the vendee was a stranger to them until the proper entry was made. The vendee here had neither the possession, nor the means of possession, of what he had purchased; whereas in Fullarton v. Mittleholyzer, the vendee could at any time within the month have acquired the full title to the possession. The real point of difficulty in Wilkinson v. Lloyd was, whether the vendee was not bound to redeliver the deed of transfer, the inchoate title, before he could treat the contract as rescinded, and sue for the purchase-money; but the Court decided that this was not a condition precedent, following the analogy of the case of Scurfield v. Gowland (6 East, 211), where the grantee of an annuity secured by several securities, one of which had been declared to be void, because the memorial of the annuity was defective, was held entitled to sue for the consideration money, without a prior delivery of the other deeds, which had thus been shewn to be invalid and useless, although not specifically set aside by the Court.

Money had and received.—Under this head we have to notice a case of considerable interest to the profession, as it involves the question of the relationship in which the town agent of an attorney stands with respect to the client. (Cobb v. Becke, 4 Law T. 394.) The question at issue was, whether the client in the country could have any remedy against the town agents for omitting to pay money which the country attorney had transmitted to them for the purpose of liquidating a claim of third parties against the client. It was contended that, either from the peculiar position of the parties, or from the fact that the town agents knew that the money belonged to the client, they were liable in an action for money had and received. But the Court of Queen's Bench held that the mere relation of the parties to each other constituted no privity between them, and that the country attorney was, in fact, the agent of the client to pay the money, and he could not delegate that agency to his town agents. They said, however, that if it could be shewn that the country attorney was merely employed as the hand to forward the money to the defendants, and that he had been specifically instructed to forward the money to the defendants, the town agents, then the action might have been maintained. It would follow from this decision that the country attorney, after remitting the money under the circumstances of this case, which, we apprehend, is the usual course of practice, would be liable to the client, from any cause, the money was lost in the hands of the town agent.

COSTS.

Certificate under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24.—If there were no other circumstances than those stated in the report of Petty v. Walker (4 Law T. 295), it is hardly reconcilable with the previous decisions. It seems to decide that the judge who does not give the certificate in open court immediately after the verdict, must at least state that he will take time to consider, to render a certificate subsequently given good, although no extraneous matter has been presented to the mind of the judge. We would, however, refer to Thompson v. Gibson (9 D.P.C. 717), where a certificate given by the judge after he had adjourned to his lodgings was held to be within the word "immediately." So in Nelmes v. Hedges (2 D.N.S. 350), where the jury in another cause had been sworn before it was given, because given within reasonable time. (See Prac. Notes, 3 Law T. 173.)

The 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, bars the plaintiff of costs on any issues.—The Profession will really be indebted to Mr. New on for the numberless points of law he causes to be settled by his own cases. We have to add two this term on the question of costs. In Newton v. Rowe (4 Law T. 333), it was settled if it was ever open to a reasonable doubt, that where, in an action on the case for libel, there are issues on the general issue, and also on pleas of justification, and the plaintiff obtains a verdict on all the issues, with only a farthing damages, he is not entitled to costs on any of the issues.

General costs of the cause.—In Newton v. Holford (4 Law T. 332), the defendant was held to be entitled to the general costs of the cause if a verdict was found for him on the general issue, notwithstanding that he had failed on a plea of justification, and to which the evidence at the trial principally related.

Liability of pauper to pay costs of amendments.—In Foster v. Bank of England (4 Law T. 351), it was sought to claim for a plaintiff suing in formâ pauperis, the right to amend his pleadings, without payment of costs, but this strange privilege was instantly repudiated by the Court.

COVENANT.

Where the legal interest is joint, all the covenantees must sue.—During the last Term there were two cases upon the nature and construction of covenants, which will be frequently referred to in future arguments, from the full consideration which was given to them, and the importance of the points decided. The first, Hopkinson v. Lee (4 Law T. 395), fully confirms the rule which, prior to the dicta in Sorsbie v. Park (12 M. & W. 146), was considered to be established by the cases, and shews that the Court of Queen's Bench, at least, will not support the qualification suggested by Mr. Preston (Shep. Touch. 166). The action must, in fact, follow the legal interest, without regard to the words of the covenant; for, in the principal case, the express insertion of the words "as a distinct covenant," were held to make no difference, and the plaintiff, who had sued alone, was nonsuited. The dicta of the learned judges (Lord Abinger and Parke, B.) in Sorsbie v Park were beside the question before them; and from this instance the student may learn the useful lesson to regard dicta, even of the highest authorities, as of little weight, when the particular points have not been fully argued and considered. There the leading case of Anderson v. Martindale (1 East, 497) was entirely overlooked both by the counsel and the judges, as it had been by Mr. Preston; and hence a doubt was thrown upon what was a sound and correct principle. In the conclusion of the judgment in Hopkinson v. Lee, Lord Denman, C. J. referred to Foley v. Addenbrooke (4 Q. B. 197), and the following passage from the judgment in that case deserves to be read in connection with the present:—

The result of the cases appears to be this—that where the legal interest and cause of action of the covenantees are several, they should sue separately, though the covenant be joint in terms; but the several interest and the several ground of action must distinctly appear, as in the case of covenants to pay separate rents to tenants in common upon demises by them, or as in the instance cited from Slingsby's case (5 Rep. 18 b), in note (1) to the case of Eccleston v. Clipsham (1 Wms. Saund. 165), where a man by indenture demised Blackacre to A, Whiteacre to B, and Greenacre to C, and covenanted with them and each of them, that he had good title, each might maintain an action for his particular damage by a breach of that covenant. On the other hand, it appears from several cases, that if the cause of action be joint, the action should be joint, though the interest be several. (Coryton v. Lithebye, 2 Saund. 115; Martin v. Crump, 1 Ld. Raym. 34 a; Wilkinson v. Hall, 1 B. N. C. 713.)

Implied covenants and covenants in law.—The other case in covenant is that of Williams v. Burrell (4 Law T. 115), arising out of the somewhat too notorious actions of ejectment brought by the present Earl of Egremont, on account of the leases granted by the late earl not having been strictly and in every particular in accordance with the leasing power. We rejoice to find that in two instances, at least, the parties have been able to recover from the executors of the deceased earl. Probably all the leases contained the same form of warranty the construction of which was the subject of the case now under notice. The warranty was as follows:—"And the said Earl, for himself, his heirs, and assigns, the said demised premises, with the appurtenances, unto the said John Williams, his executors, administrators, and assigns, under the rent, covenants, conditions, exceptions, and agreements before expressed, against all persons whomsoever lawfully claiming the same, shall, and will, during the said term, warrant and defend." It was contended by the defendants, that although this was a covenant in the nature of a covenant for quiet enjoyment and title, it was only a covenant in law, and, therefore, extended no farther than the period of the lessor's own estate, which, in this instance, terminated with his life, and that the executors, therefore, were not liable thereon, in consequence of the ejectment brought by the succeeding tenant. Tindal, C. J. in delivering the judgment, pointed out that confusion had arisen from not distinguishing between covenants in law and implied covenants, which were essentially different. And he thus defined them:—

A covenant in law is, properly speaking, an agreement which the law infers from the use of certain words of grant having a known legal operative force, as the word dedi in a feoffment, or demisi in a lease; and these terms, after having had a direct operation in creating an estate, have a new and secondary operation given to them by law, and are held to favour a covenant by the feoffor or the lessor for the quiet enjoyment of the estate which they have already created. A covenant of this nature and description is sometimes too, it would seem, improperly called an implied covenant, whereas an implied covenant, in its proper legal sense, is a covenant not formally stated in a deed, but which is collected by constructive inference from the terms used in it; and we think an implied covenant, in its proper sense, should not be distinguished in its effects or legal consequence from an express covenant.

And he further said, that the authorities shewed that a covenant arising from the terms of a warranty is not, as contended for by the defendants, a covenant in law, but is, in the proper sense of the word, an implied covenant, to be construed in the same manner, and attended with the same result, as an express covenant for quiet enjoyment. The identity in the results of an implied and an express covenant thus being established, it followed that the executor of the assignee of the lessee could maintain an action upon breach of the warranty during the term intended to be passed, as an express covenant for title or quiet enjoyment passes with the estate. (Spencer's case, 5 Rep. 16, 4th resol.) The ejected tenants recovered the mesne profits, which they had been compelled to pay, and the value of the term, and also the costs of defending the ejectment, as it had been defended by the direction of the executors. This decision will no doubt lead to numerous other claims upon the executors; for we understand that even yet there are several similar ejectments pending.

DISTRESS.

Privileged goods.—Carriages upon the premises of a commission-agent for the sale of carriages are privileged from distress. (Findon v. M'Laren, 4 Law T. 355.) This decision falls under the second head of exemption specified in the leading case on the subject, Simpson v. Hartopp (Willes, 512), viz.

things delivered to a person exercising a public trade, to be carried, wrought, or managed in the way of his trade or business, and shews that exceptions, although not favoured, may arise from time to time, as a new trade, or new system of carrying on a particular trade, becomes established and known to the public.

Payment of rent by under-lessee to superior landlord, under threat of distress, gives no right of contribution from another under-lessee.—This somewhat novel point was decided in Hunter v. Hunt (4 Law T. 374). A lessee had underlet two separate portions of the demised premises to two separate tenants, and one of them having been compelled to pay the superior landlord the rent due from the lessee for the whole, he sought, in an action for money paid, to obtain contribution from the other under-tenant. The Court of Common Pleas held, however, that there was no community of interest between the parties, and that the action could not lie. The fallacy of the plaintiff's case seems to have been the assumption that a mere accidental liability to pay was equivalent to a duty. As the Court suggested, there would have been equal ground for an action against a stranger whose goods happened to have been on the premises, and not to have been distrained.

EVIDENCE.

Hilary Term is not usually prolific of decisions on points of evidence; still there are a few which deserve to be noticed.

Material evidence after change of venue.—In Linley v. Bates (2 C. & J. 659), proof of the posting of a material letter, within the county, was considered to a fulfilment of the undertaking; and in Gilling v. Dugan (4 Law T. 292), proof of the receipt of a material letter, was held sufficient.

Prochein amy is an admissible witness, under Lord Denman's Act.—This point was raised and decided in the affirmative in Sinclair v. Sinclair (4 Law T. 338); for although a prochein amy is liable to the costs, he is not the party upon the record. He is "an officer of the Court, specially appointed to look after the interests of the infant." (Per Parke, B. in Morgan v. Thorne, 7 M. & W. 408.) The precise objection in the principal case was to the wife of the prochein amy, the exception in the statute extending to the actual parties and their wives.

Evidence of declaration by auctioneer.—If there is no written contract by the signature of the auctioneer, or otherwise, for the purchaser of goods at an auction, the statements of the auctioneer at the time, correcting the printed particulars, are admissible, in cases where the Statute of Frauds does not apply. (Eadon v. Blake, 4 Law T. 318.)

Variance.—A plea that goods were warranted "fit for roofing or building," is not proved by an invoice in which part of the goods are described as "material," and part as "roofing." (Camac v. Warriner, 4 Law T. 397.) W.

THE PROPERTY LAWYER.

NOTES ON CONVEYANCING CASES.

The numerous cases which occur in reference to the transfer of property are so important to the Profession and the public, that an attempt to note their practical operation will, we trust, receive the reader's approbation. Under this head it is our purpose to remark on reported cases, or points occurring in practice, by which the application of established rules of construction, or the elucidation and development of such as are novel, may be brought to the attention of practitioners. We shall embrace questions arising in respect of personal as well as real property, and upon wills and testamentary dispositions, as well as upon instruments inter vivos. It will be obviously impossible to classify such cases, or to discuss such points in any pre-arranged order, we must follow the course of decision, and mark the solution of doubts and difficulties as they arise. Here we may meet with an isolated point which, having been mooted, is settled at once, and for ever. There we shall probably find groups of questions, more or less dependent upon each other, which may require frequent discussion and repeated determinations before the rules of law by which they are to be governed can be taken as well established. But whether a point be single, or whether its aspects be various and its relations many, it will be our endeavour to define and limit each decision within its just and exact boundaries. Perhaps the commonest source of error amongst lawyers is the attributing to decided cases a wider operation than, when closely examined, their circumstances justify. Again, in other cases, we shall find the current of authority arrested, and an arbitrary line drawn between old and new decisions, where, but for decision, the practitioner would deem the cases closely analogous, if not identical in principle. With these indications of the scope and objects of these notes, we commit them to the reader's indulgence, believing that, however imperfectly executed, the design of subjecting the cases on this great branch of the law to a rigid examination will be deemed useful. We all, of necessity, act much on first impressions of the effect of recent decisions, and, therefore, it becomes of primary importance that such impressions should be accurate, or, at least, the result of careful consideration.

Execution of deeds.—A point which lately occurred in our own practice may perhaps be worth mentioning, more from the fact of its having been raised and sustained by gentlemen of experience—though not, perhaps, in this particular branch of the law—than from any real difficulty upon the subject. The question was this: An executor was, in right of his testator, the creditor of a person who had been discharged under the Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and he had been appointed assignee of the insolvent's estate. All the insolvent's debts, except that due to the testator's estate, had been long since paid, and an agreement had been made by the executor to release his testator's debt in consideration of a sum of money; and it was also agreed that the executor, in his character of assignee under the insolvency, should reconvey the insolvent's property. This was done by a deed, which first released the debt of the testator's estate, and then, by a distinct witnessing part, re-assigned the effects vested in the executor as assignee. In order to vacate the judgment, and remove the schedule from the file of the Insolvent Debtors Court, it was necessary to apply to that Court, when it was objected by the officer of the Court that the deed was insufficient, because the person sustaining the double character of executor of a deceased creditor, and assignee under the insolvency, had only executed the deed once. The learned commissioner admitted the objection in the absence of a case to the contrary, and the counsel in that court submitted.

As it was supposed some inconvenience might arise from the necessity of procuring the deed to be again executed, the parties consulted their conveyancer, who at once said the objection was frivolous; so much so, that no case directly in point wherewith to satisfy the learned commissioner could be found. In looking for such a case, the following, which comprised incidentally that point, were however met with.

"If A be bound in an obligation to B, and afterwards B delivers it to A, in lieu of an acquittance of money, and A after, and before any cancelling of the obligation, delivers the same obligation to B for another duty, this is void, because it continues his deed by force of the first delivery, at the time of this second delivery, and so the second delivery is void. (1 Hen. 7, 14 b.)"

Again:—

"Where once a deed takes effect, a second delivery will not make it good. (Br. Ab. Faits, pl. 28, cites 8 Hen. 6; 6 pl. 64, cites 1 Hen. 7-14, per Vavisor, Perk. S. 154.)"

So again:—

"If a writing by the first delivery takes effect as a deed, though it be void in operation, yet a second delivery at a time when it may operate in law, shall be void, and shall not make it good. (8 Hen. 6, 61; 39 H. 6, 376. These cases, and other , will be found in 13 Viner's Abridgment, 25, tit. Faits."

And it is quite plain that the second delivery, or execution of a deed, is mere surplusage. In the instance we refer to, the whole of the deed, according to its expressed intention, becomes the deed of the party executing it, on the execution. It was then his deed as an executor, and operated as an effectual release of the debt due to the testator; and it was no less his deed as assignee under the insolvency, to effect a reassignment of the estate. A second execution could not make it more his deed than it was at first. Neither could it form any indication of intention to execute in any particular character, as that must depend upon the intention to be gathered from the deed itself. Though it was probably from some hasty recollection of cases, wherein the general words used in a deed, which, taken by themselves, would be sufficient to pass the whole interest, have been controlled and modified by the particular purpose indicated by the whole scope of the instrument, that the objection was first raised. Upon a second application, the cases above mentioned and the distinct opinion of conveyancers having been brought to the attention of the Insolvent Court, the objection was no longer sustained.

Gifts within the Mortmain Act.—As an instance of cases in which the course of decision has been stayed, two recent decisons under the Mortmain Act may be mentioned.

Thus it has been held that devises, not merely of land, but of any property "savouring of realty," were bad if given for charities. Under that term charitable bequests of money secured by mortgage or otherwise upon land; the benefit of a grant from the Crown to lay down chains in the Thames for mooring ships (Negus v. Coulter, Amb. 367); mortgages of turnpike tolls (Knapp v. Williams, 4 Ves. 430 n.); bonds of commissioners for the improvement of the city of Bath (Howse v. Chapman, 4 Ves. 542); money secured on poor-rates (Finch v. Squire, 10 Ves. 41); a judgment debt paid out of real estate (Collinson v. Pater, 2 Russ. & Mylne, 344), were severally held to savour of the realty, and to be incapable of passing to a charitable use under the statute. On the other hand, there was the case The Attorney-General v. Giles, before Lord Cottenham, when Master of the Rolls, in 1835 (not reported), in which it was decided that East-India stock, although the Company held real estate for merely trading purposes, might be well given for charitable purposes; and a similar decision occurred in Bligh v. Brent (2 You. & Col. 268). Then came the two recent cases to which we have referred, March v. The Attorney-General, in 1842, before the Master of the Rolls (5 Beav. 434); and Thomson v. Thomson, in 1844, before Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce

(1 Real Property and Conveyancing Cases, 1 Ver. Rep. 113). In March v. The Attorney-General, several sums of money were bequeathed to charities, which consisted of money secured by a mortgage of a policy of assurance from the Society of Equitable Assurances, a sum received upon a policy of the Amicable Life Assurance Society, another sum secured by a policy in the Law Life Assurance Office, and a sum received on a policy from the Economic Life Assurance Society. The Master, on a reference to inquire the nature and particulars of the personal estate, reported that "the sums received upon or secured by policies of insurance were personal estate connected with land, according to and in the proportion which the funds properly subject to the payment thereof, which consisted of estates or securities on real estates, bear to the funds and property subject to the payment thereof, which consisted of pure personal estate." But Lord Langdale, M. R. held that the sums mentioned were not within the Mortmain Act, and that they might be well bequeathed for charitable purposes. The following passages from his lordship's judgment shew the grounds upon which the decision proceeds. He said—

The grantees of the policies contract for a sum of money to be paid on a future count. Whatever may be the property possessed by the grantors, the grantees have not, by their contract, any immediate control over it, or lien upon it. The grantors, or their trustees, continue to have the entire control or management over the whole fund; the real estate or chattels real may be sold and converted into pure personalty, and the pure personalty may be converted into chattels real. This state of things may continue, not only during the contingency upon which payment depends, but after the contingency has determined; for the grantee acquires no specific lien after payment has become due. Even in default of payment when due, the grantee cannot, by reason of such default only, resort immediately and at once to land or chattels real, but must resort to legal process, which will not affect the land possessed by the office at the time of the contract, although it may, in its final result, affect such land as the office may have at the time when the process is executed.

And his lordship said that a state of circumstances might be conceived in which the Court would take possession of the property, and apply it for the benefit of all the persons having claims upon it; yet that such a bare possibility of interference would not connect the money payable on the policy with the quality of the property held by the grantors, so as to bring it within the meaning of the Mortmain Act.

After referring to some of the decisions as to mortgages on turnpike tolls, and poor and county rates, we have mentioned, he proceeded:—

There are other cases which have scarcely met with approbation; but this case does not appear to come within the Act, or within any of the decided authorities; and it seems, that if the money secured by a policy of assurance is to be deemed to be connected with land, so as to be brought within the Statute of Mortmain, there would be no reason why the same consequence should not attach upon any debt owing by any person who has real estate or chattels real; for though the right of action imports only pure personalty, yet the result of an action may be to obtain payment out of the land or chattels real.

And when we recollect that by the late statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, a judgment is made a direct charge upon the real estate of the debtor, the consequence, and the legitimate consequence, of the prior decisions upon the Statute of Mortmain would be, that debts due from a person having real estate could not be bequeathed for charitable purposes. The latest case on this subject, Thomson v. Thomson, would, in the absence of a distinct adjudication, have appeared within the principle of several of the decided cases. There the testator had bequeathed shares in the London Gas-light Company, and by the Act of Parliament under which the company was established, it was declared a corporation; and by the 5th section it was provided that

All and every person or persons, by or for whom any subscription shall be made or accepted, his, her, or their executors, administrators, and assigns respectively, should have and be entitled to a share of and in the capital stock of the said corporation, in proportion to the moneys to which he, she, or they should have so contributed towards making up the same, and to a proportional share of the profits and advantages, &c.

By another clause it was declared the shares should be deemed personal estate, "and not of the nature of real estate;" and the company was expressly authorized to break up the soil and pavement of the streets for the purpose of laying mains of pipes.

By a subsequent Act for enlarging and amending the powers given to the company by the former Act, it was enacted that by their corporate name they should have power "to purchase and hold any lands, with houses, buildings, messuages, tenements, and erections thereon, for the purposes of the said Acts, not exceeding the extent of ten acres in the whole, without incurring or being liable to any of the penalties or forfeitures of the Statute of Mortmain; and to sell and dispose of or exchange any lands so purchased." By another and later Act, persons were authorized to sell land to the company in the manner therein mentioned; and it provided that, in certain events, amounting to a failure of the company, the property of the company should be sold and the produce divided amongst the proprietors. The Vice Chancellor also held these shares not to be within the Mortmain Act. His Honour, after stating the facts and referring to the Acts of Parliament for the establishment and regulation of the company, said—

I observe, in passing, without saying that I rely upon it, that by the terms of the section (5th), it is provided, not simply that the shares are to be personal estate; it contains, further, a negative clause, "and not in the nature of real estate." I make that remark in passing, without saying I rely upon those words, and without saying that I should not have decided the case as I do, if they had not been there. It is sufficient to say that the words are here, and form an important portion of the section. The shares thus constituted, then, are shares of a joint stock, to be raised for trading purposes, and the profits to arise from trading are to be divided among the proprietors. The shares, then, can only be connected with land, as the business is carried on in connection with the earth, as all business, to a greater or less extent, must be, and also with real property to be purchased by the corporation. The landed property is held by the corporation as part of the general stock, which is to produce certain profits of trade, which, when produced, are to be divided. Speaking untechnically, this would be as foreign to the idea of real property as possible. The words of the Mortmain Act are, "any lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, or of any estate or interest therein, or of any charge or incumbrance affecting or to affect any lands, &c." Now, it is possible, that by an excessively strict and far-fetched interpretation of these words, this case might be held to be within them. The question is, however, upon a just and rational comparison of the language of the Act, with the intent to be collected from the whole Act or otherwise, these are words properly applicable to a case of this description. I am of opinion that they are not. Without saying that these interests may be within the term "pure personalty," I am of opinion that they are not interests falling within a just interpretation of the Mortmain Act.

It would seem that these decisions exclude the vast mass of property which is now invested in the shares of public companies from the operation of the Mortmain Act, and that even in the instance of a railway, wherein the whole undertaking is based upon the possession of land. If any of the older cases we have named are to stand, the distinction must be, that where there is a charge "affecting, or to affect lands," directly, the interest is within the Mortmain Act; but where land forms the stock, or part of the stock, of a trading company, by means of which profits are made, the interests of the shareholders in that stock, and the recipients of those profits, are capable of being bequeathed in mortmain. This may be a just interpretation of the Mortmain Act, but it is scarcely consistent with the principle of earlier decisions. And, notwithstanding the cases of March v. The Attorney-General, and Thomson v. Thomson, the question at present seems scarcely to rest on a satisfactory basis. W.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

COURTS SELECTED BY THE NEW QUEEN'S COUNSEL.—It is understood that Mr. Hodgson intends to devote himself to the Rolls Court. We do not hear that Mr. Parry has announced his decision; but there is, we believe, some probability that Mr. Lee will ultimately give his principal attendance in the Lord Chancellor's Court. Mr. Wood is said to have intimated his intention of selecting the Lord Chancellor's Court and one of the Vice Chancellor's. We do not, however, vouch for any of these reports; indeed we rather suspect that one of them at least is erroneous.—Legal Observer.

SCOTS LAW CHANGES.—We understand that, by the appointment of Charles Neaves, esq. advocate, to the sheriffship of Orkney and Shetland, on the death of Mr. Maconochie, Charles Baillie, esq. will be the new Advocate Depute, in place of Mr. Neaves; and that Archibald Boyle, esq. son of the Lord Justice General, will succeed Mr. Baillie, as junior counsel to the officers of state for Scotland.—Edinburgh Paper.

CRIMINAL LAW.—Before the grand jury were dismissed at the recent assizes at Salisbury, they handed in the following presentment.

"The grand jury assembled and sworn at the assizes held at Salisbury in the county of Wilts, on Wednesday, the 5th day of March, 1845, beg leave respectfully to submit to the hon. the judges (for the consideration of the Commission for Criminal Law), that they are fully impressed with the extreme hardship which frequently falls on those persons who are brought before the magistrates, charged with depredations on agricultural produce, wood and other property of the same description, in those cases where a previous severance has taken place, and consequently where, under the present law, they must be committed (unless bailed) until the next assizes or quarter sessions, that the term of this previous imprisonment frequently exceeds that which would probably have been inflicted by the court if the parties charged should be found guilty. That in consideration of these previous commitments, the sentences of those courts are necessarily very slight, and to the public apparently inadequate. That some degree of invidious reflection is thrown on the petty sessions by such commitments, when scarcely any distinction, except the fact of previous severance, can be perceived from those cases where the statute law permits a summary conviction. That the business of the courts of assize and quarter sessions is greatly increased by the trials of such cases, the present calendar presenting about 20 indictments of this kind. For these reasons the grand jury submit for the consideration of the judges and the other commissioners, whether the process of summary trial and sentence before magistrates at petty sessions might not be advantageously extended to those cases of depredation before mentioned,* where the person is not charged with entering a dwelling-house or curtelage for that purpose, or with any other circumstance of aggravation."

(Signed by the foreman of the grand jury.)

In consequence of the decease of Lord Wynford and Sir J. Gurney, pensions to the amount of nearly 7,000*l.* a year revert to the public, Lord Wynford having received a pension of 3,500*l.* a year, as late Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and Sir J. Gurney had just been granted 3,250*l.* a year, as a retired Baron of the Exchequer.—Observer.

MARQUIS OF DONEGALL.—The will of the Most Honourable George Augustus, Marquis of Donegall, late of Ormean, in the county of Down, in Ireland, who died on the 5th of October last, has just been proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury by the Most Honourable Anna, Dowager Marchioness of Donegall, widow, the relict and sole executrix, to whom is devised all the freehold and personal estate, cattle, and stock of every description, and to her heirs and assigns absolutely. The effects sworn to in this country are of small amount. The will, dated 11th September, 1844, is contained in a few words, and concludes thus—"to which I have subscribed my title of honour and affixed my seal. (Signed) Donegall."—Historical Register.

HONOURABLE MRS. REID.—The will and codicil of the Hon. Caroline Reid, late of Runnymede, in the parish of Egham, in Surrey, widow, who died on the 9th of November last, have just been proved in Doctors' Commons by the surviving executors, Colonel George Alexander Reid, 2nd Regiment of Life Guards, and John Gillebrand Hubbard, esq. of Sussex-square. She desires that she may be buried in the vault in Old Windsor churchyard, by the side of her late husband; gives 50*l.* to the poor of the parish of Old Windsor, and directs that her subscriptions to the charities of that parish be continued as long as her executors shall think proper; leaves specific legacies of plate, &c. to her children. It is her wish that those of her children who are under age should live together and have a general home at the house at Runnymede, or elsewhere, as the executors may select, who are to farm land and provide horses, carriages, &c. for the health, welfare, and comfort of her children; the residue of the estate is left amongst them. Personal effects sworn under 2,000*l.*—Ibid.

WILL OF GEORGE HASTINGS KEPPEL, ESQ.—The will of the late George Hastings Keppel, esq. of Princes-street, Mansion-house-street, near the Bank of England, late Common Councilman for the ward of Broad-street, who died on the 4th of February last, has just been proved in Doctors' Commons by Louisa Keppel, widow, the relict, and Adam Bittleston, esq. of the Inner Temple, barrister-at-law, the executors according to the tenor of the will, there being no direct appointment. The will is very short, dated 9th September, 1843, and in the deceased's handwriting. Leaves a moiety of the rents, interest, and dividends arising from his real and personal estate to his wife for her life, and the other moiety to the children, who are to receive the whole of the property at her death. Personal estate under 25,000*l.*—Ibid.

Curious Will.—John Moore, esq. son of Archbishop Moore, by his will, which was proved in Doctors' Commons on Wednesday last, under 300,000*l.* which is the amount of the personal estate only, has left some interesting specific bequests and directions, of which we give the following:—To Earl Howe he gives his equestrian bronze statue, in remembrance of his attached friend "Old Johnny" (the testator); to John Lewis Wyndham, esq. he gives 500*l.* for "Auld lang syne;" to Sir J. Hyde Parker (his messmate), a cup he won at the Weymouth regatta; to Spencer de Horsey, esq. he gives his Reindeer yacht; to Mr. Slater, master of the yacht, 200*l.*; to George Cooper, the late master, an annuity of 20*l.* for his life; and to Valentine Lewis, the coxswain, 5*l.* a year. Gives directions that he may be buried in the nearest churchyard to which he may happen to die; his body to be placed in an oak coffin, which is to be filled up with quick lime, but no leaden coffin, and that he should be borne to the grave by labourers, sailors, or stablemen (no hearse); and if he should die in London, to lie near his brother Charles. The will is in his own handwriting, and he has added two memoranda—one is, that his charities should be continued for two years; the other, that his favourite horses should be shot. He leaves his landed property in Essex to his godson, George B. Moore; his Calcraft estate to his nephew, John Moore; his house in which he dwelt, at Charles-street, and the whole of the furniture, he leaves to the wife of his brother Robert, for her own absolute use and disposal. The executors are the Rev. George Moore and the Rev. Robert Moore, clerks (the brothers), and Frederick Capes, esq. the godson of the deceased. The deceased was registrar of the province of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and principal of one of the seats in the Prerogative Office, Doctors' Commons.

LAW OF SETTLEMENT.

All instructions for important Bills should be placed in the hands of some person who is not only to draw such Bills, but be in the House of Commons when they are discussed. The practice, I believe, now is for such instructions to be placed before what is called a "Parliamentary draftsman," and the Bill, when prepared by him, is brought in by some member of the Government, and conducted by him with what assistance he may get.

Bills relating, as in the present instance, to criminal jurisprudence, are introduced by the Secretary, or Under-Secretary of State, and if made the subject of party fight, or any other strong opposition, the Attorney or Solicitor General is at his post, not only to support the principle of such Bills, but, what is equally important, see that the words of them are safe and clear to carry out such principle. But, after all, in this way the work is of a very piebald, unsafe, and, as experience proves, of a very incomplete description.

The first Poor Law Act, viz. 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, is notoriously a mass of crudity and blundering. The one which is the subject-matter of this letter is sufficiently shewn to be so. The Act for the appointment and payment of parish constables, viz. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 109, is not only absurd in its principle, but is so very miserably deficient and clumsy in its clauses, as to be either utterly thrown aside, or observed as a mere matter of senseless form.

The Act to improve the law of transfer of real property, viz. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, is so faulty, that the Profession deem it dangerous to adopt it, and the Chancellor has given notice to amend it, and thus, probably, make confusion more confounded. In fact, legal composition in the country is at once its curse, its bane, and its disgrace. It begins warmly to excite the attention and indignation of the country. Essays are written on it in reviews, leading articles in newspapers, speeches made upon it in Parliament, and elsewhere; the judges themselves declaim against it; the enormity of the evil is shewn up and admitted by everybody; and the only question is—What's the remedy? I submit that the drafts of all important Acts of Parliament should be drawn by some person who, if not to introduce them, can be on the floor of the House to superintend, and, I may say, protect their progress through the House. The Attorney or Solicitor General is the person legitimately to be looked to and selected for this most important task; but here, again, as these officers are members of a political party, they have their own private, extensive, and responsible duties to attend to, and really have not the time, or the mental or physical capability of attending to this duty. That in the year 1845 any thing in the shape of a judge, as the Lord Chancellor; or legal officers, as the Attorney and Solicitor General, should be the mere ephemeral beings of party breath, is a fact which can only be looked at with astonishment and disgust.

The Attorney and Solicitor General should be persons selected from the Bar purely for their high professional attainments, and that character of personal honour and caste which commonly attends such attainments. They should have salaries of ample extent, and be utterly independent of all cause of removal, save a vote of the House of Commons, or the prerogative of the Crown. They should compose all Government Bills, and, without being members of Parliament, be allowed to assist in the superintendence and conduct of such Bills. I humbly submit to you that a change of this sort in the character and practice of these high officers would soon work as a successful remedy to the evil of which the public does so loudly and so justly complain.

Possibly it may be very presumptuous in me to speak thus boldly, but I do not conceive it fair to utter complaints and shrink from the suggestion of remedies. That is a fashion in public speaking and public writing of a very easy, very plausible, but very disingenuous description. You only grapple, or, at least, attempt to grapple with an evil, by suggesting one or the other mode to remedy it, and, at all events, that is the most honest, as clearly the most useful, way of discussing the very subject itself.

It is manifest that the monstrous nuisance in question cannot longer be tolerated, and in my humble opinion, until you have some one in the House of Commons who can superintend, as a distinct matter of business, the verbiage of our Bills on legal subjects, ab initio ad finem, that evil will continue to exist.

I venture to suggest a remedy which, I trust, is not far wide of the mark; but, at all events, I may say,

"Si quid novisti rectius istis Candidus imperti; si non, his utere mecum."

I am, yours, &c. G. E. W.

COUNTY COURT PRACTICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—In answer to your correspondent on plaintiffs being compelled to attend the County Court to swear affidavits before the county clerk in court, I beg to refer him to Finch, 117, and In re Flint (2 D. & R. 407; 1. B. & C. 254), which proves an attorney is the proper person to swear affidavits in the County Court, as, before the courts at Westminster were erected, the County Courts were the chief courts, and justice was administered to people at their own doors. And while upon this subject, it may be worth notice that Michael Dalton, "On the Office and Authority of Sheriffs," page 176 states that no under-sheriff, sheriff's clerk, &c., shall be an attorney in any of the King's courts during the time that he is in any such office with any sheriff; and the sheriff is bound to have a care hereof, and prevent the same as well by the statute as by his oath; and no under-sheriff or sheriff's clerk shall abide or tarry in his office above one year under a forfeit of 200*l.* yearly as long as such person shall occupy such office, contrary to the effect of the said statute; and then follows the mischief, viz., by reason of which continuing in office, &c., the under-sheriff, sheriff's clerks, &c., grow so cunning in their several places, that they are able to deceive, and may well be feared that many of them do deceive, both the King, their high sheriff, and country; and Rex v. Bull (1 Wilson, 93; and 42 E. 3, C. 9). By inserting the above you will oblige, Sir,

Yours, &c.,

Twyford, March 8, 1845. George Elkins.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

A "Subscriber" submits the following:—

In the number of your valuable journal for 1st March, 1845, there is a report of the judgment of Tindal, C.J. in the case of Lunn v. Thornton, which decided that where a party bargains and sells "all his goods, furniture, implements of trade, and all other effects whatsoever then remaining, or which should at any time thereafter remain, and be in and upon his dwelling-house," any goods which he acquires subsequently to the date of the bill of sale do not pass under it. But the learned Chief Justice says, it is not the question whether the deed might not have been so formed as to give the defendants the power of seizing the future goods of the plaintiff so acquired by him, and brought upon the premises, in satisfaction of the debt; nor does there seem any doubt that such a power might have been given. Now, Sir, I should be much obliged to any of your subscribers and correspondents if they would give their opinions, through the pages of your journal, as to the manner and the form in which a creditor might be empowered to seize after-acquired goods in satisfaction of his debt, trusting that the importance of the question will be an excuse for trespassing upon your pages.

"J. J." thus answers "An Articled Clerk":—

It is an invariable practice with "honourable men," that an articled clerk may serve the last year of his clerkship with the agent of the solicitor to whom he is articled, or he may complete his clerkship by serving that year with a barrister (with the consent of the solicitor), but a proviso to that effect is best inserted in the articles to ensure it.

It is a misfortune in letting so long a period as four months elapse between the bankruptcy of the solicitor to whom you were articled, and the engagement with, or assignment over to another solicitor; that period must most certainly be made up.

In the first place, it is the fault of the legislature in not making a provision for such emergencies as yours; in the next place, the solicitor should have immediately assigned you over to his town agent, and, generally speaking, there should always be a proviso to that effect in the event of any interruption happening on the part of the solicitor, which might disturb the progress of your clerkship; and again, the assignee to the bankrupt's estate is bound to see to your interest, and on due notice given, is liable to make good loss or damages sustained. By the cessation of time (without extension) your articles would not be complete, and in consequence of this lapse you certainly cannot be examined in Easter Term next.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, MARCH 15, 1845.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

It has been formally admitted in the House of Lords that the existing law is ineffective for the protection of creditors against dishonest debtors. Even Lord Brougham acknowledged this, and was re-echoed by Lords Campbell and Cottenham. But Lord Brougham endeavoured to remove from his own shoulders the responsibility of having so unsettled the law, asserting that the clause abolishing imprisonment for debt under 20*l.* was not introduced by him, but by Lord Cottenham.

It is fair that praise and blame should be distributed where they are due, and, on the part of the legal Profession, we cannot permit Lord Brougham thus to shift the onus of his own acts. Therefore we will briefly recal the circumstances.

A Bill was introduced by Lord Cottenham wholly abolishing imprisonment for debt, but substituting for it most efficient provisions for reaching the property of debtors. By this Bill it was proposed that every debtor unable to meet his creditor's claims should be liable to be summoned before the Commissioners of Bankruptcy, and there compelled to reveal his property, and subjected to punishment of imprisonment for any fraud in the contraction of his debts which might be proved against him.

This measure, so excellent in its conception, so perfect in its framing, so adapted to meet the exigencies of the case, so just in its provisions, so entirely avoiding the difficulties which had hitherto stood in the way of abolition of imprisonment for debt, in the impossibility of discriminating between the honest and the dishonest debtor, was destined to encounter the hostility of Lord BROUGHAM. What the motive, we will not venture to surmise; but the fact is certain, that Lord COTTENHAM'S Bill was immediately subjected to his inveterate hatred.

It was impossible to attack this measure upon its merits. It was too obviously just to admit of any popular argument against it. But, unfortunately, the noble lord knew the prejudices of the assembly in which he sat, and with a generalship worthy of a better cause, he availed himself of them to defeat the scheme of his rival.

"My lords," he said, in substance, "this Bill abolishes imprisonment for debt, and substitutes for it a searching process against property, and a severe punishment for fraud. As the law stands, to imprisonment for debt your lordships are not liable. This Bill, therefore, affords no relief to your lordships. But, if it be permitted to pass, consider the consequences. If any of your lordships should be unable or unwilling to meet your creditors, who have now no remedy against you, they will by these provisions be enabled to summon any one of your lordships before a Commissioner of Bankrupts, and compel you to pay your debts, or to shew why you cannot do so. The inconvenience of such a law is so palpable, that your lordships cannot hesitate to reject it."

Such, in substance, was the argument of Lord BROUGHAM, and it was as successful as might have been anticipated. His lordship brought in a rival bill of his own framing, prevailed upon the peers to submit both to a select committee, and out of both the present law was framed, a scrap being taken from one and a scrap from the other, and the result was the wretched abortion that is now vexing the country. Instead of abolishing imprisonment for debt altogether, it was limited to debts above 20*l.* and all the provisions that were to operate as a substitute for it, the processes against property, and the punishments for fraud, were swept away.

The consequences are now painfully felt by all the industrious of the community. By the operation of this law of Lord BROUGHAM'S making, the honest have been suddenly deprived of their properties, the rogue has been released from his obligations.

But the wrong is at length acknowledged. There is to be an amendment of the law. So far good. But care must be taken that the amendment is sufficient for its purpose. To that the Profession and the public should look with jealous watchfulness. They have been imposed upon once, they may be so again. Nothing less will secure creditors than a power to treat all debtors who do not pay, either after a certain notice, or after judgment, as that which in fact they are, insolvents; and subjecting them to the same examination, the same liabilities, the same privileges, with added power of punishment for proved fraud in the contracting of their debts.

Let this be done, and imprisonment for debt may be abolished altogether, and with advantage. But nothing less than this will be a substitute for it, even in case of a debt under 20*l.*

Since the above was written, we have received from the committee of the Association of the Mercantile Classes, formed to procure an amendment of the Law of Debtor and Creditor, their printed address, in which we are delighted to see that they have adopted the suggestion which we last week took the liberty of submitting to them. The following has been added to the resolutions :—

Twelfth. That in order to render, on the score of expense, small estates available for bankruptcy as well as large ones, it is proposed that any creditor to any amount under one hundred pounds, shall have the power of making his debtor a bankrupt, by first giving him four days' notice to appear before the Insolvent Court, and that if the said debtor do not arrange with his summoning creditor within seven days after the expiration of such notice, he shall be made a bankrupt on the eighth day, and that the commission shall be worked by the Insolvent Court, at such a moderate expense, as shall deprive creditors of but a small and proportionate share of the property.

It should be observed that this resolution is not very explicitly set forth; but in framing a legislative enactment, of course all details necessary to its efficient working will be provided for; into these, therefore, we need not enter now; when the Bill is before us we shall take an early opportunity carefully to scrutinize its provisions with a view to its practical working. In the meanwhile, the gratitude of the country is due to the society for the exertions they are so successfully pursuing to procure an amendment of the Law of Debtor and Creditor.

CURIOUS COINCIDENCE.

WE hasten to do justice to a gentleman—a real Attorney, whose misfortune it is to have in the same town a sham Attorney, possessing, or assuming, the same Christian and surname, and with whose doings the respectable Solicitor in question is not unfrequently saddled by persons ignorant of the fact.

It was in such ignorance that we published in the LAW TIMES of the 8th inst. an application for a debt by the sham Attorney, THOMAS NEILD, which has been taken to be the production of the real Attorney of the same name. Of course had we known the fact of the double personality, we should have taken care, by explanation at the moment, to prevent a mistake of the individual; and having received the information, we now hasten to diffuse it, lest by any possibility the good and true man be mistaken for the sham letter-writer whose doings we had published.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

WE submit to the members the result of the circular proposing certain works for publication.

There are now 768 members. Of these not quite 400 have made any return.

Of those returned, some have ordered one work, others another; the consequence is, that the utmost number of orders for any one work proposed amounted only to 304.

As we stated when the circular was issued, orders for 500 copies were the least which, at the low prices of the Society, would meet the cost of writing and printing.

Consequently neither of the publications proposed in the last circular can be proceeded with.

We propose next to make trial of the series of Text-Books on THE PRACTICE OF THE LAW. It is probable that they may be deemed of more utility. As soon as the next Term begins, it is purposed to issue a prospectus of these to the members, and try what support they can hope for.

In the meanwhile, we are happy to say that the FORMS are receiving very general approval, and most of the members are availing themselves of the advantage of thus cheaply supplying their offices with these necessary aids to business. Some new ones have been added to the list during last week, of which the advertisement contains particulars. In pursuance of many suggestions, a skilful Conveyancer is now preparing for the Society a form of Conditions of Sale. The form of Retainer will be ready on Thursday, and some will be sewn into books for convenience of preservation.

Nos. VII. and VIII. of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases, forming Part II. will be ready on Tuesday, and Nos. VII. and VIII. of Magistrates' Cases, completing Hilary Term, are in the press. This will bring up all arrears.

A COURSE OF LECTURES ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS,

BY PROFESSOR CAREY.

Delivered at the University College.

LECTURE I.

Of Contracts generally — Definition Classification of Contracts—Proceedings for Breach of Contract—Cohses in Action.

WHEN Sir William Blackstone wrote his Commentaries, the science of law in all that relates to contracts, was left almost without cultivation; still more was this the case in the time of Sir Edward Coke. Let us for a moment see what is the explanation of a contract offered by Sir Edward Coke: "In every contract," he says, "there must be a quid pro quo; for contractus est quasi actus contra actum. (Co. Litt. 47, b.) Nearly of the same merit is the interpretation of the word agreement, contained in a learned argument, reported by Plowden: "agreeamentum est aggregatio mentium in re aliquâ factâ vel faciendâ." (Plowden, 17, a.) This etymological attempt was by Lord Chief Baron Comyns deemed sufficiently happy to be inserted in his Digest. (Com. Digest, Agreement, A). From the time of Sir Edward Coke, down to the end of the 17th century, I am not aware of any work that treated expressly of contract. In the year 1737 there was published A Treatise of Equity, a considerable portion of which was necessarily devoted to the consideration of this subject. This treatise was published anonymously, and a second edition of it was published in 1820, by Mr. Fonblanque, and the work is frequently quoted as Fonblanque's Treatise on Equity. The author is supposed to have been a Mr. Ballow, who was called to the bar in 1728. "What was his then age," says Fonblanque, in the second edition; "or what had been his previous course of education and study, are points upon which the editor feels himself particularly anxious to procure information; as a knowledge of the course of reading which had produced so profound a work, before its author was of ten years' standing at the Bar, might have stimulated, as well as directed, the industry of the student." The author having explained his idea of the nature of justice, proceeds: "Our present inquiry is restrained to that first sort of justice which governs contracts; for, as an action or suit, the remedy the law hath provided for obtaining justice is but a legal demand of some right, and all civil rights must arise from obligations, and these obligations are founded on compacts; it follows of necessity that the proper subject of the law is contracts, and that justice is the chief end of law which teaches the performance of them."

Now contracts are either voluntary or involuntary. The voluntary contracts are, buying and selling, letting and hiring, deposits and interest of money, and the like; the involuntary are, theft, murder, rapine, and all other heinous offences, whether secret or violent. But we shall waive the treating of those any further here, since it is the voluntary contracts only that we shall have occasion to consider, and such especially as are most in use amongst us." (Fonblanque on Equity, s. 2.) This description of the nature of contracts appears uncouth to English ears. That which the writer terms an "involuntary" contract, we are apt to consider no contract at all; and the first feeling produced by reading that passage is, to join with the editor in a wish to discover the course of study by which it appears the author has arrived at conclusions so little in unison with our ordinary knowledge. The author does not give any references. The first object of the editor (as he tells us) was to supply this omission; in the present instance the references he has suggested are altogether futile. In point of fact, the whole of the introductory part of the treatise was taken from the fifth book of Aristotle's Ethics. Aristotle defines justice to be "equality." That breach of justice which, in the language of modern jurisprudence, would be called private law (justice between man and man), consists, according to Aristotle, in restoring that equality which has been broken. He terms it corrective justice—justice which sets the thing straight. When a man refuses to fulfil a contract, the equality between the parties is broken; the one who breaks the contract has more than his own, and the other is left in possession of less than he is entitled to: justice, by taking from one and giving to the other, restores the equality. The man who has bought goods and not paid, for them has more than his own; the man who is not paid has less than he is entitled to; justice, by taking the price of the goods from one and giving it to the other, restores the equality: and therein, says Aristotle, consists justice. Again: when one man commits a wrong towards another, Aristotle considers in this case the equality between the parties to be broken; the one who does the wrong retains more than his due, and the party who suffers the wrong has less than he is entitled to: justice, by taking from the wrongdoer and giving to the other party, restores the equality between them. When an assault has been committed, the man who suffers from the assault has less than he is entitled to, because he is entitled to damages; and the man who has committed the assault has, says Aristotle, more than he is entitled to: justice, by taking from the man who committed the assault, and giving to the other who has suffered the injury, restores the equality between them.

These are the two great branches of moral law. There is a great analogy between them, and Aristotle applies to them both the term συνάλλαγμα. That term, in the more strict sense, is confined to contracts only; but it is here applied in a more comprehensive sense. Whenever one party has a claim upon another, he designates by this term the legal relation which is thereby created between them. In the one case it is the legal relation of debtor and creditor; in the other, it is the legal relation of the person who seeks for compensation for an injury and the person whose duty it is to pay it. The two legal relations are very analogous, and are both termed synallagma. A contract he calls a voluntary synallagma, because the relation is created by the consent of the parties; a wrong he calls an involuntary synallagma, because it is against the will of one at least of the parties. The description he gives of contracts is almost the original from which the words in the treatise on equity are translated.

In examining what Aristotle says of justice, it is clear that his ideas on the subject of jurisprudence were far in advance of the language he was compelled to use; but with the progress of legal science the language has also been developed. In the Roman law we find no such terms as those of "voluntary" and "involuntary" contracts. To the one of these the term contractus is appropriated; to the other is given the term delictum. Under these terms the distinction between the two, pointed out by Aristotle, is preserved, and at the same time the connection clearly maintained. When a legal relation is created between two persons, whether the result of a contract or the result of a wrong, then, in the language of the Roman law, an obligatio is incurred by the one in respect to the other. The party who having entered into a contract fails to perform it, is said to incur an obligatio ex contractu; this, in the language of Aristotle, is a voluntary synallagma: the party who has committed a wrong incurs an obligatio ex delicto; and this, in the language of Aristotle, is an involuntary synallagma. In the language of Aristotle there is no distinction in the terms between the contract and the wrong on the one side and on the other, and the legal consequence resulting from the breach of the contract or the commission of the wrong. In the language of the Roman law these are properly distinguished: on the one side, the contractus, the contract entered into; and delictum, the wrong done, on the other side—the legal result or liability arising from the breach of the contract or the commission of the wrong.

A contract is described by Aristotle, in another place, as a law made between the parties: it confers on the party to whom the promise or undertaking is made a right which he did not possess before, which the law alone could not have given; it imposes on the party who makes the promise a corresponding duty—a duty which, without that act, would not have been imposed. I purchase a horse for 50*l.* and thereby undertake to pay that sum; the contract confers on the seller a right to the price, and it imposes on me the duty to pay it.

The following is an important distinction pointed out by Mr. Austin, once a Professor of Jurisprudence in this college, in his lectures on the Province of Jurisprudence:—Rights are divided into two classes—such as are valid against all the world; and such as are valid only against certain specified individuals. A right valid against all the world is one that exists by virtue of the law itself,—such as the right of personal security. It is the duty of every man not to assault me: the right not to be assaulted is a right valid against all men. Supposing this right to be infringed, if a man assaults me, I acquire a new right—the right to compensation. The man who assaulted me has made himself subject to a new duty,—the duty of making compensation. In the language of Aristotle, the legal relation—synallagma—is created between me and the man who assaulted me. My right is one that I can enforce by action; it is a right of action. The duty of the man who assaulted me is one he can be compelled to perform; it is a liability, in the terms of the Roman law, an obligatio (ex delicto). In the case I put of my purchasing a horse for 50*l.* the right of the seller to the 50*l.* is a right valid against me only. I am the only person whose duty it is to pay the price. It is a right, not existing merely by virtue of the law, but created between him and me by the contract which has been made. The contract having, as far as we ourselves are concerned, the binding effect of law, but having no operation on other persons, it is, according to the description of Aristotle, a law made between the parties. The effect of the contract is that the seller has a right to the price; it is my duty to pay it; a legal relation is created between us, and if I fail in the performance of my duty, there results a right of action on his side, and a liability on mine. This result might be diversified through all the various ways in which a contract can be created between two parties. And this is the simple effect of a contract, and you will see at once how faulty is the arrangement of Blackstone when he introduces contract under the head of "title to things personal." True, title to things personal may be made by contract, and such is necessarily the effect of a contract of sale, when carried into execution. If I purchase goods, by the performance of the contract the goods become mine, and so far it is a mode of transferring property. If I purchase a horse, the horse I have purchased becomes my property; the price, if ever I pay it, becomes the property of the seller. But the ultimate effect of the contract of sale is of secondary importance as a matter of jurisprudence, in comparison with the legal operation of the contract itself.

The legal operation of every contract is this: if I fail to perform that which I had promised, the party to whom I made the promise has a right of action against me. It is not necessary that the acquisition of property should form any part of the contract on either side. "If you will mow my field of hay in the summer, I will reap your field of corn in the autumn," is, in the law of England, a perfectly valid contract. If you perform your part, you may require me to perform mine; and if I refuse or neglect, you have a right of action for any damages that justice will award you. Supposing the thing to be performed, even the contract can, under no circumstances, be a title to property. In this case the contract gives no title to property whatever. The breach of the contract on my part gives you a claim to compensation; but though compensation in money may be awarded and given, the contract no more founds a title to the sum recovered than an assault does to the damages you may recover in an action of trespass.

I have observed that, in the language of Aristotle, the agreement, and the legal consequences of the agreement, are both comprehended under the term synallagma; in the language of the Roman law, the legal consequences of an agreement are distinguished in terms from the agreement itself. The agreement is denominated contractus, and the legal consequences of the agreement obligatio. In the language of our own law a further distinction is brought out more prominently than in the Roman law. Even in the Roman law it is clear the obligatio is not the result of the contract alone; the liability does not arise from the contract made, but from the contract broken. The right of action depends upon the contract being broken; this we denominate the breach of the contract; the breach of the promise, &c.

When a claim is founded on a contract, we have three points to consider—first, the promise or engagement; secondly, the breach; and, thirdly, resulting therefrom, the right of action.

A contract is defined by Blackstone to be "an agreement, upon sufficient consideration, to do or not to do a particular thing." I propose to alter the definition thus:—"A contract is an agreement to do or not to do a particular thing, which agreement must either be on sufficient consideration or made with certain prescribed formalities." A contract is an agreement to do or not to do a particular thing. It is an agreement wherein one of the parties promises, undertakes, or agrees to do or not to do the thing in question. The terms "contract" and "agreement" include the engagement entered into on both sides. The terms "promise" and "undertaking" are applicable to the engagement entered into by one of the parties, without reference to any corresponding engagement which may have been entered into by the other party. I purchase a horse for 50*l.*; the seller promises or undertakes to let me have the horse; I promise or undertake to let him have the price; the engagements entered into on both sides, taken together, constitute the contract or agreement. From this meaning of the words it follows, as I shall have occasion to mention again hereafter, that if an Act of Parliament, requires an agreement, or a note of an agreement, to be in writing, it is necessary that the writing should shew what both parties have engaged to perform; if it only sets forth the promise or undertaking of one of the parties, that is not a compliance with the statute. (Wain v. Warlters, 5 East, 10; Sanders v. Wakefield, 4 B. & Ald. 595.)

Every contract contains a promise or agreement to do or not to do a particular thing. If the party who has made the promise does not do that which he has promised to do, or if he does that which he has promised not to do, he incurs a liability to make good to the other party the damage he has occasioned by the breach of the promise. If the thing to be done consists in the payment of a sum of money to be paid by one of the parties to the other, that sum of money, as soon as it is payable by the terms of the contract, constitutes a debt. An action lies to recover the damage on the debt. The form of the action depends mainly on the nature and partly on the form of contract. In point of form, contracts are divided into two classes; special contracts and simple contracts. A special contract is an agreement made by deed or instrument under seal; or, more correctly, a written instrument sealed and delivered; such as a deed of covenant, a deed of sale, or a bond. A bond is an instrument whereby one party, called the obligor, binds himself to pay a certain sum to the other, called the obligee. This binding or obligation is usually subject to a condition, such as the payment of rent, the repayment of money borrowed, or the like. If the debtor performs the condition, the bond becomes of no effect; but if he fails to perform it, then it comes into operation: the bond is forfeited, and the sum in which the party is bound becomes a debt. (Com. Dig. title Fait, A, and 2 Black. Com. 295—308, and 3 ib. 340.)

A simple contract is an agreement made without the formalities of a special contract. It is created merely by the consent of the parties, either expressly given, or to be inferred from their conduct. This consent might, at common law, be in all cases given by word of mouth. Agreements of this kind are denominated, therefore, parol contracts; and whether the agreement be in fact verbal, or whether the terms of it are put down in writing, and this (as far as regards the nature of the contract) is perfectly immaterial, it is, in such case, a simple contract, or a parol contract. This extends even to cases where it is provided by Act of Parliament (e. g. the Statute of Frauds), that an agreement or promise cannot be enforced unless it be in writing and signed by the party. In this case, as in every other, if the agreement is not executed with the formalities of a deed, it is only a parol contract or a simple contract, governed by the same rules as all other parol contracts.

All contracts are distinguished into agreements by specialty, and agreements by parol, nor is there any such third class as contracts in writing. (Ryan v. Hughes, 7 T. R. 350, note (a).) Besides special contracts and simple contracts, there is sometimes said to be a third class, namely, such as are by record. Thus, when any specific sum is adjudged to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff on an action or suit at law; this is described by Blackstone as being a contract of the highest nature. In the same class he ranks debts or recognizances, together with statutes merchant and statutes staple. "Since," to use his words, "the contract on which they are founded is witnessed by the highest kind of evidence, namely, by matter of record." (2 Bl. Com. 464, 465.) When by the sentence or other judicial act of a court of judicature, a sum of money is adjudged to one of the litigant parties, that sum of money constitutes a debt; the judgment is so far ot the same nature as a contract, that it has the effect of creating a debt. A debt which is thus established by a court of record has many privileges over any debt created either by parol or by specialty. By a judgment, when obtained, the lands of a debtor are barred. And, for instance, if the debtor dies in the distribution of the estate, the debts of record must be paid in preference to any debt of either of the other two classes. Another effect of the judgment (in which it differs from any other agreement between the parties) is, that it enables the creditor to issue execution against the debtor. For this reason, when one person is indebted to another, it is often agreed that the debtor shall give an acknowledgment of the debt by a cognovit, in an action brought against him by the creditor, or shall grant a warrant of attorney authorizing the person therein named to appear for him in an action, and allow judgment to pass against him. In such case the creditor having the judgment in his favour, or the means of obtaining such, may issue execution against the debtor. Hence a cognovit is frequently given as a security for a debt, and thus the subject of debts of record is intimately connected with the consideration of contracts.

For every breach of contract, as we have already seen, an action will lie; an action of covenant, if the contract is under seal; an action of assumpsit, if the contract is not under seal; and where the breach of contract consists in the non-payment of an ascertained sum of money due from one of the parties to the other, an action of debt will lie, whether the contract be under seal or not. Thus it appears that the ordinary remedy of law for the breach of a contract lies in the recovery of money in the shape either of the debt itself or the damages. This, however, is not absolutely true without exception. For instance, where a man is under a contract to deliver goods, he may, according to the common law, be sued for the goods themselves in an action of debt on the detinet, which is an action similar in its nature to the ordinary action of debt brought for the recovery of a sum of money. There is such an action in the Year Book (12 Edw. 2, 375). But even in this action recovery of the goods themselves cannot be enforced. It is in that respect like the action of detinue, which in other respects it much resembles. Though the plaintiff demands the goods, he will obtain damages merely. This action is, however, in practice, superseded by the action of assumpsit, wherein the party who has broken the contract is sued for the damage he has occasioned by not delivering the goods.

It is obvious, that the agreement may be of such a nature that the mere payment of damages will be a very inadequate compensation. When this is the case, the party injured may apply to a court of equity, and if the breach of contract consists in not doing that which he has undertaken to do, the Court will compel him to do it by a decree of specific performance. Thus, if a man has contracted to deliver goods, a perfect remedy may, in ordinary cases, be obtained by damages. But where a man has contracted to convey a landed estate, it is considered that damages, calculated on the general money value of the land, may not be a complete remedy to the purchaser, to whom the land may have a peculiar and special value, and for this reason a court of equity will decree a specific performance of the contract. (Adderley v. Dixon, 1 Sym. & Stuart, 607.) This was a specific performance, decreed at the suit of the vendor, on a contract for sale of debts, proved under a commission of bankruptcy. It was argued, that this, not being for the sale of land, the Court could not grant specific performance. "Courts of equity," says the Vice-Chancellor, "decree the specific performance of contracts, not upon any distinction between realty and personalty, but because damages at law may not, in the particular case, afford a complete remedy. Thus a court of equity decrees performance of a contract for land, not because of the real nature of the land, but because damages at law, which must be calculated upon the general money value of land, may not be a complete remedy to the purchaser, to whom the land may have a peculiar and special value. So a court of equity will not generally decree specific performance of a contract for the sale of stock or goods, not because of their personal nature, but because damages at law, calculated upon the market price of the stock or goods, are as complete a remedy to the purchaser as the delivery of the stock or goods contracted for; inasmuch as, with the damages, he may purchase the same quantity of the like stock or goods. In Taylor v. Neville (cited in Buxton v. Lister), specific performance was decreed of a contract for sale of 800 tons of iron, to be delivered and paid for in a certain number of years, and by instalments; and the reason given by Lord Hardwicke is that such sort of contracts differ from those that are immediately to be executed. And they do differ in this respect, that the profit upon the contract having to depend upon future events, cannot be correctly estimated in damages, where the calculation must proceed upon conjecture. In such a case to compel a party to accept damages for the non-performance of his contract is to compel him to sell the actual profit which may arise from it at a conjectural price." So, likewise, where the breach of the contract consists in doing that which the party has undertaken not to do, if the breach of the contract be such as to occasion irreparable mischief, or such as cannot be compensated by damages, a court of equity will prevent it by an injunction.

But, leaving out of our consideration these proceedings in equity, we must now bear in mind that the legal operation of a contract is, that the party who undertakes has a right of action, in case of its not being performed, to recover the debt or damages. The debt or damages to which he is thus entitled constitute a chose in action. The term chose in action is one of frequent occurrence. When a person has incurred a legal liability, upon which damages are recoverable, whether the claim be founded on a contract or a tort, that which is to the one party a liability, is to the other a chose in action. It is a claim made by the one party, to be satisfied by the other. But when goods belonging to one person are wrongfully in the possession of another, even though the other, in order to regain them, may be driven to an action, yet these goods do not constitute a chose in action. The confusion in which this subject is involved appears in no small degree occasioned by the incorrect expression of Blackstone and other text writers. Things are represented as being divided into things in possession, and things in action. If this division were correct, it would follow that things of which you demand possession, and of which you have therefore not possession, must necessarily be in action. Now property which is yours, and which you demand possession of, is not a chose in action. Therefore that division appears to be incorrect. The following appears to me to be the more correct distinction. A chose in action is a CLAIM, and as such it is distinguished from property. When a man wrongfully detains my goods, those goods are still my property, and therefore do not constitute a chose in action. When a man has contracted to supply me with goods, those goods are not my property; but if he fails to supply them, I have a claim to compensation: that claim is a chose in action. The great distinction between a thing in which you have a property and a chose in action—between that which is yours, and that to which you have a claim, is, that the thing in which you have a property, and which is yours, you can transfer to another; but a chose in action cannot, by the strict rules of common law, be assigned or conveyed over to another. The reason why a chose in action cannot be assigned over to another is, that "it was thought a great encouragement to litigiousness if a man were allowed to make over to a stranger his right of going to law." (2 Black. Com. 442.) To this rule the King is an exception, and other exceptions are in the cases of bills of exchange and other mercantile securities. In bills of exchange, the claim to the sum for which it is made may be transferred by one person to another by indorsement, or the delivery of the bill itself, as the case may be; and even with respect to other claims arising from contracts, our courts of equity will protect the assignment of a chose in action as well as things in which a property is actually vested. Still, in compliance with the ancient principle, the form of assigning a chose in action is in the nature of a declaration of trust, and an agreement to permit the assignee to make use of the name of the assignor in order to recover possession. And therefore, when, in common parlance, a debt or bond is said to be assigned over, it is to be sued at law, in the original creditor's name; the person to whom it is transferred being rather an agent or attorney than an assignee. Formerly a chose in action could not be taken in execution, but, by the Act for the Abolition of Arrest on Mesne Process (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), the sheriff's bailiff is authorized to take all securities for money, and apply them to the use of the creditor. It is said by Blackstone (2 Com. 397) that contracts are the only regular means to acquire a chose in action; and all property in action depends on contracts express or implied. Mr. Chitty (General Practice, 99) apprehends that the term chose in action includes also the right to recover damages for a tort; and the same view is adopted in 2 Kent's Commentaries, 351, where it is said that "things in action are personal rights not reduced to possession." He does not distinguish between things in possession and things in action, but he calls choses in action "rights." "Things in action," he says, "are personal rights, and reduced to possession, but recoverable by suit-at-law. Money due on a bond, damages for a breach of covenant, detention of chattels, or for torts, are included under this head." This appears to be a more correct view than that of Blackstone (2 Stephen Com. 74), though the point is of no great importance, as the class that arises from contracts is the only one on which questions are likely to arise in practice; at all events, it is the only one in which we are concerned in this course of lectures.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

An Abridgment of the Law of Nisi Prius. By WILLIAM SELWYN, of Lincoln's-Inn, Esq. one of her Majesty's Counsel, &c. Eleventh Edition, with Alterations and Additions. London, 1845. Stevens and Norton.

A BOOK that for so many years has received the almost undivided patronage of the Profession; which is acknowledged as an authority in the Courts; has passed through eleven editions, on each opportunity receiving improvement, addition, and correction, is not a subject for review. It is beyond the province of criticism, and only the easy and agreeable task devolves upon us of recording the fact of a new edition, as an event in the legal history of the year, and informing the Profession what are the changes and improvements apparent in its pages.

In the first place, all the decisions and statutes since the last edition have been imported into their proper places in this. All those portions of the work which were inconsistent with the existing law have been carefully expunged, save such only as were necessary for explanation.

The matter of the volumes has thus been unavoidably increased, but this has been effected without material enlargement of bulk, by means of an enlarged page and a careful economy of space. A list of abbreviations of the reporters cited has been added, and the general index has been rendered very much more copious.

We have not found leisure to test any of the references, but the preface is very emphatic in its assurances that much labour has been bestowed to secure accuracy in this important particular.

Some notion may be formed of the huge mass of learning gathered into these volumes, when we inform the reader that the table of cases cited occupies no less than 64 pages of double columns, or, at 124 cases in each page, a total of 7,936 cases abstracted and arranged in their appropriate places!

Many law-books are useful only to barristers; but this one is almost indispensable to the attorney also. The law of Nisi Prius is that upon which he is most frequently required both to advise and act; and it is important that he should have at hand a trustworthy guide to give him the latest and safest information.

Such Selwyn has ever been deemed; and this new edition will give it new claims upon the regards of the Profession.

Of course it is not a work that requires or permits of extract.

The Juryman's Guide. By Sir GEORGE STEPHEN. London, 1845. Knight and Co.

SIR GEORGE STEPHEN is an amusing writer, whatever the subject he treats, whether it be Adventures in Search of a Home, Adventures of an Attorney in Search of Practice, or a treatise on the office and duties of a juryman. The volume before us is in fact a clever, lively, half serious, half satirical essay on the famous "Trial by Jury," in-the course of which the author treats of all sorts of incidental matters suggested by his main subject; devoting a chapter to "The Judicial Mind," another to "The Jury-Box," and so forth. In the course of his labours, the author touches upon topics that might well deserve each one a volume of itself, instead of the compressed notice unavoidable in a little book like this. In the five chapters devoted to the subject of Damages, questions of the utmost moment are raised and decided with an off-hand promptitude which may serve well enough in a work addressed to the juryman, and intended to contain practical directions for his guidance, but which involve principles of vast moment, and on which no small difference of opinion would exist.

We regret that, in our crowded columns, we cannot give to his various suggestions and propositions the consideration they deserve; we can only, at this busy season, remark that these pages contain food for thought which might have appeared in a less humble form. The manner of the writing will recommend it to every reader, whether professional or otherwise; and though we see in it much from which we dissent, there is a great deal of observation in which we heartily concur. A few passages will exhibit the peculiarly lively and agreeable style of Sir George Stephen:—

THE JUDICIAL MIND.

What then is intended by the words "the judicial mind?"

The minds of judges are assuredly of the same description as the minds of ordinary people, though usually more acute and better informed. It must be confessed that instances have not been wanting, even since the days of Jefferies, when the ermine has been sullied by the open indulgence of passion. We have seen anger add its fierceness to the judicial eye; we have watched the ear-trumpet of political prejudice unconsciously insinuating itself below the judicial wig; we have observed the quivering of the judicial nerves under the rude assaults, scarcely cloaked by mock deference, of a forensic bully. Yet more frequently, and certainly with far more sympathy, have we detected judicial impatience and judicial indignation, when irritated by the sophistries of unscrupulous counsel, or the reckless perjury of an audacious witness.

But making all just allowances, it must be owned that the facility with which our judges divest themselves of prejudice and passion, as soon as they invest their persons with the official robe, is most extraordinary. When Mathews, in his celebrated monologues some few years since, changed his costume as rapidly as his gloves, it was almost miraculous with what ease he at the same time changed voice, feature, and even sex, and with what truth and fidelity he sustained the new character which he thus assumed; but our judges effect the same metamorphosis every day, and with equal success. You may walk to Westminster Hall arm-in-arm with his lordship, and be at a loss ten minutes after to recognize on the bench the same individual with whom you perambulated the park; at all events, the recognition will not be mutual, should you then meet his eye in the witness-box. He has substituted for the friendly courtesy of domestic acquaintance the calm frigidity of indifference; the icy stoicism of the magistrate scarcely bends to acknowledge the customary salutations of the Bar. "Brother Wilde," and "Brother Talfourd," and "Mr. Attorney," are severally greeted with stately tranquillity, and return the greeting with the puppet bow of Punch in a raree-show. The dignified machine performs its part with the stiff accuracy of an automaton, varied only by the occasional inclination of the head to the right or left, to catch the hints or doubts whispered by the brother automatons with which it is surrounded. Sometimes, though rarely, a Sardonic grin will slightly elevate the angles of the mouth, if some very clever witticism is perpetrated, and now and then the voice is raised, and the brow is furrowed in a stern rebuke to a too forward or too reluctant witness. Human infirmity compels a retreat for ten minutes between one and two o'clock, to snatch a sandwich and a glass of sherry in the private room; but with this exception, his lordship sits unmoved and immoveable for seven hours at a stretch, passionless, nerveless, regardless as a marble statue. It was quite a relief to watch the late Lord Tenterden make an occasional parade up and down the floor of the judicial seats, like an officer on the quarter-deck of a man-of-war; it argued that the animation of humanity was only suspended, not actually extinguished, by the dignity of office.

These are only the outward and visible signs of the assumption of "the judicial mind;" they serve to shew that it has been taken with the wig out of the wig-box; but it is expedient to notice them, for they in some measure expound the quality itself. It may be defined as an abstraction of thought from all but official duty: nothing is permitted, even momentarily, to interfere with the peculiar occupation of the hour; the judicial mind knows nobody and nothing but the matter immediately presented to it, and even that must be duly presented in accordance with certain prescribed and accustomed forms. While thus occupied, the judge, though moulded in ordinary flesh and blood, common to himself and to inferior mortals, appears to enjoy a temporary extrication from such vulgar trammels; his essence is, at it were, resolved for a time into its elements: mind and mortality are disengaged from each other during the sitting of the court, so that personal identity becomes lost, and Lord Denman, the Chief Justice of England, in Westminster Hall, is not the Lord Denman of Portland-place. Could we suppose the Lord Denman of Portland-place to be examined as a witness, or arraigned as an offender before his counterpart lordship at Westminster Hall, the latter would not deign to acknowledge consanguinity or acquaintance. "Personal identity" is gone.

The judicial mind is absolutely governed by rules and precedent: it confesses to no influence, but the influence of recognized principles. It reduces all matters to avowed system: every thing is said and done by the square and the plumb. It allows no control of circumstances; no compulsion founded on peculiar necessity; no directing power that is not defined by the books: it labours under strict responsibility to authority, but only the authority of predecessors in the same seat.

The judicial mind is conscious of no weakness: it abjures the sensibilities of nature, not only as matters with which it has no connection, but which it cannot even comprehend. It is devoid of amiabilities; it declares itself callous and insensible; it has vitality, for it is observant, meditative, vigilant, and decisive; but, in other points, it is only the vitality of a toad in a block of marble. It is absorbed by the determined energy of self-will from all the cares, anxieties, feelings, and pursuits of life, in the single and important work that lies before it, and that work is performed in silent and inflexible obduracy of attention.

THE FORENSIC MIND.

The same temporary assumption of artificial character is generally exhibited by the bar, though in a less perfectly abstracted form; it here ought to be termed the forensic, rather than the judicial mind; but it is so similar in its general features, that we class them together. The advocate, as well as the judge, finds himself compelled to lay aside all feelings that are personal in their nature, except only so far as the accidents of business may chance to bring him into cases that involve passion or prejudices in strict accordance with his own. His politics may happen to square with his client's case; he may be pleading for redress of wrongs, similar to those which he has himself endured; he may be prosecuting an offender at whose hands he has himself sustained injury; he may be supporting a title under which his own property is held. In all these and many similar instances, instead of separating himself from his duty, it is natural and probable that he will identify himself with the client whose interests he is supporting; and so far as it stimulates his energy, and lends power to his oratory, he is not blameable for so doing. Yet even in such cases it is far more desirable to put a constraint on his natural inclination, and to affect an indifference which it may be very difficult to feel. The old saying, that every man who is his own lawyer has a fool for his client, is verified in some measure by any counsel who adopts his client's case as his own; it deprives him of the coolness and sedateness which are not less necessary then zeal to secure professional success; but it is yet more obvious that when a barrister is retained in a cause involving interests and feelings at variance with his own, he must totally abandon self before he can hope to do justice to his client. It is also highly probable that when his business becomes extensive, he will be engaged to-morrow in advocating views which it is equally his duty to oppose to-day. He may be required to unsay every word which he has said only a few hours previously; to question a verdict which he has just been most eloquent in obtaining; to contend that that is fair criticism which he has within an hour reprobated as a malicious libel; to palliate as venial infirmity the conduct which he has not long since denounced as heartless seduction. In the one case or the other, he must necessarily utter sentiments at variance with his own; hence his aim, no less than the judge's, is always to assume a character for the forum.

Sir George Stephen indignantly denounces a practice to which counsel too often lend themselves, and which we cite, hoping that it may be read by some at least of our rising advocates, and induce them to avoid a proceeding so tempting, but so unjust.

ABUSE THE ATTORNEY.

We may also advert under this head to another absurdity, of which we daily see instances; it is a favourite phrase with the counsel for defendants, "this is an attorney's action," and even the judges occasionally descend so far as to deal in similar insinuations to the prejudice of the plaintiff. If men in their exalted position can be thus overcome by vulgar prejudice and forget their official duty, we cannot wonder at the self-stultification which we too often see in jurymen. The issue to be tried is not whether the action is the attorney's, but whether according to the evidence the plaintiff has sustained damage from the defendant in the form alleged; if the devil himself were the attorney on the record, it would not alter the issue nor affect the damages; we think, therefore, that the counsel who attempts on this ground to divert the juryman from his duty, or the juuge who allows, without marked caution against its effect, such an appeal to be made to vulgar prejudice, is morally guilty of seducing the juryman to forget his duty.

"I will a true verdict give, according to the evidence, so help me God! and therefore, because the plaintiff is obviously too poor to be able to pay costs, and the attorney must necessarily look to my verdict, even for indemnity, and much more for profit, rather than he shall obtain sixpence towards either, I will allow this miserable pauper to be insulted, abused, and injured, without redress, and give him a farthing damages, to spite his attorney, and teach him never again to be such a villain as to lend his gratuitous aid to the wretched."

We rest our protest against this system on the high ground of respect to the juror's oath: if the evidence proves damage, a juryman is bound to find it, as he regards his welfare here or his salvation hereafter; the character of the attorney, whether good, bad, or indifferent, is no proof of his client's complaint being groundless; if it sways the juryman's decision, then the verdict is not according to the evidence, and the juryman is perjured: the contingency has happened on which he has invoked the wrath of the Almighty on himself: we are unwilling to abandon this high ground; but yet we may ask the juryman, what can be more cruel than thus to intimidate professional men from giving assistance to those who most require it? what can be more unjust than thus to stigmatize the characters of attorneys, who are not allowed to speak in their own vindication, or to meet a charge which is not in issue on the record? what can be more impolitic than thus to sanction the idea, that poverty may not claim protection from the law against the wanton injuries of wealth? We could mention a case not of very remote occurrence, in which a very eminent man in the profession was thus libelled by the most powerful journal in the world, having on the previous day been similarly abused in open court, for no other reason than that he had given his services to a hapless and injured foreigner, under circumstances so painfully severe that counsel acted with the same liberality, and advised and encouraged, and commended the action: but the jury was governed by this prejudice, and not by the evidence; one of them afterwards acknowledged it with remorse.

We could quote another case, where an attorney, equally eminent, was exposed to similar obloquy for bringing an action for a libel imputing swindling to an honourable man, but so poor that his family was all but destitue of the necessaries of life: the same vulgar trap was laid: "it was the attorney's action," and accordingly nominal damages only were given; one of the sapient jury afterwards admitted that he had been deceived by a similarity of names, and believed that the attorney was another member of the Profession, whom he knew to be a rascal!! With what reason can it be expected that either of these gentlemen will again come forward in the chivalrous enterprise of redressing the wrongs of those who are reduced by misfortune to poverty, and exposed by unmerited poverty to insult and outrage? Yet this is the natural result of such ungenerous conduct on the part of counsel and jurymen.

SALE OF ADVOWSONS.—On Friday a sale took place, by public auction, at the Auction-Mart, of the advowson and next presentation to the valuable vicarage of Melton Mowbray, with the hamlets of Burton Lazars, Sysomby, Welby, and Freeby, to each of which there is a church or chapel of ease. The population amounted to about 3,937 persons, and the extent of the parish, exclusive of the hamlets, was about 2,500 acres. The tithes had been commuted for a rent-charge of 515*l*. per annum, the surplice fees, Easter-offerings, &c., produced upwards of 40*l*., and with the vicarage-house and glebe, the gross income was estimated at 595*l*. per annum, which was subject to a deduction of 50*l*. for rates and taxes, and 100*l*., the stipend of one curate. The benefice is within the diocese of Peterborough, and the archdeaconry of Leicester, and the value of it in the King's Books was 16*l*. 18s. 9d. It was sold for 2,900*l*. The next presentation to the rectory of Idlecote, in the county of Warwick, was then offered for sale. The population amounted to about 82, the extent of the parish to about 1,500 acres. The benefice, which is within the diocese and archdeaconry of Worcester, and in the King's Books of the value of 13*l*. 6s. 8d., was estimated at 300*l*. per annum, the tithes having been commuted to that amount. This was sold for 1,475*l*. Another sale took place of the perpetual advowson and next presentation to the vicarage of Chidham, in Sussex. It contained 1,200 acres, and a population of about 320. The benefice, which is within the diocese of Chichester, was worth only 128*l*. per annum, the tithes paying 1s. 6d. an acre, but which have not been commuted. It was bought for 640*l*. Several other advowsons have, during the last few weeks, been privately sold and disposed of by public competition, the cause being attributed to the unfortunate differences in the church.

Public Sales.

[In future the results of such sales only as are advertised in the LAW TIMES will be published in this list, and reference will be given to the advertisements, it being found that, without the particulars, the results of sales are of no practical value. As sale by auction will in future be generally resorted to, auctioneers in town and country advertising in LAW TIMES are requested regularly to forward the results of the sales so advertised.]

The advowson and the next presentation to the vicarage of Chidham, in Sussex, producing an income of 128*l*. per annum; the tithes have not been commuted, but a large increase in the income of the vicar is expected when they are settled—640*l*.

SAUMAREZ v SAUMAREZ.

General residuary clause, carrying freehold estate—General devise of freehold not qualified by a codicil not so attested as to pass real estate.

This was a petition presented in the cause to obtain a declaration as to the construction of the will of the testator, Admiral Richard Saumarez, with respect to a house at Bath, which had been assumed at the hearing, and on a subsequent appeal, to have been leasehold, but which had since been discovered to be freehold.

By his will, the testator directed that his wife should have the offer of his house and premises at Bath for her life, with the books, furniture, linen, china, plate, &c. at the annual rent of 150*l.*; which rent he desired should be equally divided between his son Richard and his two daughters Carteret Gimingham and Martha De Havilland, and he directed that an inventory should be taken of the books, furniture, &c. and that, after his wife's decease, they should be appropriated to his said son and daughters; and, in case his wife should decline the offer of renting the house, then his executors were to be at liberty to dispose of it, and were to divide the produce of it between his said son and daughters, subject to the conditions thereinafter specified. The testator then directed that the sums which he had advanced to his daughters on their respective marriages should be brought into hotch-pot, and be accounted as part of their shares of his residuary property. He then made provisions for the payment of annuities for the benefit of two lunatic sons, and he declared that, in the event of their recovery, they were to have their shares of his property made equal to those of their brother Richard and their sisters. The will then proceeded, "And, as regards my son Richard, I give and bequeath to him the freehold land which I possess in Dorsetshire. And I direct that the residue of the property which I may leave at my death may be divided between him and his two sisters in equal proportions, the shares which they received as a marriage portion included, but subject to the following restrictions." He then went on to direct that his son Richard's share should be placed in the names of trustees, the interest paid to him for life, and after his death to be divided amongst his children. Should his son die without issue, the whole of the portion which may have been placed in trust for him was to devolve to his two sisters during their life, in equal proportions, and, after their death, to their children. By a subsequent codicil, Mrs. Gimingham's and Mrs. De Havilland's shares were expressly limited to their children after their respective deaths, but that codicil was not attested by two witnesses, the testator having died before the 1st of January, 1838. A bill had been filed for the administration of the testator's estate, in which Richard Saumarez and his children, and Mrs. De Havilland and Mrs. Gimingham were plaintiffs, when the Master of the Rolls declared that Richard Saumarez, the son, was entitled to an estate for his life only in the freehold land in Dorsetshire, and that, under the residuary clause, he and his two sisters were entitled to the reversion of that estate in fee-simple, in equal undivided third parts. Against that part of the decree Richard Saumarez appealed, and Lord Cottenham, C. after having directed a supplemental bill to be filed, in which Richard Saumarez and his children should be made defendants, held that the reversion in fee in the Dorsetshire estate passed by the residuary clause to Richard and the two daughters, and that it was subject to the same trusts and limitations as the rest of the property comprised in that clause

Since that decree was pronounced, it has been discovered that the house at Bath, which was assumed to be personal estate, was, in fact, freehold. The object of the present petition was to bring the new facts under the notice of the Court.

Koe and Rudall, for Mrs. De Havilland, contended that the fee-simple in the house at Bath passed under the residuary clause; and that the decree made by Lord Cottenham did not prejudice the question, which was still open to the decision of the Court

Purvis, for the children of Mrs Gimingham, contended that the shares of the testator's daughters were intended to be settled upon their children, as well as the share of his son. That was the fair construction of the whole will, taking the different parts together. The direction to sell the house was absolute, and, therefore, the produce was limited by the subsequent codicil, though not so attested as to pass real estate. There was no devise of the house, but only a power to the executors to sell it. That there was a clear indication throughout the will to settle the shares of all his children.

Bagshawe, for Mr. and Mrs. Gimingham.

Simpkinson, for the administrator of Mr. De Havilland

Montague, for the children of Richard Saumarez.

Romilly, for Richard Saumarez.

Faber, for the lunatic sons.

Koe, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I will read the will and give my decision. The Master of the Rolls came to no decision on this house as a freehold. The question is, whether, without the codicil, there is enough to qualify the general words of the will.

JUDGMENT.

March 8. The LORD CHANCELLOR.—When the decree was pronounced in this cause, it was assumed that the house at Bath, mentioned in the testator's will, was of leasehold tenure, and it was dealt with in the decree on the footing of its forming part of the personal estate. That has since been discovered to be an error, and that it is freehold, and belonged to the testator in fee. The trustees were directed by the will in certain events to sell the house at Bath. That was if the widow did not choose to occupy it. It was only in that event it was to be sold; but that not having occurred, there was no disposition of that house expressly directed by the will. On the construction of the residuary clause of the will, the decision of the Chancellor was, that the Dorsetshire estate passed to the testator's son, Richard Saumarez, and his daughters, Mrs. De Havilland and Mrs. Gimingham, each taking a third. According to the residuary clause, the remainder of his property was to be equally divided between his son Richard and his daughters Carteret and Martha. That is the expression in the residuary clause.

The question is, what estate Mrs. Gimingham and Mrs. De Havilland took in the freehold house at Bath? The son Richard and the two daughters are to take, under the residuary clause, all the residue of the property the testator might leave at his death. Then what is the residue but that which has not been disposed of, or of which the disposition fails? So far as relates to Richard, his share is afterwards limited to him for life, and to his children in remainder.

Nothing is said in that restriction as to the shares of Mrs. De Havilland and Mrs. Gimingham; possibly he may have meant it, but he has not said so. There is nothing to guide the discretion of the Court. It is possible he may have supposed he had limited their interests, because he had made a codicil in which he gave to Mrs. Gimingham and Mrs. De Havilland life estates with remainder to their children; but the terms of that codicil do not affect real estate. I am of opinion, therefore, that Mrs. De Havilland and Mrs. Gimingham took their shares of the freehold house at Bath in fee. Among the restrictions was this, which was not mentioned at the bar, on certain contingencies, his sons Paul and Frederick are to have their shares made equal to those of their brother Richard, and their sisters. That was, they were in an infirm state of mind, but they were to have their shares increased if they recovered, and the capital required for that purpose was to come out of the residue. Now they may recover, and then this contingency will be a charge upon the whole residue.

As to the shape of the record, the Chancellor decided rightly under the form in which it then stood; but the question as to the real estate was not decided, because Richard, who was the testator's heir-at-law, and his children, were plaintiffs in the suit; and the supplemental bill which was filed on the suggestion of that defect, relates only to the Dorsetshire estates. I can decide nothing as to the share of Richard, because he has not appealed; but I presume the settlement of his share will be the same as that of his share of the personal estate. The supplemental bill and answer may be amended in order to insert the house in Bath, and the decree may then be dated after such amendments. The contingency of the recovery may be provided for as has been done in respect of the personal estate.

Feb. 20 and 21.

ENGLISH v. JENKINS.

Inrolling decree taken pro confesso—Surprise—Caveat—Practice.

Where a decree has been taken pro confesso, and the plaintiff proceeds to inrol it with all the speed the practice of the court allows, and without making any statements to the defendant calculated to mislead, there is no ground for vacating the inrolment; nor is there any difference with respect to inrolment between decrees pro confesso and others.

But if representations have been made to induce the opposite party to believe that the decree would be inrolled, that would form a reason for vacating the caveat.

Notice of motion to set aside a decree pro confesso is not analogous to a petition of rehearing, and does not prevent the inrolment of the decree.

This motion was made to vacate the inrolment of a decree taken pro confesso upon two grounds. First, that the defendant had been surprised by the acts and misrepresentations of the plaintiff; and, secondly, that a step analogous to the presentment of a petition of appeal, and service of the order thereon, had been taken by the defendant before inrolment. It was alleged on the part of the defendant, that the inrolment of decrees taken pro confesso is altogether unusual, and that circumstance alone forms such a surprise on the defendant as would entitle him to have the inrolment vacated.

On the 29th of April, 1844, an order was made for setting down the cause to take a decree pro confesso, for want of an answer.

On the 30th of April (the next day), the defendant filed his answer. On the 22nd of May a motion was made to take the answer off the file, for irregularity, on the ground that the answer had been filed the day after the order for setting down the cause to be taken pro confesso. That motion was successful, and the order to take the answer off the file was made in the following June. That order was left to be entered on the 25th of June, and upon the same day the costs of the motion were paid.

On the 27th, according to the defendant's affidavits, the clerk to the plaintiff's solicitor stated to the defendant's solicitor, that he (the clerk) did not know whether the plaintiff would actually proceed to take the answer off the file; yet, towards the end of the same day, the answer was taken off the file. On the 28th of June the cause was in the paper to take the bill pro confesso, and such a decree was made, after the bill had been read, on the next day, the 29th of June.

On the 2nd of July the defendant gave notice of motion before the Vice-Chancellor of England, to discharge the decree pro confesso; but no caveat against its inrolment was entered, and on the 11th of July the decree pro confesso was inrolled.

Cooper and Jenkins, for the defendant in support of the motion, argued that a notice of motion to discharge the decree pro confesso was tantamount to a petition of rehearing, service of the order, and setting down the cause to be reheard. In Charman v. Charman (16 Ves. 115) a distinction is shewn to exist at law between setting aside a judgment obtained by default and on the merits; but that in this court there was no general rule, the decision of each case depending on its own circumstances. They cited also Kemp v. Squire (1 Ves. sen. 205-6); Anonymous case (1 Ves. sen. 326); Benson v. Vernon (3 Bro. P. C. 626); Henroff v. Fitzgerald (1 Drury & Warren, 72); Dearman v. Wych (4 Myl. & Craig. 550); Richards v. Wood (2 Myl. & K. 621). There is no instance of a decree pro confesso having been inrolled, and such an inrolment is so unusual, that it amounts to a surprise. That the Court had a discretionary power in such a case as this, in order to do substantial justice.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The defendant gives notice of motion as the only way of bringing the matter before the Court; and it is unusual to inrol decrees taken pro confesso. The question is, whether he has been in any way misled. Slight circumstances, in a case of this kind, would be sufficient to induce the Court to let him in.

Wakefield, for the plaintiff, read affidavits in contradiction of the statements of those filed by the defendant with reference to the conversations. The plaintiff declined all treaty, and stated he would act strictly.

Cooper, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There is no fact stated with reference to the conversation alleged to have misled the defendant which has not been contradicted on the other side. A party has a right to proceed straightforward in his course as quickly as the practice of the Court allows; but if he proceeds sharply, and does any thing to mislead the opposite party, that might be a ground for such an application as this. But the law serves the vigilant. The plaintiff is not bound to attend to any thing the defendant may say, provided, without deceiving, he has pursued only the practice of the Court. The circumstance that the plaintiff having been expeditious, if he has not been more so than the practice of the Court allows, forms no reason to set aside this inrolment. The defendant might have entered a caveat on the 2nd of July, when he gave his notice of motion. From the time of the decree he had an entire week to enter a caveat. Why did he not do so? The petition of appeal must be actually answered and served, as decided in the case of Barnes v. Wilson (1 Russ. & Myl. 486), in order to prevent the inrolment of the decree. There is no distinction between a decree pro confesso and other decrees, with respect to inrolment. The defendant had time, and might have entered a caveat. The plaintiff has been active and vigilant, but no more; but there is not proof that the defendant has been misled. A defendant, having been misled by a plaintiff, will be let in on that or other reasonable grounds; but here there has been nothing more than strict practice pursued. The motion must be refused with costs.

ST. VICTOR v. DEVEREUX.

Irregularity—Waiver—Delay—Practice—Order to sue in formâ pauperis—Special application—Demurrer—Interlocutory application—Costs.

Where the common order to sue in formâ pauperis has been obtained at the Rolls in a cause depending before the Vice-Chancellor, and the other party contends that such an order ought, under the circumstances of the cause, only to have been obtained on special application to the Vice-Chancellor, who had possession of the cause, and urges that as an irregularity, no application will be entertained to discharge the pauper order unless it is made as early as practicable after the party has notice of the irregularity.

Where an interlocutory application has been made in a cause, afterwards a demurrer being put in, the interlocutory application is directed to stand over until after the demurrer has been disposed of, it is no objection to a subsequent proceeding on the interlocutory application, that by the demurrer the cause is out of court.

Where a petition is presented in two causes, in one of which the petitioner has an order to sue in formâ pauperis, but not in the other, the costs of such petition, on its being dismissed, may be apportioned.

This was a motion to discharge an order of the Master of the Rolls, by which the common order to sue in formâ pauperis, which the plaintiff had obtained at the Rolls, the cause being before the Vice-Chancellor of England, was discharged for irregularity. The plaintiff filed his bill on the 6th of May, 1843, and obtained the usual pauper order; and on the 12th of July following he presented a petition in this cause, and in the cause of The Commissioners of Charitable Donations in Ireland v. Devereux, praying that the transfer of a large fund in court in the latter cause might be restrained. Subpœna and order were served on the 12th of July, 1843. The defendant then became fully aware of the case made by the plaintiff, and, if he had objected to the regularity of the order to sue in formâ pauperis, he might at once have raised the question. The point upon which the order was objected to as irregular was, that it was at all events a question apparent on the bill whether the plaintiff was suing in his own right or as an agent for others. The Charitable Commissioners, who were also defendants in this suit originally, demurred; they also presented a counter-petition. Nothing was done before Long Vacation except direction that the petition should stand over until the demurrer had been disposed of. On the 13th of November, 1843, the demurrer was allowed, and a month's time was given to the plaintiff to amend his bill, which was done on the 13th of December. On the 14th of December the petition was heard, and various other proceedings were had, which are not necessary to be stated for the purposes of the report of this appeal. In February 1844, the order now appealed from was made by the Master of the Rolls.

Cooper and Lee, for the plaintiff.—The defendant's solicitor stated, in his affidavit, that he became aware of the irregularity of the pauper order during the Long Vacation, but that he took no steps in consequence of the pending demurrer, because he believed that, after the opinion the Vice-Chancellor had expressed on the case, the plaintiff would not have amended his bill. If the defendant insists that the order to sue in formâ pauperis is irregular, he ought to have moved to discharge it in July.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The general rule is, that when you come to discharge an order for irregularity, you must come promptly.

Cooper.—The Master of the Rolls said, that there being a question whether the plaintiff was suing as a trustee for others or in his own right, there ought to have been a special application to sue for part of the fund in formâ pauperis. They referred to 11 Hen. 7, c. 12, as the foundation of the practice of suing as a pauper, which had been modified only in the instance of executors and administrators. They mentioned Paradise v. Sheppard (1 Dick, 126); Oldfield v. Cobbett (3 Beav. 432). In Dean's Book of Practice at the Rolls, Paradise v. Sheppard is fully reported. Hill v. Holland (24 March, 1745). The argument turned much on the effect of an instrument executed in France by persons natives of that country, authorizing the plaintiff to sue for the fund in question on their behalf, and giving him one-fourth of it for his labour, &c. in the matter. The plaintiff by his bill only sought to establish his own title to the one-fourth, which he alleged to be an absolute gift to him. He had made the other parties entitled to the fund as defendants. On this part of the question they also cited and mentioned 2 Archbold's Practice, 2nd ed. p. 518; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 42; 1 Smith's Ch. Pr.; Thompson v. Thompson (1 Turn. & Ven. 513); Robinson v. Milner (5 Beav. 49); Hooper v. Paver (6 Beav. 173).

Wakefield and Beavan, contrà, contended that the plaintiff had practised an imposition on the Court by obtaining the common order to sue in formâ pauperis, and that this was an inherent defect in the order, not a mere irregularity, and, therefore, not capable of being waived.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—According to the judgment of the Master of the Rolls, the order has been obtained in an irregular manner, but it is not suggested that any imposition was practised on the Court. The defendant's counsel contend for this proposition, that if an irregularity, and ever so long time has elapsed, yet no step taken to get rid of the irregular proceeding, and the opposite party is allowed to go on incurring expense, still the irregularity may be insisted on. The plaintiff might not have incurred the expense of a petition had the defendant applied promptly to discharge the order to sue in formâ pauperis. He might not have gone on with the cause. He is described in the petition as a pauper.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In this case the plaintiff filed his bill in May 1843, and at the same time, on the common affidavit, applied for and obtained the common order of the Master of the Rolls for leave to sue in formâ pauperis. The subpœna was served in July following, and at the same time a copy of the order to sue in formâ pauperis was also served. A petition was presented in this cause and in another cause, the object of which was to prevent the transfer of funds in court, standing to the credit of the other cause, and which formed the subject-matter in dispute in this cause, without notice to the plaintiff. The petition stood for hearing two or three times in the paper of the Vice-Chancellor, but nothing was done. The defendant then filed a demurrer, and the Vice-Chancellor ordered the petition to stand over until after the demurrer had been disposed of. The Long Vacation then intervened, and the demurrer was set down for argument in Michaelmas Term. It was argued on the 9th, 10th, and 11th of November; on the 13th of November the demurrer was allowed, and leave was given to the plaintiff to amend within a month. Immediately after the demurrer, the petition came on before the Vice-Chancellor; counsel appeared, and, after some discussion, it was arranged that the hearing of the petition should stand over until after the 15th of December, being the expiration of the month allowed for the plaintiff to amend his bill. The plaintiff did amend his bill immediately afterwards, and two demurrers were put in, one by the defendant Devereux, and one by the Commissioners for Charitable Donations in Ireland. These demurrers were [illegible] February. The demurrer having been allowed, the bill was out of court. Immediately afterwards, on the 15th of February, the defendant applied to the Master of the Rolls to discharge the order by which the plaintiff was allowed to sue in formâ pauperis, and, after argument, the order was held to be irregular, and was discharged by the Master of the Rolls for irregularity. The ground upon which the order was discharged was, that it had been obtained upon the common affidavit, whereas the suit was of such a nature that the order to sue in formâ pauperis should have been obtained on a special application, and that not to the Master of the Rolls, but to the Vice-Chancellor, before whom the cause was depending. That was the state of the proceedings. It is not necessary to consider whether the application ought to have been made to the Vice-Chancellor, or whether it should have been a special application at all, for it is clear the order of the Master of the Rolls cannot be sustained. The irregularity occurred in May 1843; it is admitted by the solicitor for the defendant that he knew of that irregularity early in that year, and the defendant should have applied to discharge the order on that ground in Michaelmas Term. But he made no such application until the 15th of December. It is a fixed rule in all cases of irregularity that any party knowing of the irregularity, and suffering the other party to proceed and incur expense, shall not afterwards take advantage of the irregularity. It is not reasonable that he should do so, for if the irregularity had been made an objection in the proper time, the subsequent proceedings were unnecessary. It was said the defendant's solicitor did not know of the irregularity until the Long Vacation, but in that case he should have made the application at the commencement of Michaelmas Term. Then it was also said that the defendant did not think the plaintiff would amend his bill; but the defendant had no right to speculate on that, and the plaintiff did in fact amend his bill. Again it was urged that Mr. Devereux took no active proceeding after his solicitor was aware of the irregularity; but counsel appeared in November, expenses were incurred, and order was made dismissing the petition, and the costs fell upon the plaintiff. If, early in November, the defendant had applied to discharge the order for leave to sue in formâ pauperis, the plaintiff would not have been put to the costs of that proceeding. I am of opinion that, on the ground of delay, the defendant had no right to discharge the order to sue in formâ pauperis for irregularity.

Then it was said that the suit was out of court, that the demurrer having been allowed, the plaintiff is not in a condition to proceed upon the petitions. It is true the cause was out of court, but before the demurrer had been allowed by which it was put out of court, the matter was depending; it is an interlocutory proceeding independent of the merits. There is no foundation for that objection. Another question is this: up to the period of the allowance of the demurrer, the plaintiff has had the benefit of the order to sue in formâ pauperis. What is to be done for the future? But if the plaintiff is not entitled to sue in formâ pauperis, it is not the object of the present motion to dispauper him, it is merely to discharge the order of the Master of the Rolls. The parties must consider whether they will make an application to dispauper the plaintiff, when the Court will know how to treat the case, and will consider whether, according to the case stated on the record, the plaintiff is entitled to sue in formâ pauperis. In his judgment the Master of the Rolls gave no opinion upon the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to sue in formâ pauperis, he only stated that, looking at the record, it raises a question whether the party had a right to decide for him by getting the common order to sue in formâ pauperis, or whether he should not have made a special application to the Vice-Chancellor, who was in possession of the cause, and would have decided upon the propriety of such an order.

I must discharge the order of the Master of the Rolls, the effect of which is to set up the former order. The plaintiff will be free from costs up to this time.

Another point insisted upon by Mr. Wakefield was, that in November, when the petition was dismissed, such petition being entitled in two causes, it made no difference to the plaintiff, because he must at all events have paid the costs in respect of the other cause, wherein there had been no pauper order. But there is no foundation for that objection, for if he was bound to pay the costs in respect of that cause in which he had not been admitted to sue in formâ pauperis, in that in which he had been so admitted there would have been no costs against him. But then Mr. Wakefield said that the costs could not be marshalled; that there could be no apportionment of the costs of the petition between the two causes. I have, therefore, applied to the Taxing Master, and I am informed that such costs could have been apportioned; that is a complete answer to that argument.

Lee, for the plaintiff, [illegible] costs of the appeal, [illegible] that had been done [illegible]

The Lord Chancellor.—I don't think in this case the plaintiff should be allowed any costs.

Stow v. Feel.

Practice—Notice of motion—Hearing of the same.

Although the Court will only hear opposed motions on seal-days, yet the notice of motion may be given for any day during the Term, provided the usual time is allowed to intervene between the service and hearing.

Dillon moved on behalf of the plaintiff for the usual order, upon affidavit of service, for the production of documents admitted by the answer to be in the defendant's possession. The notice of motion had been given for the previous day (Thursday), that being considered the usual motion-day in every week during the Term. Friday, however, happening to be the last day of Hilary Term, motions were not taken on the Thursday previous. The Vice-Chancellor made the order, stating that a notice of motion may be given for any day during Term, provided the usual two clear days were allowed to intervene; but the Courts, for the sake of convenience, will hear them only on seal-days. His Honour observed, moreover, that it was the practice in Lord Eldon's time for the Court to hear motions, although opposed, every day in Term after the other business of the Court had been gone through.

Amies v. Skillern.

Will—Personalty—Joint tenancy.

S. S. the testator, after certain bequests, gave to his executors all the residue of his personal estate, after paying his debts, &c. upon trust to invest the same in the 3 per cent. Consols, or at interest on real estates, and pay the annual dividends thereof amongst all the children of his brother for their respective lives. The testator then proceeds: "And after the deaths of my said brother's children, as they shall respectively die, I give the principal of their respective shares to their respective children; and if any of my said brother's children shall die without leaving any child, then I give their shares to their surviving brothers and sisters for life, and afterwards to their respective children." One of the brother's children, A. married and had three children: the plaintiff A. M. who survived her mother, and two others, who died in the life time of their mother; one an infant and unmarried, but the other married, leaving a daughter, one of the defendants. Held, that upon the decease of A. her surviving child, A. M. took the share of A., there being a joint tenancy between the respective children of the brother's children (the tenants for life) living at their respective deaths.

The testator, Stephen Skillern, by his will bearing date the 14th March, 1797, after making certain dispositions therein mentioned, gave and bequeathed as follows:—"I give my house, and all the rest and residue of my estate and effects, to my executors in trust to sell the same, and to collect my debts, and thereout in the first place to pay off the mortgage on my leasehold estate, and other my just debts, legacies, and funeral expenses, and to invest the clear surplus of my said residuary estate and effects in the Three per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities, or at interest on real security of freehold estates, as my executors shall think best, and pay the annual dividends and interest thereof, as the same shall be received, to and among all the children of my brother Isaac, for their respective lives; and the shares of daughters, to be for their separate uses, free from the debts and control of their husbands." The testator then proceeded in the words following, viz.:—"And after the deaths of my said brother's children, as they shall respectively die, I give the principal of their respective shares to their respective children; and if any of my said brother's children shall die without leaving any child, then I give their shares to their surviving brothers and sisters for life, and afterwards to their respective children, the same as their original shares of such residue are given." The testator then appointed his said brother Isaac, and George Blake and John W. Dent, executors of his will.

Isaac Skillern had five children living at the decease of his brother, the testator; four daughters and a son; but had one child born afterwards. Sarah, one of them, died several years since the testator's death a spinster, leaving her three sisters and brother her surviving. Ann, another of the daughters, married George Boyer, since deceased, by whom she had three children; namely, Ann Margaret Amies, who was the only one that survived her mother; a son, who died an infant of a year old; and a daughter, Frances Elizabeth, who married John Kempster, and died some time ago, in her mother's lifetime, leaving her said husband and one child, Frances Margaret Kempster, two of the defendants, her surviving. The bill was filed by William Amies and Ann Margaret, his wife, against the trustees, and John Kempster and Frances Margaret, the husband and daughter of Ann M. Amies's deceased sister, for the purpose of having it declared that the plaintiff, Ann Margaret Amies, upon the death of her mother Ann Boyer (one of the children of Isaac), became entitled to the entirety of one-fourth of the trust funds, as the only child of her mother living at her decease.

Rogers and Rolt, for the plaintiff, contended for a joint tenancy amongst the children of each respective child, and that, as there had been nothing done to sever the joint tenancy, the entire one-fourth, upon the events that had happened in Mrs. Boyer's family, survived to her daughter.

Caley Shadwell and Wood, for the defendant, John Kempster, contended that there was a tenancy in common between the children of Mrs. Boyer, and that the words "to the respective children" were contrary to the notion of a joint tenancy. Moreover, one of the children came into esse after the testator's decease, whereby one of the constituent unities necessary for a joint tenancy was wanting, for the estate became vested at different periods.(a) (Woodgate v. Unwin, 4 Sim. 129.)

L. Shadwell, for the defendant Frances Margaret, the daughter of Mrs. Kempster, submitted that although there was originally a joint tenancy between the children of Mrs. Boyer, yet the marriage of one of them with Kempster caused a severance of the tenancy and converted it into a tenancy in common. (Co. Litt. 185 b.; Bracebridge v. Cook, Plowd. 418.)

The Vice-Chancellor.—I am of opinion that the bequest is a mere chose in action, it being a pure estate of personalty after the payment of the testator's debts. That the words "to their respective children," following the sentence "the principal of their respective shares," only proved that the children of each of Isaac's children would, as classes, take as tenants in common; but there existed no evidence to prove that the children of any particular child of Isaac were, as among themselves, to take otherwise than as joint tenants. That the death of the mother was the period to ascertain who of her children took as joint tenants, none of them having a vested interest viz. in her share, till her decease. Therefore the surviving child of Ann Boyer, who is the plaintiff, takes the whole of her share. Decreed accordingly.

Barry v. Disney.

Pension, assignment of—Injunction.

F. C. had assigned a pension to Sir W. R. to secure the payment of an annuity which the former had sold him. Upon the decease of Sir W. R. his executors applied to have the pension appropriated to pay the arrears. Held, that the pension was assignable.

This was a motion on the part of the executors of the late Sir W. Rawlins for an injunction to restrain the defendant, James Cathron Disney, from receiving the quarterly payments of a pension of 187*l.* per annum, which had been granted to him in the year 1817 as a compensation, in consequence of the Transport Office, in which he held the situation of clerk, being abolished. Disney had made an assignment of this pension to Sir W. Rawlins, for the purpose of securing to him the payment of an annuity of 140*l.* which the defendant had sold him. This annuity had fallen into arrear and ceased to be paid ever since the year 1837, and Sir W. Rawlins dying in 1839, his executors applied to have the pension set apart to pay the arrears, and to prevent the defendant from receiving the quarterly payments.

James Parker appeared in support of the motion.

Shebbeare for the defendant, opposed the application, on the ground that the pension was not assignable, and that the Attorney and Solicitor-General had given their opinion to that effect. Moreover, that the pension itself, forming only one out of several other securities of a different character that had been given by Disney to the testator, the pension could not be appropriated until it was ascertained that all the rest had fallen short of satisfying the claim (of this, however, there was no evidence), and that therefore the Court could not grant the present application.

His Honour the Vice Chancellor stated that he saw no reason why the pension should not be assignable, and gave the usual direction for the injunction to issue.

ROLLS COURT.

Friday, Feb. 21.

Greenwood v. Churchill.

Under conditions of sale to pay the purchase-money into court at a fixed time, and that if, from any cause whatever, it should not be paid at that time, the purchaser should thenceforth pay interest thereon, at 5l. per cent. the latter condition must be complied with, though neither at the time of sale nor for long after was there any thing like a title shewn, and though the abstract was not delivered at the time, and the best part of it not till long after.

This was an application to obtain payment into court within a month of 11,785*l.* with interest thereon from the 11th of October, 1839, at 5*l.* per cent.

Samuel Churchill was seised of certain estates at Deddington, in Oxfordshire, which were greatly incumbered, and he conveyed to his brother Benjamin, to sell and pay all the debts, amongst others, that of Mrs. Greenwood. An order for sale having been made in the cause, the premises were put up to auction, in lots, at Banbury, on the 8th of June, 1839, under certain particulars and very stringent conditions of sale; amongst others, "that the purchaser should, on or before the 9th of November, 1839, pay his purchase-money and the amount of any valuations into the bank to the credit of the cause, and should be entitled to the rents and profits of the lot purchased, from the 11th of October preceding; but if, from any cause whatever, the purchase-money and valuations should not be paid by the time stipulated, the purchaser should thenceforth pay interest thereon at 5 per cent." There was also a provision for the valuation of timber, and delivery of abstract in twenty-one days from the day of sale. Objections to be delivered in sixty days or to be precluded. On lots of less than 200*l.* value, vendors to give only thirty years' title; and they were not to identify lands in respect of which allotments had been made; and they were to produce no evidence or title to inclosures prior to the award of the Commissioners, except to a certain portion therein specified. William Cotton Risley became the purchaser of lots 1, 2, 3, 9, and 10, at the sum of 11,785*l.* in all. He was in possession of two of the lots at the time of the sale, a third was unimportant, and the other two he took possession of after the sale, and exercised rights of ownership therein pending the investigation of title. A long discussion arose as to the title, and much time and expense were bestowed upon the matter. No abstract was delivered at the time stipulated, nor was there any thing that could be called a useful document produced till full a year after; and at the end of two years and a half even the abstract was unsatisfactory. Ultimately Mr. Risley consented to accept the title, though still unmarketable; but he objected to pay the interest on the purchase-money, as stipulated, under the circumstances; and this was a motion to compel him.

Hodgson (with him Cole).—The purchaser ought to shew that he is not bound to pay interest notwithstanding the stipulation. Whatever is a bargain actually entered into, the Court will leave to its own operation, and will not inquire into its prudence. (Esdaile v. Stephenson, 1 Sim. & St. 122.) Now the stipulation here was to pay 5*l.* per cent. and the purchaser knew what he was about, and the state of the title in 1839. But the purchaser entered into possession, and exercised rights of ownership, cutting down timber, altering the surface, &c.; he is therefore barred now from objecting. As to the allotments, they are a good commencement of title. (Cassamajor v. Strode, 5 Sim. 87; 2 Myl. & K. 706; Phillips v. Maile, 7 Bingh. 133.)

Turner (with him Stinton), for Lord Carrington, an incumbrancer.—The purchaser cannot retain possession and receipt of rents and profits, and also the purchase-money. He came into possession of two lots after the sale and under the contract; he therefore adopted the contract, and cannot resist paying in the purchase-money as demanded. (Cutler v. Simons, 2 Mer. 103.)

Kindersley (with him Chandless), for the purchaser.—The purchaser does not refuse to pay the money into court; but we ask that it shall be in two months instead of one. The question is, whether he is entitled to pay interest. In Esdaile v. Stephenson, the money was paid in with interest, but in all the cases where interest has been paid, the vendor has had a title of some kind; but here the vendor had not a scrap of paper to shew, nor a single conception of a title, or how it could be made out. The whole foundation of the claim fails, for there was not a particle of abstract or a notion of title to begin with. [The Master of the Rolls.—Suppose that to be so, and that the particular obstructions thereby caused were the occasion of the delay, is not that comprehended within the particular stipulation, "If for any cause whatever?"] Yes, but he did not shew title to any thing.

The Master of the Rolls (after stating the facts).—The purchaser objects to paying the interest of his purchase-money, because at the time of the sale the vendor was unable to make a title, and was even ignorant of it altogether. It is unnecessary to say that the vendor ought not to proceed to a sale without looking to his title, and seeing that he is able to make one; but suppose the vendor to have failed in this, the question is, whether such failure is a reason for altering the terms of the contract; and I think it is not. There it is, and the parties must abide by it. The purchaser has been put to expense by the vendor, and it is, no doubt, hard upon him; but that is a question of compensation, not a reason for a variation of the contract, which the purchaser seems to claim. Though he has reason to complain, he had an opportunity of applying to the Court to relieve him, and means would have been used to do so. Nothing has been said of costs, nor is it in the notice of motion. The purchaser may apply to get his expenses paid out of the money in court. No costs of this application, but let them be costs in the cause, without prejudice to the payment of the costs and expenses occasioned by the investigation of the title.

(a) Although there are four circumstances necessary to constitute a joint tenancy—1, unity of interest, 2, unity of title, 3, unity of time, and 4, unity of possession (2 Blac. 183), yet Lord Coke states several exceptions to the rule that an estate must vest at one and the same time to create an estate in joint tenancy. (Vide Co. Litt. 188 a. Har. and But.)

PLOMER v. M'DONNELL.

Practice—5th General Order of April 1828—Exceptions referred—Time.

This was a motion in this cause, which was in the court of the Vice-Chancellor of England, to discharge an order referring to the Master exceptions to the answer for irregularity. The exceptions were filed on the 17th of January last, and the order for referring them was obtained on the 27th of January, but not served till the 1st of February.

Rogers, for the motion, contended that the order was too late, not being served till the 15th day after the exceptions were taken, and being therefore too late, according to the 5 h General Order of April 1828. The reference ou ht to have been on the 14th day, and not on the 15th. (Taylor v. Harrison, 1 Myl. & Cr. 874; Dalton v. Hayter, 4 Law T. 211.) And the order, must not only be obtained, but served, to complete the reference. The order is therefore irregular, and ought to be discharged.

Elderton, contrà.—My friend is quite wrong. The application is to discharge an order which we had obtained in time. The serving of it is a different question. The cases on the subject are Peace v. Hodgson (7 Sim. 347); Attorney-General v. Clark (1 Myl. & Cr. 367); and Hunter v. Capron (5 Beav. 93). This is an application to discharge, not for irregularity in the order but the true ground is, it is not effective, because of its not being served in time. As to Taylor v. Harrison, I fall back and say, the application to discharge the order is irregular, the order being quite regularly obtained.

Rogers, in reply. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—This is a cause attached to the Vice-Chancellor of England's Court; and it is only on an irregularity in the order itse f that I can act. Point out the irregularity. It is true the order is not served in time, but it was not irregularly obtained. Did not the order and service together in Taylor v. Harrison make what the General Order calls a reference to the Master?] No doubt it applies to orders irregularly obtained. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—To nothing else? Was this irregularly obtained?] Why, in the result, yes; i. e. it was not regularly prosecuted. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The whole order consists of two parts, the obtaining and the serving; I have only to deal with the obtaining of the order here. Now the officer is not wrong, the order being quite regular. It is only the service that is irregular, with which I have nothing to do, but only the Vice-Chancellor.] I am afraid it is so.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—There is no reference; the answer is sufficient, and the exceptions are abandoned.

Elderton asked for his costs, which were given him.

Monday, Feb. 24.

Re PERKINS and GEPP.

It is irregular for one of two executors who is beneficially interested to obtain an order for taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs, for conveyancing, &c. done for the executors, as between the solicitor and the executor, and not as between him and the executors.

This was a motion to discharge an order for taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs, which had been delivered to two executors; and one of them had obtained the order as between herself (being beneficially interested in the testator's estate) and the solicitor.

Rogers, for the motion.

Elderton, contrà.—It is not the accurate mode of proceeding, but the submission is such as to induce the Court to grant the taxation notwithstanding. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—She comes here on an allegation that she is the person between whom and the solicitor the bill is to be taxed, whereas there are two persons.] Yes, but they were irregular too. They first gave notice to vary the order, and then to discharge it. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—They thought better of it.] We have no right to be put to expense in that way.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Discharge the order with costs on the one side and drop the notice to vary, with costs, on the other side. Thus the loss will be mutual.

TILY v. SMITH.

Will—Construction.

A testator gave to trustees real and personal property upon trust, "that, as soon as convenient after his decease, they should pay all his just debts and expenses; secondly, it was his will his said trustees should permit and suffer his wife to hold one of his houses, with the garden, for her use, to bring up their children, viz. E. and M. and at their arriving at the age of twenty-one years, then it was his will all his estates, real and personal, should be sold and converted into money, and the proceeds to be equally divided between his said wife and as many children as she might have at his decease; thirdly, it was his will that the public-house be let as soon after his decease as possible, and all rents arising from his estates to be paid to his wife, for the bringing up and support of his wife and children. E. died in the testator's lifetime a minor and unmarried. M. died a minor and unmarried, in the lifetime of the widow, who married again.

Held, that the whole estate of the testator passed by his will, and that M. did not take any real estate descendible, or capable upon her dying intestate of devolving, from her to her heirs.

Joseph Dunn, the testator in this cause, by his will, dated the 25th of August, 1811, gave unto trustees, "in trust for the purposes herein mentioned, that is to say, that when it shall please Divine Providence to remove me from works of rewards, they shall take to and possess themselves of all my premises of Lower Esson, and elsewhere, with all moneys, household furniture, and stock I may be possessed of at my decease, for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, that as soon as convenient after my decease, that they shall pay all my just debts and expenses; secondly, it is my will my said trusts shall permit and suffer my wife to hold one of my houses with the garden for her use, to bring up our children, viz. Elizabeth and Mary, and at their arriving to the age of twenty-one years, then it is my will all my estates, real and personal, to be sold and converted into money, and the proceeds to be equally divided between my said wife and as many children as she may have at my decease; thirdly, it is my will that the public-house be let as soon after my decease as possible, and all rents arising from my estates to be paid to my wife, for the bringing up and support of my wife and children; and her receipts shall be a sufficient discharge to my said trusts." The testator died in October, 1811, leaving his widow and one child only, Mary, surviving; and the widow took out letters of administration with the will annexed, on the 9th of March, 1812, and entered into possession of the real estate, in which possession she continued until her death.

Mary Dunn, the daughter, died in September 1824, under 21, intestate and unmarried, and her mother, then the wife of Thomas Smith, obtained letters of administration of her effects on the 29th of March, 1825. In November 1842 Mary Smith died, and her husband, Thomas Smith, obtained letters of administration of her effects, and also of the effects unadministered of Mary Dunn, the daughter. No part of the real estate of the testator having been sold or disposed of, Thomas Smith entered into possession of it, and this bill was filed by the heir-at-law of Joseph Dunn and of his daughter, Mary Dunn, alleging a title to the real estates devised by the will. To this bill the defendant Smith demurred for want of equity.

Saturday, Nov. 9.

The VICE CHANCELLOR, after stating the circumstances, and reading the will, said that the question which had arisen was, whether the plaintiff, as the heiress of the testator or of his surviving daughter, had, by descent, any interest, legal or equitable, in the real estate devised by the will. The will was untechnically and illiterately worded, and not very clearly expressed, and it might well be supposed to have been made by the testator without professional assistance. It exhibited, however, with sufficient certainty an intention to give his whole property in some manner for the absolute benefit of his wife and such of his children as should be living at his death. His Honour thought that effect might and ought to be given to that intention, and that the wife and the surviving daughter should therefore be considered to have taken in some manner the entire beneficial interest in his real and personal estate. This, however, they would in some manner have done if Dunn had died intestate; but the particular question for decision here is, whether the real estate was so devised as to prevent the daughter from taking in it, by gift or descent, any interest beyond the period of her life, except an interest transmissible, and to be treated as personal estate. This question would render it necessary to determine the meaning and effect of the direction to sell and convert into money. Were the phrase "at their arriving to the age of 21 years" to be construed literally, it would not apply to the case of one only of several children attaining that age. The testator might have had children born after the date of his will, though it happened that he had not. The will did not exclude any such children, the words being, "to be equally divided between my said wife and as many children as she may have at my decease." The will did not require the attainment of any age as a qualification for taking under this gift. Had the testator left several daughters and a son, who all died minors, leaving issue, could it have been maintained that the son should exclude the daughters from participation in the corpus of th. realty? It was consistent with authority and principle to hold that if the testator, in using the words "at their arriving to the age of twenty-one years," meant more or less than what would have been correctly expressed by the words "subject thereto;" he meant to say when there shall not be a child alive under twenty-one; the clause that he calls the third being to be read substantially as if it had preceded or formed part of the commencement of the second clause.

His HONOUR said that, in his opinion, the testator shewed himself to have intended that in the event which happened, of his wife and also one or both of his daughters surviving him, there should be positively and absolutely at some time a sale of the real estate. That time, his Honour thought, arrived at or before the widow's death, and if the surviving daughter had any interest in the rents that accrued between her own decease and the decease of her mother, it was not, in his Honour's opinion, an interest capable of devolution from the daughter, through her intestacy, upon her heir. He must hold, therefore, that the daughter did not take by devise or descent from the testator, legally or equitably, any descendible real estate, and that therefore her heiress-at-law could not in that character have any claim.

Demurrer allowed without costs.

HOLCOMBE v. TROTTON.

Practice—Revivor.

An order upon the death of the plaintiffs in a suit, made on the motion of a defendant, that the surviving plaintiff should, within fourteen days after service of the order, cause the suit to be revived, or in default thereof that the bill should be dismissed for want of prosecution, with costs, is not irregular, though a better form is, that the surviving plaintiff within fourteen days file a bill of revivor, &c.

The original bill in this suit was filed in the Court of Exchequer in April 1830 by three co-plaintiffs. Two of these plaintiffs having died, an order was made on the 10th Feb. 1845, at the instance of one of the defendants, that the surviving plaintiff should, within fourteen days after the service of the order, cause the suit to be revived, or in default thereof that the plaintiff's bill should stand dismissed for want of prosecution, with costs. This order was made in the absence of the plaintiff, upon an affidavit of service of notice upon him.

Wigram and Cole, on behalf of the plaintiff, now moved to have this order discharged for irregularity; they cited Chowick v. Dimes (3 Bea. 290).

G. L. Russell, for the defendant, contended that the order was regular, and according to the established form. (Bernal v. Duke of Wellington, 6 Sim. 461; and Chichester v. Hunter, 3 Bea. 491.)

Wigram, in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I cannot say that this order is plainly irregular, because orders have been, and still are, drawn in this form, though they are also drawn in another form, which I think better. This order is not without precedent, and the notice of motion gave the parties notice of the order which would be asked for; the costs of this motion must, therefore, be paid by the plaintiff.

COOPER v. PALMER.

Will—Construction—"Surviving," when to be construed "other."

It is incumbent on those who contend that the word "surviving" is to be construed "other," to point out words in the context which authorize such a construction.

This suit, which was an amicable one, was instituted to obtain the opinion of the Court upon the construction of the will of Joseph Palmer, dated in July 1803. By this will the testator, after the death of his widow, gave shares of his property to his children, but if they should die, then the share of him or her so dying was to be equally divided between his surviving children. The question which had arisen was, whether the words "surviving children" were to be taken in their natural sense, or whether they were to be taken as meaning "other children," so as to vest shares in children dying before the period of division.

Spence, Lewin, Cooper, Craig, Russell, K. Parker and Shapter, were for the several parties.

Numerous cases were cited; they are all collected in Mr. Jarman's Treatise on Wills, vol. [illegible], p. [illegible], et seq. and need not be enumerated here.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that it was incumbent upon those who contended that the expression

"surviving children," when it occurs in a will, is to be construed "other children," and not according to its literal meaning, to point out words in the context which would authorize the Court to adopt such a construction. In the present case he could not find such words, and though he feared he was defeating the testator's intention, he must hold that none but surviving children could take.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

Saturday, March 8.
HUNTER v. DANIELL.
Champerty—Solicitors.

Demurrer to a bill for the specific performance of an agreement on the ground of champerty, it appearing that the plaintiff, being the solicitor in a cause, had agreed for the purchase of the defendant's rights and interests therein. Held, that the demurrer be overruled, as a party having an interest in a suit may lawfully assist in conducting its defence.

His HONOUR gave judgment in this cause, which was a suit instituted for the performance of an agreement for the purchase of the interest of the defendants in certain property, the subject of another suit, which arose out of the following circumstances. In 1816 William Woodruffe, being in possession of the property, and claiming therein an estate of inheritance in fee-simple, effected a mortgage for a large sum of money. Upon his decease, his brother took possession, and repudiated the mortgage, claiming under a settlement, which he contended gave him a title paramount to that of his brother, the mortgagor. Certain proceedings at law were the result of this position, and in 1837 a bill was filed to establish such title. Subsequently, in 1841 (pendente lite), an agreement was entered into between Hunter, the plaintiff, a solicitor of the court: and the defendants, for the purchase of their interest under the mortgage security, by which agreement the plaintiff was, as a consideration for the purchase, to pay certain sums of money, at various times, to the defendants, also to purchase them a government annuity, and to indemnify them in respect of the costs of past and future proceedings, both at law and in equity. To the plaintiff's bill for a specific performance of this agreement the defendants demurred, on the ground (among other things) that such agreement was void, as being of the nature of a champerty transaction. His Honour said that, according to the case of Findon v. Parker (11 Mee. & Wels. 675), it was now established law that a party having, or believing that he had, an interest in the litigation, might lawfully assist in the prosecution or defence of the action or suit. This was the plaintiff's position, and therefore he was of opinion that the transaction in question was free from the imputation of champerty, and that the demurrer must be overruled.

Ex parte YOUNG, re WORTH.
Bankrupt—Costs.

Upon a petition by an assignee for leave to bid at the sale of property under the fiat, the bankrupt, who had been served with the petition, was allowed his costs of appearance.

This was an application by an assignee for leave to bid at the sale of property under the fiat.

Bichner, for the petitioner, desired that the course pursued in the case of Ex parte Hollyman, re Stokes (see antè, vol. 2, p. 405) should be adopted here.

Smythe appeared for the bankrupt, and consented, and asked for his costs. The bankrupt's appearance was necessary on such a petition as this. (Ex parte Page, 4 Mad. 459.)

The CHIEF JUDGE.—You must have your costs; the petitioner must pay them. Without deciding the service to be right, I assume it to be right.

Ex parte MILLER, re MILLER.
1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, sections 46 and 55—Official assignee.

Where no choice of assignees has been made, the sums of 20l. and 10l. are not payable under the above sections.

Adjourned meetings for the choice of assignees are within the exceptions of the 55th section.

Upon the annulling a fiat, upon the petition of the bankrupt, with the consent of the creditors, before a choice of assignees had been made, the official assignee held entitled to remuneration for his services.

This was a petition by the bankrupt to annul the fiat, with the consent of all the creditors. There had been no choice of assignees, and the only difficulty which occurred was in consequence of the sums of 20l. and 10l. not having been paid to the official assignee as required by the 46th and 55th sections of the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56; and also on account of the claim of 2l. made by the official assignee under the 55th section, for two extra meetings. The first meeting under the fiat was on the 31st of January, when the adjudication was made; there was afterwards a meeting for the choice of assignees on the 18th of February, which was adjourned to the 26th of February, but no choice was made.

Bird, for the petitioner.

Rolt, for the official assignee, argued that the meetings excepted from the operation of the 55th section were those meetings only at which the choice of assignees was actually made. In Ex parte Diamond there was no estate, but here there was estate.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—I am of opinion that the 20l. does not, and the 10l. does not become due until the choice of assignees is made in the usual way, and consequently they have not become payable in this case. I am of opinion that the adjourned meeting for the choice of assignees is within the one pound clause as to the meeting for the choice of assignees. I think, therefore, that the 32l. is not payable. It must be referred to the commissioner if the parties differ, to take an account of all proper expenses incurred by the official assignee under the fiat. It must also be referred to the commissioner to allow to the official assignee such, if any, sum as the commissioner shall think fit as a remuneration for his services, which I do under the impression that the 57th section remains part of the law of the land.

Ex parte NEWLANDS, re NEWLANDS.
7 & 8 Vict. c. 96—Court of Review—Jurisdiction.

A B, being in contempt of the Insolvent Debtors Court for disobedience to an order made by that Court, upon an application for his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Acts, petitioned the Court of Bankruptcy for his discharge under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, and obtained an interim order; but upon application for his final order, the commissioner, by an order stating the circumstances of the case, remanded him to his former custody. Held, upon petition to the Court of Review, that the Court had no jurisdiction, as a Court of Appeal, from the commissioner's order.

In this case, upon an application for the prisoner's discharge upon a writ of habeas corpus, the prisoner Newlands presented a petition to the Court of Review, praying the reversal of the order of remand of Mr. Commissioner Fane.

C. P. Cooper, for the petitioner, contended that the Court had jurisdiction in the case as a court of appeal from the commissioner. He cited several sections from the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. He also contended that the reason appearing upon the order for remand was insufficient.

Tripp, for the respondent, was not heard.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—It does not, I apprehend, follow of necessity, that upon a new jurisdiction, not in bankruptcy, being conferred on the commissioners, that is subject to any particular or any appeal. Whether a state of circumstances can be considered possible in which this Court would have jurisdiction, by way of appeal, in anything done by a commissioner under either of these Acts not in bankruptcy, I do not give any opinion, nor do I give any opinion whether the reason appearing on this order of Mr. Commissioner Fane is or is not valid and sufficient. I am of opinion that the matter of this order is not one which the Legislature has rendered it the duty of this Court to review.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Saturday, March 8.
(Before Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.)
Re —.
Expenses of witnesses.

The expenses of town witnesses summoned to prove an act of bankruptcy, but not examined, cannot be allowed.

In this case a question arose whether witnesses summoned to prove an act of bankruptcy were entitled to their expenses. One was an attorney, and the other an auctioneer, both residing in town, and both claimed their expenses for two days' attendance.

Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN was of opinion that the witnesses must be paid if their testimony was required.

The attorney to the fiat strenuously urged that they were bound to attend, and to give evidence.

The matter was referred to the taxing-master, who was of opinion that the parties were entitled to a guinea a day. They again came into court, and again the attorney resisted payment, as they were town witnesses. He produced a case decided before Lord Tenterden.

The attorney procured other witnesses, who made out an act of bankruptcy, and he did not require the assistance of the two persons summoned. He had previously declined to pay them, and stated his intention to appeal to the Court of Review.

At the termination of the business one of the parties, an auctioneer, applied to the Court. He wished to know whether he had no remedy against the person who had summoned him. He had been obliged to postpone a sale he had to-day, and had been put to great inconvenience.

Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN was of opinion that, as the parties had not been required to give evidence, they were not entitled to payment. They resided in town, and he was afraid that they had no remedy. If, however, they had been required to give evidence, he should have ordered payment to have been made in the first instance; but as their testimony had been dispensed with, he had no power to grant the application.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner STEVENSON.)
Friday, March 14.
Re WELLS.

If any one of an insolvent's debts, however small, has been incurred in the manner pointed out in 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 24, as a disqualification, the Court has no discretion, but must dismiss the petition.

This insolvent came up for his first hearing.

Higgins, solicitor, of Bath, opposed, and produced the record of an action, by which it appeared that a judgment had been recovered against the insolvent for an assault. This was one of the cases expressly provided for under the 24th sect. of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96.

Homes, for the insolvent, stated that the damages were very trifling; that he was prepared to prove that the plaintiff in the action richly deserved the chastisement he had received, which was the assault complained of; that this Court was not bound by the verdict of a jury in every case, but might go into the merits, and if the assault was justifiable, the Court would not preclude an honest insolvent from receiving the benefit of these Acts, merely because a jury had given 40s. damages against him.

His HONOUR.—The record is conclusive evidence that one of the debts in the insolvent's schedule was contracted by reason of a judgment in an action for an assault. This then is one of the cases expressly mentioned by the 24th section, where I am precluded from naming a day for the final order, o renewing the protection. The Court has no discretion in the matter, and the petition must be dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

Re DRURY.

Where an insolvent has been ordered to file an account ten days before the next hearing, and has neglected to file it until the morning of the sitting, opposing creditors are entitled to an adjournment, although the neglect originated, not with insolvent, but his attorney.

The insolvent came up for his adjourned first hearing.

Stone opposed, and stated that at the last sitting in this matter, the Court had ordered an account of all the insolvent's purchases since the 15th of September last, to be filed ten days at least before the present hearing. The insolvent had not complied with that order, but had only filed the account on the morning of the present hearing. He submitted that this was a contempt of the Court, for which the petition ought to be dismissed, or at all events, the case must be adjourned.

Homes, for the insolvent, said, the Court would not punish for an apparent contempt, without being satisfied that it was wilful. He then called the insolvent and examined him, when it appeared that he had furnished his attorney with the particulars of the required account three weeks ago, and believed that it had been filed in time, in obedience to the order.

The attorney was examined, when it appeared that he had directed his clerk to do what was necessary, and the clerk had called at the court with the account to file, but the usher was not in attendance.

Homes then submitted that the Court, under these circumstances, would not put the insolvent to the expense of an adjournment. The account required only contained one item, namely, an item of a purchase of thirty-six gallons of beer, and the creditors could ask any questions upon that now, as well as at an adjourned meeting.

Stone.—The insolvent is answerable for the neglect of his attorney. The account should have been filed in time for the creditors to have obtained a copy and inquired into its correctness. It makes no difference whether the account contains one or many items; the creditors may, on inquiry, be able to shew that there have been other purchases by the insolvent besides that which is mentioned in the account. We are not prepared with such evidence now, but we probably might have been, had the account been furnished in proper time.

His HONOUR.—The creditors are clearly entitled to time to examine into and test the accuracy of the account. The first hearing must be again adjourned for that purpose.

Adjourned accordingly.

PREROGATIVE COURT.

Wednesday, Feb. 26.

BIGGE v. BIGGE and OTHERS.

Will, presumptive revocation of.

A will was written upon very brittle paper. Testator had given instructions for a new will, but died before it could be executed. The former will was found in a box tied up with a draught of the new will, divided in the middle, but without any other indication of having been cancelled, the seal and signatures remaining.

Held, that these circumstances did not afford a sufficient presumption that the paper was torn by the deceased for the purpose of revoking it, but that the possibility and probability was, that it was occasioned by the wear and tear of a brittle paper.

This was a question arising as to the will of Mr. John Thomas Bigge, formerly one of the commissioners of colonial inquiry, and subsequently chief justice of Trinidad, in consequence of its plight and condition when discovered, which raised a doubt, under the circumstances, whether it was not revoked whereby he would have been dead intestate, in respect to considerable property, amounting to 40,000*l.* in the province of Canterbury, 6,000*l.* in that of York, besides a freehold estate. It appeared that the deceased left a brother, Mr. Charles William Bigge, a sister, Mrs. Sawbridge, wife of Mr. Henry B. Sawbridge, of the English bar, and four children of a deceased brother, the parties who would be entitled in distribution of the personal estate in case of intestacy. He had, at various times, made different wills, being in the language of these courts, a "will-maker;" but he had adhered to that of November 1840 (the will in question), till July 1843, when he suggested to his solicitor, Mr. Plumtre, of the Temple, that he desired to make certain alterations therein, and gave him various instructions for a new will. Under the will of 1840, the surviving brother of the deceased (Mr. Charles Bigge) took no benefit except the cancellation of certain bonds or debts due by him to the deceased, the amount of which did not appear. The residue of the property, amounting to about 20,000*l.* was given by that will to Mrs. Sawbridge absolutely, but without being secured to her separate use. The chief alteration related to this residue, which by the new will was to be secured to the sole use of Mrs. Sawbridge for her life only. An additional executor (Mr. Arthur Bigge, a nephew of the deceased) was likewise appointed, with a legacy of 500*l.* The deceased had various communications with Mr. Plumtre, personally and by letter, on the subject of this new will, from July 1843, to the 16th of December in that year, when he came up from Dover, where he resided, and conferred with him at his office, and most, but not all, of the blanks were then filled up. Before this was completed, and the will could be executed, the deceased was taken ill on the 20th of December, and died suddenly on the 22nd. Search was made for a will for some time without effect, and an administration was taken out. At length, that of 1840 was found in a red box (one of the official boxes), together with the draught of the new will. The former, however, was divided in the middle, but without any other indication of having been cancelled, the seal and signatures remaining. The result of an intestacy would be that the personal property would go in three parts, of about 15,000*l.* each, of which the brother and sister would take one each, and the other would be divided amongst the four children of the deceased brother, and the surviving brother would take the real estate. The questions were, whether the paper had been torn by the deceased, and if so, whether the act had been done animo revocandi.

Dr. Addams and Dr. Twiss, in support of the will propounded, argued that before the question of presumptive revocation arose, there must be proved to have been a tearing of the will; whereas, here it was evident, upon the face of the instrument, that the paper, which was of a brittle and glossy kind, had merely parted asunder by wear and frequent unfolding. There was a fold in the margin which had nearly separated. In the middle of the paper was another breakage at right angles with the other; whereas, if it had been torn, the rent would have been at an acute or obtuse angle. The deceased being a professional man, if he had intended to cancel his will, would not have left the act ambiguous; he would have torn off the seal, or erased the signature. There was nothing to raise the remotest presumption that he intended to remain intestate all the time between July and December 1843; on the contrary, there was an apparent anxiety on his part that he should not die without a will.

Dr. Phillimore and Dr. R. Phillimore, for the eldest brother, contended that it was clear from the correspondence between the deceased and Mr. Plumtre that he had abandoned the will of 1840, which was very materially departed from in the new will. Had the latter been of the same tenor as the former, the presumption that he adhered to that of 1840 provisionally might have had some weight. The wills, however, when analysed, were not the same, and the old will being found in the depositories of the deceased "torn," one of the modes of revocation specified in the statute, the Court must hold, with reference to all the circumstances, that it was done by the deceased, and with the intention of revoking it.

Sir H. JENNER FUST.—The question is, whether this paper was torn by the testator, or by some other person by his direction, with the intention of revoking it, and that intention must be proved by the act itself, or by extrinsic evidence. The Court, however, has no evidence whatever, but is left to conjecture from the circumstances of the case, the probability or improbability of the act. It is quite clear that the deceased intended to make a new will; but after all that was done, it is the paper itself, and the plight and condition in which it was found, that give rise to any question. Now, it is probable that the deceased had this paper frequently under his consideration, and looking at the kind of paper, which is brittle, and which will not bear much handling, and at the division, which occurs at the fold, I do not think it a natural presumption that the paper was torn by the deceased intentionally for the purpose of revoking it. I think it more probable that its condition was the result of wear and tear. The act is equivocal; there is nothing to shew that it was done by the deceased, and the possibility and probability is, that it was occasioned by wear and tear. I therefore revoke the administration granted on the supposition that the deceased had left no will, and pronounce for the validity of this paper.

Whitehurst, Q. C. for the defendant, objected to his so doing, though it was not easy to say what was the last ruling on the subject.

POLLOCK, C. B.—What I take to be the proper course is this; the witness may look at the previous writing as long as he pleases, for the purpose of refreshing his memory, and that even while he is in the witness-box, but he must put them away from him before he looks at the signature to be proved, and upon which he may then give an opinion. An immediate comparison is allowed to none but the jury, and even they can only institute it as between the signature in question and such documents as have been put in as evidence in the cause.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

Aylesbury, Thursday, March 14.

(Before Mr. Justice PATTESON.)

REG. v. STONNELL.

Certificate of previous conviction, form of.

A certificate of a previous conviction for felony is not admissible, unless it sets forth, not only the fact of the prisoner's conviction, but also the judgment of the Court thereon.

The prisoner having been convicted on the principal charge in an indictment, which further charged that he had been previously convicted of felony at a certain Quarter Sessions for the county, the certificate of the clerk of the peace was produced in support of the latter part of the indictment, which simply alleged that he had been convicted of felony at that time and place.

Sanders, for the prisoner, objected that the certificate could not be read in support of that branch of the case, as it was defective in not setting forth the sentence of the Court on the occasion referred to. The principle of the Act was to afford proof of a conviction, followed by a sentence and punishment, and its words were very plain. The stat. (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 11) says that "in an indictment for any such felony committed after a previous conviction for felony, it shall be sufficient to state that the offender was, at a certain time and place, convicted of felony, without otherwise describing the previous felony; and a certificate containing the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and conviction for the previous felony, purporting to be signed, &c. shall be sufficient evidence of the previous conviction." These words require something more in the certificate than in the indictment, for the substance and effect of the previous conviction ought to be contained in the former, and that can only be complied with by setting forth the sentence and punishment which followed upon the conviction. That view of the Act had been taken by Cresswell, J. in the case of Reg. v. Ackroyd (1 C. & K. 158), when a certificate in the same form as that now produced was rejected.

Power, contrà, relied on Burgess v. Bornetefeur (8 Scott, N. R. 294), where the Court of Common Pleas had, in some measure, thrown doubt upon that decision. If it was enough to state the simple fact of the conviction in the indictment, it might well be so in the certificate.

PATTESON, J.—It certainly appeared to me on former occasions to-day, that the certificates which have been produced have deviated from the usual form, in omitting all mention of the sentence. Now that the objection has been expressly raised in this case, it seems that my brother Cresswell has given an opinion that such certificates do not comply with the Act, and I am inclined to agree with that learned judge's ruling, for it is evident to me that the Act required more particularity in the certificate than in the indictment. There it is expressly stated to be sufficient to allege that the offender was previously convicted of felony at a certain time and place; but the certificate, which is made the proof of that fact, is required to contain the substance and effect only of the indictment and conviction for the previous felony. The question, therefore, is, what is required by the words "substance and effect?" Now, they must mean not only the fact of the conviction by the jury, but also the sentence of the Court, for till judgment there is no perfect conviction. There must be the finding of the Court as well as that of the jury, and that is what is meant by the "substance and effect of the conviction." The case of Reg. v. Ackroyd is very short and clear; and I see that the ruling is put on the ground, that as the judgment might be arrested, there might be a conviction by a jury, and yet, in such a case, no effect could have followed on it. That case is quite in point, and is followed by one immediately after in the same volume, where it was objected, in consequence of that decision, that an indictment, simply charging that the prisoner had been duly convicted of a previous felony, was insufficient, as it ought to have gone on to set forth the sentence of the Court. But there the same learned judge takes the distinction already adverted to as existing in the terms of the Act between an indictment and a certificate, and overruled the objection which had assumed the shape of a motion in arrest of judgment. These cases are to me, mind quite conclusive, and I shall act on them now; for, though it has been urged that Reg. v. Ackroyd was questioned in Burgess v. Bornetefeur, yet, as I have not that case before me in extenso, I cannot say to what extent it may militate against it. I think, therefore, that this certificate is not such a certificate as was contemplated by the Act, and I cannot receive it; but the defect may be altered in future cases by the clerk of the peace, by simply inserting the sentence of the Court.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

JANUARY SESSION.

January 7th and 9th.

REG. v. KENRICK.

Indictment under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, charging a bankrupt with not surrendering for the purposes of his examination—Such indictment must contain an averment that notice in writing has been served upon the prisoner—Query whether such service must be at his place of abode—Semble, that where a bankrupt has once surrendered, any subsequent omission to attend an adjourned meeting is not within the Act.—Where there is a palpable defect on the face of the indictment, the Court will direct an acquittal, where no objection to such a course is made by the counsel for the prosecution.

The prisoner was indicted under the 32nd sec. of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, for not surrendering under a fiat of bankruptcy which had issued against him. That section enacts "That if any person adjudged bankrupt after the commencement of this Act, shall not upon the day limited for the surrender of such bankrupt and before three of the clock of such day, or at the hour and upon the day allowed him for finishing his examination, after notice thereof in writing, to be left at the usual or last-known place of abode or business of such person, or personal notice, in case such person be then in prison, and notice given in the London Gazette of the issuing of the fiat and of the sittings of the Court authorized to act in the prosecution of the fiat against him, surrender himself to such Court, and sign or subscribe such surrender, and submit to be examined before such Court from time to time on oath, &c." The indictment charged, That before the committing the offence hereinafter next mentioned, to wit, on 10th June, 6 Vict. T. Kenrick, horse dealer and livery-stable-keeper, being a trader within the meaning of the laws relating to bankrupts, was indebted to John Forster in a certain sum of money exceeding the sum of 50*l.* to wit, 52*l.* 10*s.* being the amount of a certain bill of exchange, dated London, May 27, 1843, drawn by one Samuel Lazarus Lawrence, upon and accepted by the said T. Kenrick, payable to the order of said S. L. Lawrence, 14 days after the date thereof, and by the said S. L. Lawrence indorsed to the said John

Forster, which said bill was not paid when said became due, and afterwards, to wit, on the 4th July, 7th Victoria, still remained unpaid and owing to the said John Forster, and that the said T. Kenrick, so being such trader and indebted as aforesaid, afterwards on the day last aforesaid, did commit an act of bankruptcy: that is to say, by wilfully refusing and omitting to attend before the Court of Bankruptcy, in the city of London, on 30th June in the year last aforesaid, for the purpose of enabling the said Court to ascertain, in manner and form prescribed by the statutes in that case provided, whether or not he the said T. Kenrick admitted the said debt and demand of the said John Forster, although he the said Thomas Kenrick was duly summoned by Robert George Cecil Fane, Esq., one of the commissioners of the said Court, on said 16th June, to appear at said Court of Bankruptcy, on said 30th June, for the purpose aforesaid. That afterwards and within the space of two months next after filing in the said Court of an affidavit of the truth of the said debt and particulars relating thereto, to wit, on 3rd July, a fiat in bankruptcy was in due form of law granted and issued against the said Thomas Kenrick, and the said fiat was duly transmitted to the said Court of Bankruptcy, and afterwards, on the 4th of July, the said Court did adjudicate upon the said fiat, and said T. Kenrick, by said Court, and in pursuance of said fiat, in due form of law, adjudged and declared to be and then was a bankrupt, within the meaning of the several statutes in that case provided, or one of them, of all which notice in writing, together with duplicate of such adjudication, on 4th of July was served on said T. Kenrick, by delivering same to said T. Kenrick personally. That afterwards, on said 4th of July, the said T. Kenrick did personally surrender himself under said fiat to said Court of Bankruptcy, and notice was, by consent of said Thomas Kenrick, given in the London Gazette of the issuing of said fiat, and that commissioners of said court had appointed two public sittings of said Court, to be respectively holden on 11th of July and on 9th of August in the year last aforesaid, at the said Court of Bankruptcy, to surrender and conform to the said fiat. That said T. Kenrick having been duly summoned in that behalf on 11th July then next at the said court and on said 9th August respectively, did duly appear at the said court, and did duly surrender himself to be examined at said sittings respectively held under and in pursuance of said fiat before J. S. M. Fonblanque, Esq. then being one of the Commissioners of said Court of Bankruptcy, and having lawful power and authority to hold and preside at the said sittings. That on 9th August the further examination of said T. Kenrick under said fiat, was by order of said J. S. M. Fonblanque, esq. the commissioner presiding at said meeting aforesaid, duly adjourned to 14th September, to be further proceeded with at said adjourned meeting, of which said adjournment he, said T. Kenrick, on said 9th August, had personal notice, and said adjournment was duly indorsed by said J. S. M. Fonblanque, esq. on summons, by which said T. Kenrick had been summoned to surrender and conform under said fiat as aforesaid. That on said 14th September said adjourned meeting was duly held under said fiat, and said Thomas Kenrick duly appeared at said adjourned meeting at said court, and was then examined in pursuance of said fiat. That at said adjourned meeting as aforesaid on 14th September at said Court of Bankruptcy, in presence and hearing of said T. Kenrick, he, the said T. Kenrick, was, by said J. S. M. Fonblanque, esq. being such commissioner as aforesaid, allowed further time for finishing his said examination under said fiat, and there upon said J. S. M. Fonblanque, esq. in presence and hearing of said T. Kenrick at the meeting last aforesaid, appointed 8th Dec. then next at the hour of one o'clock in forenoon of the said day as the said day and hour which the said Court allowed said T. Kenrick for finishing his said examination, and said last-mentioned meeting was thereupon in the presence and hearing of said T. Kenrickd adjourned to said 8th Dec. at the hour of one of same day, to be holden for said Court, of which limitation, appointment, and adjournment, he, said T. Kenrick, on said 14th September, at the Court aforesaid, had personal notice. That said T. Kenrick being such bankrupt as aforesaid, and well knowing the premises on said 8th Dec. knowingly, wilfully, unlawfully, and feloniously did not, at the hour nor upon the day allowed him for finishing his said examination under the said fiat as aforesaid, to wit, on said 8th Dec. at the hour of one o'clock, surrender himself to be examined before said Court, but on the contrary thereof, unlawfully, wilfully, knowingly, and feloniously did wholly neglect and refuse to attend said court, at time limited by said Court for finishing his said examination under said fiat.

2nd count. That afterwards, and before the committing the offence hereinafter mentioned, to wit, on 16th June, the said T. Kenrick, so being a trader within the meaning of the laws relating to bankrupts, was indebted to John Forster in a certain sum of money exceeding 50*l.* to wit, 52*l.* 10*s.* for price and value in first count mentioned. That on 3rd July a fiat of bankruptcy was in due form of law granted and issued against said T. Kenrick, and said fiat was duly transmitted to Court of Bankruptcy, and on 4th July Court did adjudicate upon said fiat, and said Thomas Kenrick was by said Court, under and in pursuance of said fiat, in due form of law, adjudged and declared to be and then was a bankrupt, of all which, notice in writing, together with a duplicate of said adjudication was afterwards on said 4th July served on said T. Kenrick, and notice was also and with consent aforesaid of T. Kenrick, given in the London Gazette of the issuing of said fiat and meetings of said Court under same. And said Court afterwards, on 11th July, 9th August, and 14th Sept. did duly hold meetings under and in pursuance of said fiat, at which several meetings said T. Kenrick attended in his proper person before said Court in pursuance of a summons duly issued to him in that behalf, and was examined by said Court on each of those days, under and in pursuance of said fiat. That on 14th Sept. said Court did fix and appoint 8th Dec. at the hour of one in the afternoon of said day as the day which the said Court allowed said T. Kenrick for finishing his said examination under said fiat, and said examination was thereupon adjourned, &c. as in first count.

3rd count. That afterwards on 4th July, and after commencement of a certain Act of Parliament entitled An Act for the Amendment of the Law of Bankruptcy, a fiat in bankruptcy was duly granted and issued against said T. Kenrick, and said T. Kenrick afterwards, on day aforesaid, was in due form of law adjudged a bankrupt. That a certain day, that is to say, 9th August, was limited for surrender of said T. Kenrick under said adjudication of bankruptcy so made as aforesaid, and notice in writing was in due form of law given to said T. Kenrick, of the said fiat having been issued against him, said T. Kenrick, and of said adjudication and of the sittings of the Court authorized to act in the prosecution of said fiat, and notice was given in the London Gazette, to he tenor and effect last aforesaid. That on said 9th August, said T. Kenrick did duly surrender himself to said Court, and that on 14th September a certain hour and day was allowed to said T. Kenrick for finishing his said examination under said fiat by J. S. M. Fonblanque, esq. that is to say, one o'clock on 8th December. That said T. Kenrick having had personal notice of said hour and day limited by said Court, wilfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, on said 8th day of December, did omit to appear and surrender himself to said Court of bankruptcy.

4th count. That he, on said 8th December, did wilfully neglect to appear, and wilfully, unlawfully, and feloniously neglected and omitted to appear before said Court.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Bodkin (with whom was Doane), for the prosecution, having stated the case,

Ballantine, for the prisoner, objected to the indictment, that it contained no averment that notice in writing had been served a the place of abode of the prisoner, and this the Act rendered absolutely necessary. It might moreover be further questionable, whether a bankrupt who had once surrendered could be brought within the Act, by default of appearance at any subsequent meeting.

ERLE, J.—I certainly take this view of the case. Either at the day for the first examination or at the last, he is bound to surrender, but if he has surrendered at any time, he has complied with the terms of the Act of Parliament.

PATTESON, J.—It is not, however, necessary to decide this question, for we are clearly of opinion that a notice in writing is necessary, and that, in consequence, the declaration must contain an averment to that effect. In strictness this is not the proper time for taking an objection of this kind; but if Mr. Bodkin does not interfere we think there can be no obstacle to our directing an acquittal. Such a proceeding has been usual where the indictment is palpably bad upon the face of it.

Bodkin acquiesced, and the prisoner was acquitted.

R. v. BISSET.

Thursday, Jan. 9.

In setting out a former conviction in an indictment for uttering counterfeit coin, a variance in the name of one of the magistrates before whom the previous trial was had, was bad.

The prisoner was indicted for uttering counterfeit, and a previous conviction was alleged, which made the present offence a felony. In the caption of the former indictment, as set out on the record, the name of one of the magistrates before whom the previous trial was had was spelt Dalicon, whilst in the conviction produced in Court it appeared to be Dalison.

Payne, for the prisoner, submitted, that on this variance the prisoner was entitled to an acquittal. He cited a case before Mr. Baron Maule, in which a like objection had prevailed, the name of Mr. Alderman Ansley having been mis-spelt in the recital of a previous conviction.

Bodkin (for the prosecution.)—I apprehend that if it appears by the statement of the caption of the indictment that there was a sufficient number of persons present to try the cause, this variance will not vitiate. It is only necessary to state as many as form the Court. The mention of the name at all is mere surplusage.

Payne.—How does that appear?

Bodkin.—Because the Court will take judicial notice that there were sufficient magistrates presiding at the trial, a great number being set out on this record. Supposing that four constituted a quorum—that four were set out, and one of the names was mis-spelt, that might be bad; but here many more are named than were requisite.

Payne.—That will depend upon the commission.

Patteson, J.—I think that the variance has been held fatal at Nisi Prius, where, in a commission, one of the judges' names was spelt incorrectly. It may not, perhaps, be necessary to set out all the names, but if they are set out, it ought to be done correctly. It might be that the magistrate who is thus misnamed was one of those before whom the case was tried. An acquittal was accordingly directed.

R. v. MUMFORD.

Query. Whether in an indictment for maliciously wounding cattle under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 16, it is necessary since the 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 2, to prove malice against the owner?

The prisoner was indicted for maliciously wounding cattle under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 16.

At the conclusion of the evidence no proof of malice against the owner having been adduced, Patteson, J. observed, that there was a case now under the consideration of the judges as to how far the offence was a felony at all, unless it appeared to have been committed from malice to the owner of the animal. The Act of Parliament which rendered such proof unnecessary had been apparently repealed by the statute of 1 Vict. c. 30, s. 2. The former statute did not say that the offence should be complete, although no malice were shewn. Should the prisoner be convicted, it would be necessary, therefore, to reserve the point.

The prisoner was acquitted.

Note.—The 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 16, enacts, "that if any person shall unlawfully and maliciously kill, maim, or wound any cattle, he shall be guilty of felony, and liable to be transported, &c. for life, or for not less than seven years." The 25th section of the same Act declares, "That every punishment and forfeiture by this Act imposed on any person maliciously committing any offence, shall equally apply and be enforced, whether the offence shall be committed from malice conceived against the owner of the property in respect of which it shall be committed, or otherwise." The 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 2, after reciting the 16th sec. of the foregoing Act, goes on to declare, "That so much of the said Act as relates to the punishment of persons convicted of any of the offences hereinbefore specified, shall be repealed;" and it then proceeds to award a different punishment. The Act of Geo. 4, therefore, not declaring the offence to be complete without proof of such malice, but merely that the punishment might, nevertheless, be awarded; and the statute of Vict. repealing so much of the former Act as relates to such punishment, it would seem that the 25th section has no longer any operation.—(Reporter.)

(Before the RECORDER.)

REG. v. WM. ASHE.

Practice.

Where a juryman is suddenly taken ill and obliged to leave the court in the midst of a trial, the jury will be discharged, a new jury sworn comprising the eleven remaining jurymen, and the evidence gone through de novo.

During the trial of this prisoner a juryman was suddenly taken ill and obliged to leave the court. He was in a dying state, and there was no probability that he would resume his duties.

The RECORDER remarked, that under the melancholy circumstances announced by the medical gentleman, it would be useless waste of time longer to delay the proceedings in the case under trial. The only question was, what should be done in the matter as it now stood. There was, he believed, no authority as to the course to be pursued under similar circumstances, though it was somewhat singular that the ordinary works of reference were silent upon the point.

Payne referred to Rex. v. Ann Sealbert (Leach's Crown Cases, 620.) This was an indictment for murder, tried at the Summer Assizes at York, in 1794, before Mr. Justice Laurence. During the trial, one of the jury was seized with a fit, and was carried out of the court in an insensible state. The judge waited some time in the hope that the juror might recover, but at length it was proved on oath that he would be unable to attend the trial immediately. Mr. Justice Laurence thereupon discharged the jury, and ordered a new jury to be sworn; the new jury being composed of the eleven remaining jurors, with the addition of another fresh juryman.

Ryland (amicus curiæ) said, that some years ago he had been engaged in a trial at the Hertford Assizes, before Mr. Justice Littledale, and that when he (Mr. Ryland) had concluded the case for the prosecution, one of the jury was suddenly taken ill, and became wholly unable to remain in the jury-box. A surgeon, after examining the juror, on oath proved that it would be impossible for him to resume his duties within a reasonable time. On this evidence Mr. Justice Littledale directed another gentleman to be called and sworn, and the other remaining eleven jurors were re-sworn, and the whole of the evidence was then gone through de novo.

The RECORDER observed, that this was, no doubt, the proper course of proceeding, and it must be followed in the present instance.

Accordingly another juror was sworn, and his fellows re-sworn. The evidence was recapitulated by the witnesses, and the trial terminated in the acquittal of the prisoner.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE business of legislation, as usual at Easter, has proceeded slowly and with a languid spirit. Lord RADNOR has laid on the table of the House a Bill of his own framing to amend the Law of Bastardy. The Bill was read a first time.

In consequence of the closing of the office for the sale of Parliamentary papers this day (Good Friday), we have been unable to procure the paper whence we make our weekly abstract of the public and private business transacted in the House of Commons.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

BASTARDY.

MONDAY, March 17.—The Earl of RADNOR presented two petitions from magistrates of Bath and Wilts, complaining of the present state of the law as regarded bastardy. His lordship afterwards laid upon the table a Bill, not at all emanating from the petitioners, but from himself, to amend the existing law by repealing all the clauses in the Poor-Law Act of last session, excepting that which repealed the clauses in the former Bill. The effect would be to leave the law precisely as it stood before the Poor-Law Act of last session, or that which preceded it, was placed upon the statute book.—The Bill was read a first time, and the second reading was fixed for the 17th April.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

LAW OF SETTLEMENT BILL.

MONDAY, March 17.—Mr. C. BULLER wished to ask the right honourable Secretary for the Home Department what course he intended with respect to the Bill he had introduced relative to the law of settlement?—Sir J. GRAHAM observed that the second reading of this Bill stood for the 7th of April, but he found from a communication which he had received from an honourable gentleman opposite, that it would be inconvenient to proceed with it then, in consequence of the quarter sessions occurring in many parts on the same day; he therefore would at once state that it was his intention to postpone it to the 14th of April.

CRIMINAL COURTS IN DEVON.

WEDNESDAY, March 19.—Mr. B. ESCOTT gave notice that, soon after the Easter recess, he should present a petition, from a barrister of long standing residing in the county of Devon, praying that the House would redress divers abuses and corruptions in the criminal courts of that county.

IMPRISONMENT FOR SMALL DEBTS.

THURSDAY, March 20.—Mr. H. BERKELEY gave notice that on the 10th of April he would move for leave to bring in a Bill to amend (we understood) an Act passed last session for abolishing imprisonment for small debts.

THE SUGAR DUTIES OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES.—A somewhat important paper, purporting to contain an account of the import and export duties on sugar in France, and extracts from the recently issued table of modifications for regulating the excise duty on beet-root sugar, together with an extract from the general tariff of import duties on sugar in the United States, has been presented to both Houses of Parliament, by the command of her Majesty the Queen. It hence appears that the French import duties on the various qualities of sugar are as follows,—viz. on raw and not white sugar from Bourbon, 38*f.* 50c. (1*l.* 10s. 9½d.) per 100 kilogrammes; on raw and not white sugar from French Guiana, Martinique, and Guadaloupe, 45*f.* (1*l.* 16s.) per 100 kilogrammes; on the same quality of sugar from India, 60*f.* or 2*l.* 8s.; from elsewhere, out of Europe, 65*f.* or 2*l.* 12s.; from entrepôts in Europe, 75*f.* or 3*l.* On raw white sugar imported from the abovementioned places, the duties are respectively 45*f.* or 1*l.* 16s. 9¾d.; 52*f.* 50c. or 2*l.* 2s.; 80*f.* or 3*l.* 4s.; 85*f.* or 3*l.* 8s.; and 95f. or 3l. 16s. per 100 kilogrammes. On clayed sugar of all kinds, without distinction or mode of preparation, the duties are on the produce of the same places respectively, 60f. or 2l. 8s.; 66f. 50c. or 2l. 13s. 2½d.; 80f. or 3l. 4s.; 85f. or 3l. 8s.; and 95f. or 3l. 16s. per 100 kilogrammes. It is necessary to state that the above duties exclusively apply to importations in French vessels, inasmuch as any importation from the French colonial dependencies in foreign bottoms, or by land, is entirely prohibited. On raw (not white) sugar, raw white sugar, and clayed of all kinds, imported in foreign vessels from India, or elsewhere, in or out of Europe, the duties are respectively 85f. (3l. 8s.), 105f. (4l. 4s.) per 100 kilogrammes. The export duties on all sugars are 25 centimes, or 5 2-5d. sterling, per 100 kilogrammes. So much for the general Customs' duties. Turning to the extract from the table of modifications in the French tariff of sugar duties resulting from the law of the 2nd of July, 1843, regulating the excise duty on beet-root sugar manufactured in France, it appears that on the 1st of August, 1845, the import duties on French colonial sugars will be as follows—viz. in the first type and inferior qualities from Bourbor, 38f. 50c. and on the same qualities from America, 45f.; on the first to the second type inclusive, from Bourbon, 42f. and from America, 48f. 50c.; on sugars above the second type, from Bourbon, 45f. 50c. and from America, 52f. per 100 kilogrammes. From the tables of the rates of duty to be levied upon sugars of French growth and manufacture, agreeably to the provisions of the projet de loi of the 2nd of July, 1843, it is found that the rate on beet-root and all other sugars capable of being crystallized will be on the 1st of August, 1845, 35f., 38f. 50c., 42f. and 45f., according to the several qualities; in August 1846, 40f., 44f., 48f. and 52f. respectively; and in August 1847, 45f., 49f. 50c., 54f. and 58f. 50c. per 100 kilogrammes respectively; it hence appearing, that whilst the import duties on French colonial sugars are to be reduced, those on French home-manufactured sugar are to be gradually, but decidedly, raised. The liquid sugars and all others not capable to be crystallized are divided into—first, syrup and concrete sugars, the duty on which, now 2f. per 100 kilogrammes, is to remain in statu quo: and, second, liquid granular sugars, the duty on which, now 30f. per 100 kilogrammes, will be raised next August to 35f.; in August 1846, to 40f.; and in August 1847, to 45f. per 100 kilogrammes. The extract from the general tariff of the import duties of the United States of America shews that the duties on sugar are as follows—viz. raw brown 2½ cents per lb.; candy, 6 cents per lb.; loaf and lump, 6 cents per lb.; white clayed, 4 cents per lb.; syrup of sugar, and brown clayed, 2½ cents per lb.; all others, not refined, 4 cents per lb.; and refined, 6 cents per lb. We have now given a full account of the interesting information which is to be derived from the returns before us.

RAILWAY TAXATION.—The late reports of the following railways give the following statistics for the last half-year:—Grand Junction (104 miles, capital expended 2,300,000l.), half-year's traffic receipts 229,000l., for dividend 130,000l.—paid poor-rates, tithes, church &c. 3,890l., Government tax of 5 per cent. on passengers 7,000l., besides income-tax on dividend &c.; Birmingham Railway (112 miles, capital expended 6,000,000l., on branches 500,000l.), half-year's receipts 450,000l., working expenses 182,000l., disposable balance 273,000l.,—rates and taxes 12,267l., Government passenger-tax 15,784l.; Greenwich (3¾ miles, capital 1,000,000l.), receipts (1,000,000 passengers) 27,600l., expended 27,400l., balance for shareholders 270l.—paid Government-tax 1,071l., rates and taxes 4,632l., income-tax 121l. Thus it will be seen that four railways of 440 miles in length (or 4,400 acres of land) paid in the half-year 30,146l. rates and taxes (or 6 per cent) and 39,200l. passenger-tax (or 6 per cent. further), besides stamps, income-tax, &c. on their disposable balance of 563,000l. The total amount of this taxation presses very heavily, when it is computed that there are now 2,000 miles of English railways, with a capital of 100,000,000l. and that on thirty eight of these railways (extending 1,756 miles), for the last six months of 1844, the traffic receipts were 3,250,000l., being about 4,000l. per mile per annum; from which deduct 1,600l. for working expenses, and there is left 2,400l. per mile per annum, or nearly 2,000,000l. for dividend.—Railway and Land Taxation.

PUBLIC PETITIONS TO PARLIAMENT.—On Friday was printed, by order of the House, the sixth report of the Select Committee of the Commons on "Public Petitions." It appears from their summary, that there are already lying on the table (amongst others), a petition, signed by 83 persons, against any further grant for the purpose of education in Ireland, —presented by Mr. J. P. Plumtre; 18 petitions, signed by 1,753 persons, for encouragement to the Church Education Society in Ireland; 4 petitions, signed by 438 persons, against the contemplated amalgamation or union of the dioceses of Bangor and St. Asaph; 15 petitions, signed by 6,809, persons, praying that, in any relief from taxation which may be given, the House will take the first opportunity of granting relief to the agriculturists; 18 petitions, signed by 1,528 persons, for a repeal of the malt duty; 20 petitions, signed by 1,690 persons, against the renewal of the property and income-tax; 11 petitions, signed by 3,420 persons, for a repeal of the tax upon windows; 2 petitions, signed by 9,598 persons, for a repeal of the Charitable Donations and Bequests (Ireland) Act, passed last session; 13 petitions, signed by 1,747 persons, in favour of a Bill for the establishment of local or county courts; 8 petitions, signed by 1,624 persons, for a repeal of the game laws; 1 petition, signed by 1,424 persons, for an alteration in the laws relating to the health of towns; 9 petitions, signed by 309 persons, against the Medical Bill of 1844; 56 petitions, signed by 1,993 persons, for an alteration in the Medical Practice Bill of 1844; 11 petitions, signed by 935 persons, praying that no increase whatever may be allowed in the naval force of this country (as contemplated by the Government now in power), but that, on the contrary, prompt measures may be taken greatly to reduce the existing naval and military establishments; 3 petitions, signed by 437 persons (male and female), stating that there is a large class of persons in the principal towns in the United Kingdom who make a trade of, and live by promoting promiscuous intercourse between the sexes; complaining that no adequate punishment is provided for this crime, heinous as it is; and praying that the House will render trading in vice in the manner referred to a highly penal offence, and that the magistrates and police officers may be invested with such summary powers of proceeding, in cases of suspected delinquency, as to enable them not only to detect guilt, but to bring it to certain and condign punishment; 38 petitions, signed by 7,358 persons, praying the House to adopt measures for preventing the increase of houses licensed for the sale of intoxicating drinks, and for diminishing to a very great extent the number already existing, and to pass a law for the entire abolition of the sale of such beverages on the Lord's day; and 14 petitions, signed by 4,874 persons, for a redemption of the tolls on the bridges of Waterloo, Southwark, and Vauxhall.

DWELLING-HOUSE AND WINDOW TAX.—By a return to an order of the House of Commons, dated the 18th of February, 1845, it appears that the total number of dwelling-houses in the United Kingdom at the census of 1841, was as follows:—In England, 3,144,641; in Ireland, 1,384,360; and in Scotland, 529,524; being a total of 5,058,525. The number of houses assessed to the window-duty during the same year was, in England, 414,395; and in Scotland, 33,025; total 447,420. Whilst the amount of duty was, in England, 1,716,331l. for the year 1841, and 1,618,932l. for the year 1844; in Scotland, 114,126l. for 1841, and 124,468l. for 1844; making together a total of 1,830,457l. for 1841, and 1,743,400l. for 1844. It should be remarked that this return does not include the dwelling-houses in the British isles.

REAL PROPERTY.—A return has been obtained by order of Parliament, on the motion of Mr. Villiers, shewing the total annual value of real property in each county of England and Wales assessed to the property and income-tax for the year ending April, 1843, distinguishing that on land, houses, tithes, manors, fines, quarries, mines, ironworks, fisheries, canals, railways, &c. It hence appears that in England and Wales alone, the grand total annual value of real assessed property amounts to the enormous sum of 85,802,735l. thus subdivided, viz.- lands, 40,167,088l. (or nearly one-half); houses, 35,556,399l.; tithes, 1,960,330l.; manors, 152,216l.; fines, 319,140l.; quarries, 207,009l.; mines, 1,903,794l.; iron-works, 412,022l.; fisheries, 11,104l.; canals, 1,229,202l.; and railways, 2,417,609l.; other property, not comprised in the foregoing, 1,466,815l. A similar return as to Scotland gives a grand total of 9,481,762l. viz.—lands, 5,586,527l.; houses, 2,919,338l.; fines, 901l.; quarries, 33,474l.; mines, 177,592l.; iron-works, 147,412l.; fisheries, 47,809l.; canals, 77,891l.; and railways, 181,333l. The other property not included in the foregoing details amounts to 309,480l.

WINDOW TAX.—It appears by a parliamentary paper, printed by order of the House of Commons, on the motion of Captain Pechell, that the produce of the window-duty for the five years ending April 5, 1844, was respectively as follows:—1840, 1,486,023l.; 1841, 1,774,638l.; 1842, 1,775,151l.; 1843, 1,776,789l.; 1844, 1,786,514l.

THE NEW SETTLEMENT BILL.—The Hoxne Union, in Suffolk, last week unanimously decided to petition against the Settlement Bill; and on Tuesday the Desswade Union, in Norfolk, by a large majority (above 30 against 5) came to the same decision. These two unions join the Wangford Union; the Hoxne also touches the Blything Union. The Braintree Union, in Essex, and the Steyning Union, in Sussex, are to consider the question this week.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE chief event of interest which has offered during the past week is the announcement by Sir JAMES GRAHAM of an amendment to the now famous Amendment Bill. The second reading of the new Settlement Bill, which stood for the 7th of April, is postponed to the 14th of that month. Some remarks on a subject of great hardship, if not injustice, to prisoners, will be found below, and to which we invite attention.

THE NEW SETTLEMENT BILL.

WE resume our review of this much-discussed measure.

Sec. 37 provides for the notification of unions thus parochialized in the Gazette, and to the clerks of the peace of every county in which any part of them may be situated.

The following sections may be thus briefly enumerated:—

Sec. 38. Guardians and their officers to proceed in matters of settlement and removal. Sec. 39. Guardians to take up such proceedings commenced before this Act. Sec. 40. Commissioners to declare the averages of such unions for seven years ending March 25, 1845. Sec. 41. Proviso for cases where moneys have been irregularly applied in relief of the poor. Sec. 42. After the declaration of averages, the expenses of the union to be charged on the respective parishes according to such averages. Sec. 43. Overseers to continue to relieve in sudden and urgent cases. Such relief to be charged to the respective parishes. Sec. 44. Proviso for the repayment of loans, already partly discharged, but in different proportions by different parishes. Sec. 45. Certain penalties for offences against parishes extended to unions for settlement. Sec. 46. Boards of guardians of single parishes may act in matters relating to the settlement and removal of the poor.

Such are the provisions which chiefly characterize the new Bill, and have elicited so much philanthropic sensation in behalf of the parochiality of paupers. We have attentively reconsidered the above clauses, and are still more disposed to adhere to our first impression, that these provisions would not produce any of that disruption of local feeling and neighbourly sympathies to which we attach the highest importance, and any real disturbance of which we should most strenuously denounce. But we cannot understand how this is to follow from enlarging the nominal area of the district within which paupers are not removable; for to this, and to this alone, the matter comes. Do they less belong to their parish than they did? Not the least; for it will be because their parish is in union A, that they are removed there; all the proofs of their settlement will equally relate to that parish, for they will be settled, in point of fact, in union A, in virtue of the parish to which they belong, and must continue to belong. True it is that by a very ill-advised provision, the expense of their maintenance is to be charged on the parish in proportion to the average it had previously paid during the seven years ending on the 25th instant, and not according to its existing charges; but does a man less belong to his parish because there is a new apportionment of the burden of pauperism among eight or ten of the surrounding parishes in which his own is included? If it were now for the first time enacted that paupers were to be sent to and relieved at the union workhouses out of their own parishes, there might be more truth in this outcry; but it happens that that is and has been the case for these ten years past. We do not see any extension of this system in the Bill before us. Paupers who are removed to the union workhouse under this Bill, would equally have gone there under the present law, and they will go there in virtue of their having gained a settlement in their own parish, whatever may be the wording of clause 33. The cry of unparochializing the poor is a mere partisan cry, and one which we think the country will do well to disregard. There is, however, this benefit in the provision, which we commend, as far as it goes; it diminishes removal and litigation; for within each union, the parishes there cannot remove to one another: and it is between neighbouring parishes that removals and appeals are always most frequent. This is a great gain; and not to be counterbalanced by the lamentation that John Snooks belongs to union A, instead of parish B; when in point of fact he belongs to parish B as much as he ever did.

One great objection to the Bill is, that, after all, it is merely botching a bad system. We want to see removals done away with. We wish the poor to be chargeable to the parishes where they become chargeable. We do not believe that the interest of the labourer would ever admit of any great migration, unless there was demand for employment to warrant it. It might have been otherwise in the days of Charles II. when the land was half cultivated; but the law to remedy this has lasted 200 years, and has far outlived its necessity. The demand and supply of labour will always regulate the transition of labour. If the vicissitudes of trade should leave an influx of labourers suddenly impoverished in any place which had attracted them there, it is fair that such place, having had the benefit of their labour, should have the burden of their relief. The entire cessation of all the expenses of removal and appeals would clearly be a great gain. To this plan of ours we have received no objection among the several communications made to us on the subject.

One correspondent alone objects to our secondary proposal that the rates of each year should be apportioned on each parish according to their charges during each preceding year. In a letter signed J. T. R. 4 Law T. 405 (Feb. 22, 1845), occurs the passage—"The labour of farms is performed by the residents of their outskirts—for instance, the parishes of Shoreditch, Bethnal-green, Stepney, and many others contain an immense population of poor labourers. Would you propose that this poor population should be supported by the ratepayers of those parishes, while the rich residents of the parishes in the heart of the metropolis are to be unburdened with any poor at all?" Is it otherwise now? Are the rich parishes of London in the practice of supporting the poor of Shoreditch, &c.? We think not; and that the objection falls to the ground. It may be hereafter a question how far means might be adopted for a more equal distribution of the burden of poor-rates, but we deem it very important to give to each parish a direct interest in the diminution of pauperism, and to induce those who have or hold land to find employment for the labourers in their parishes. The moment that the rates are borne by the country at large, it becomes rather the interest of the parish to ease itself by sending all superfluous labour to a relief fund, no longer levied on the individual parish in proportion to its paupers, but regarded as a general reservoir, out of which each parish would strive to clutch the largest share. We have here somewhat strongly sketched the general features of the evil we most dread; but, on the other hand, we are not insensible of the defects which might attend the plan we propose. We do not offer it as perfect; but we do think it a material improvement on the present system.

When Sir James Graham's new Bill is again under discussion, we shall not fail to revert to it. In the interim we strongly advise those concerned in its operation to consider well its various provisions, and consider also the expediency of memorializing the Home-office against such parts of the measure as seem open to serious objection. In our humble judgment no part of the Bill deserves so much condemnation as the fixing of all future rate payments by the standard of the last seven years. The Tithe Act is far less absurd, for that goes by a floating period of the next preceding seven years; but to levy the rates of 1850 according to the proportion of 1838-45 does appear to be a most monstrous absurdity, and one liable to all the objection we have just stated to a national rate, as well as to the inevitable injustice arising from a fluctuating population. S.

NEW BASTARDY AMENDMENT BILL.

Sir James Graham has perceived the chance given by his Bill to the putative fathers to escape through the holes in Mr. Lumley's net; and he has announced an amendment of the Amendment Bill, so as to preclude any one from taking objections to formal defects in existing orders. We dare say there will be further amendments yet. We beg respectfully to suggest one which appears to us much wanted, in order to perfect the measure; it is, simply to relieve the Court of Queen's Bench of all further jurisdiction in poor-law matters, and to institute a new court of parochial appeal, of which we further beg leave to suggest that Golden Lumley, Esq. be made judge; of course without appeal from his lordship's judgments. This will save much trouble, and avoid the necessity of many future Acts of Parliament, by legalizing Lumleyism, prospectively as well as retrospectively.

As Parliament will legalize orders known to be illegal, it can have no scruple in making that law which may accidentally be not unlawful. We cannot lament that means be taken to relieve persons from dilemmas and difficulties, who are innocent of their causes; but we must seriously protest against the system of using Parliament for these purposes.

Some persons imagine we are not justified in treating Mr. Lumley with so much lenience and levity, under all the circumstances of the case. We do not think so. Mr. Lumley is, we believe, a gentleman of correct feeling and honourable mind; in having denounced his errors, so far as they were public and mischievous, we were warranted by every duty arising from our position and his responsibilities; but not one step further could or would we go. Besides there are others who are equally to blame.

DEPOSITIONS AGAINST PRISONERS.

A hint to magistrates on this subject is required. A practice has grown up of late of omitting to bring all the witnesses against a prisoner before the committing magistrate, and springing a mine under him by the production of evidence at the trial, of which no deposition had been taken. This may be legal, but it is a most unfair course, and clearly repugnant to the spirit and intent of the statute, which Lord Denman, C. J. in Rex v. Grady (7 Car. & Pay. 650) said was "to enable prisoners to know what they had to answer on their trial." At the last Quarter Sessions for Gloucestershire, a second indictment, charging a similar offence on another day to that laid in the first indictment, was preferred without any depositions whatever. The counsel for the prisoner moved to quash the indictment before plea, on the authority of the above case, citing also Reg. v. Wilson (1 Bt. & Sym. 164) to shew the jurisdiction of the Court. The Court seemed disposed to regard the case as one of hardship, but, inasmuch as there was an established usage to prefer indictments without depositions, the Court refused to interfere. If they were warranted in so refusing, the Legislature ought to interfere. Nothing can be more repugnant to justice than such conduct. The Court, in the case referred to, offered to allow the trial to be postponed, but that is a poor consolation to the prisoner, who may not be thereby enabled to improve his position, for how is he to enforce a disclosure of the evidence intended to be brought against him?

Subsequently the same objection was taken by the counsel for a prisoner at the last Herefordshire Sessions, against whom two witnesses were called without depositions. He complained most strongly of the injustice in his address to the jury. Mr. Barneby, M.P. who presides in that court, in summing up, approved of the animadversions thus made, and denounced the practice as most improper. It is clearly unjust, and ought to be scrupulously avoided.

Where really important evidence transpires after the committal, such evidence ought of course to be produced, but never without giving due notice of it to the prisoner or his legal adviser. A short Act providing for these cases, ought to be at once introduced. Mr. Ewart would much more profitably employ himself upon such a measure than on his counsel address measure. S.

INFORMATIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—Your opinion (signed S.), 4 Law T. 423, states that "all informations should be on oath, whether the statute require it or not." I presume you mean "evidence," instead of "informations." You refer to 4 Law T. 343, where the point is rightly set forth as to evidence, and where also you have inserted a judicious note at the foot of the page, denying the propriety of taking informations on oath, unless where required by statute.

Your obedient servant,

March 3, 1845. W. P. P.

[Our correspondent is quite right, and we are obliged by the opportunity of correcting the erratum.]

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

There is nothing of special interest to offer. Mr. Berkeley, in the House of Commons, has given notice of his intention to bring in a Bill for amending the Act of last session for abolishing imprisonment for small debts. To this measure we shall look with curiosity and interest. The conclusion of the summary on decisions of last Term is presented below.

REVIEW OF THE CASES DECIDED IN ALL THE COURTS OF COMMON LAW,

During Hilary Term and Vacation, 1845.

EXECUTION.

Meaning of "debt" in 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 57.—In Fitzball v. Brooke (4 Law T. 355) the protection given by Lord Brougham's Act to defendants in "actions for the recovery of any debt," where less than 20*l.* is recovered, was held to extend to cases of actions for penalties under an Act of Parliament, where less than 20*l.* was recovered upon judgment by default, although, had the action been tried, the jury might have given greater damages. The statute there was 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 15 (the Dramatic Property Act), making every person performing pieces without the leave of the proprietor of the copyright liable "for each and every such representation to the payment of an amount not less than forty shillings, or to the full amount of the benefit or advantage arising from any such representation, or the injury or loss sustained by the plaintiff therefrom, whichever shall be the greater damages." This decision shews that a contract between the parties is not essential to constitute a "debt" within the meaning of that Act.

HABEAS CORPUS.

That which will be known to posterity as "The Jersey case," has already given rise to one decision of general importance.

There can now be no doubt that, under statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, any judge of the superior courts can issue a writ of habeas corpus, returnable in any of the other courts, and the affidavits upon which such writ is issued are rightly entitled in the court of which the judge is a member. (4 Law T. 353.)

HIGHWAYS.

It seems that a collector of highway rates is liable to an action for money had and received, if he refuses to hand over, on demand, the surplus arising from a distress, and that he is not entitled to notice of action under the Highway Act. (Charrington v. Johnson, 4 Law T. 398.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

A husband does not reduce a chose in action belonging to his wife, as a promissory note given to her dum sola, into possession, by receiving interest upon it in her lifetime. He is, therefore, an admissible witness in an action by her administrators to prove such payment of interest. (Hart v. Stevens, 4 Law T. 453.)

JUDGMENT.

In practice it has been considered that an action of debt would lie upon a judgment of any Court, whether of record or not; and this has now been distinctly decided in the case of Williams v. Jones (4 Law T. 319). "Whenever," said Mr. Baron Parke, "a Court of competent jurisdiction has decided that a defendant owes money to a plaintiff, debt will lie."

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

There is nothing very important to comment upon in this branch of the law. The principal case, Counter v. Crane (4 Law T. 449), although a decision of the Privy Council on an appeal from the Governor-General of Canada in Council, may be referred to in our summary, as, to use the words of the judgment delivered by Mr. Pemberton Leigh, "there would be no difference upon the main question between the decision of a court of law and a court of equity." The facts were briefly these. The appellant had contracted to demise certain premises for a term to the respondents, and, prior to the commencement of the term, to repair the old premises and build a new warehouse, and the rent was to be proportioned to the sum so laid out. The premises were not fully repaired or built at the time fixed for the commencement of the term, but the respondents had occupied the part that was finished. Before the execution of the lease and the completion of the premises, they were destroyed by fire. The respondents then refused to accept a lease unless the premises were rebuilt. The appellant then obtained a decree for specific performance in the Court of Chancery in Canada, which was reversed on appeal by the Governor in Council. He then brought the case before the Privy Council. The appellant's claim was rested upon the admitted principle, that a party who has entered into a binding contract for the purchase of an estate becomes in equity the owner of it, and is entitled to any profit and subject to any loss that may afterwards occur to it; and it was said in this case, although the period at which the works were to be done had passed before they were completed, yet that the respondents had waived any objection on that score, and the contract was still subsisting, and the principle was to be applied. A recent and very forcible illustration of this principle is afforded by Vesey v. Elwood (3 Drur. & War. 76), where a purchaser of a life annuity sold under a decree in equity, was held bound to pay the purchase-money, although the life dropped before, according to the course of practice, the purchase could have been confirmed in the Master's office.

But the Privy Council dismissed the appeal. They held that the general principle did not apply here, because, although the contract to take a lease might be treated in equity as an actual lease, it could be only so treated, subject to the condition that the warehouse and premises were put into the state agreed upon. The right to object for the non-performance within the time, had been waived by the respondents, but not the performance of the contract by the appellant. The respondents were to receive a complete building at the commencement of the term, and to restore a complete building at the end of it, and pay a rent proportionate to the expenditure. Had there been no fire, the appellant could not have required a specific performance before the buildings were finished; and why, then, should the fire increase his rights? Two modes were suggested by the appellant, by which substantial justice might be done; these were both considered as contrary to the principles upon which a court of equity acts, which were thus expressed:—"This would clearly be to impose on the parties a contract which they never entered into either by expression or implication; and although where a binding contract is subsisting, the completion of which in its exact terms becomes impossible, through accident, without any default of the party seeking relief, a court of equity will struggle with points of form, it cannot for that purpose alter the substance of the agreement, or impose upon either party obligations totally different from those which, by the agreement he had contracted to perform."

Penal rent.—A clause in an agreement that the tenant shall not break up or convert into tillage any meadow or pasture land under the penalty of 20*l* an acre, and so in proportion for a greater or less quantity, to be recovered by distress, as for rent in arrear," and "that he would not sell any hay, straw, or stubble produced upon the said premises under the penalty of 2s. 6d. for each yard of hay, and of 20s. for each cartload of straw or stubble, to be recovered as aforesaid, gives the landlord a power of distress. (Pollitt v. Forrest, 1 Car. & Kirw. 560; 4 Law T. 397.) But the Court of Exchequer considered that justifying in the words of the agreement was incorrect, the words "as for rent" rather implying a penalty, and that it should have been pleaded as rent. In Chapman v. Beecham (3 Q.B. 723), an avowry under a deed which gave to the defendant, if certain arrears of interest were due, power to enter and distrain; that he entered and took, and "as for and in the name of a distress," was held good as an avowry of leave and license.

Waiver of forfeiture.—Doe dem. Muston v. Gladwin (4 Law T. 432) well illustrates the principle that the courts of law must give effect to the plain legal meaning of deeds and agreements, however harsh, or even, morally speaking, unjust they may consider the proceedings. If any covenant in a lease giving a right of re-entry upon breach be broken, the landlord may avail himself of it in law, notwithstanding he has given a parol license to the tenant to commit the breach. The same principle applies to a composition deed, containing a proviso that it shall be void (i. e. voidable) upon non-performance of the terms. (Hyde v. Watts, 12 M. & W. 254.)

LICENSE.

Wood v. Ledbitter (4 Law T. 434) is at once the most elaborate and the most interesting judgment given during last Term. The simple question for decision was, whether Lord Eglintoun had power to remove the plaintiff from the inclosure and grandstand at Doncaster, when he had purchased a ticket issued with the privity of his lordship, purporting to give permission of ingress, egress, and regress there during the races. This right was held to be such a right affecting land, that it could be conferred only by deed. But the plaintiff, who had brought this action for trespass against the officer who had removed him, contended that, without being a grant, it was a license irrevocable. This led the Court to examine the cases fully, and to deliver a most luminous and learned judgment as to the nature of licenses in general. For the examination of the cases Webb v. Paternoster (Rolle, 143); Wood v. Lake (Sayer, 3); Taylor v. Waters (7 Taunt. 374); and Wood v. Manley (11 A. & E. 34), we refer our readers to the judgment itself, confining ourselves now to the principles established by the judgment. A license, then, is properly that which only makes an action lawful which would otherwise have been unlawful without it, but does not confer any property or pass any interest. Such a license, whether under seal or coupled with a grant invalid for not being under seal, is revocable at any time at the mere will and pleasure of the licenser; but if it be coupled with a grant, whether by parol or by deed, assuming that the grant be a valid one, it is irrevocable. The illustrations put by the Court are as follows:—

Thus a license by A to hunt in his park, whether given by deed or by parol, is revocable. It merely renders the act of hunting lawful, which, without the license, would have been unlawful. If the license be, as put by Chief Justice Vaughan, a license not only to hunt, but also to take away the deer when killed to his own use, this is in truth a grant of the deer with the license annexed to come on the land; and supposing the grant of the deer to be good, then the license would be irrevocable by the party who had given it. He would be estopped from defeating his own grant or act in nature of a grant. But supposing the case of a parol license to come on any land, and there to make a watercourse to flow on to the land of the license; in such a case there is no valid grant of the watercourse, and the license remains a mere license, and therefore capable of being revoked. On the other hand, if such a license were granted by deed, there the question would be on the construction of the deed, whether it amounted to a grant of the watercourse, and if it did, then the license would be irrevocable.

In the principal case it was held that the ticket was only a license, and therefore liable to revocation. It was a right by way of easement, but no interest was incident to the act permitted.

MANDAMUS.

Objection to writ, when to be taken.—Since the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 67, which assimilates the proceedings on a demurrer to the return to a mandamus to the proceedings in a common action, it is important to have it established, as it was in Clarke v. Leicestershire Canal Company (4 Law T. 435), that the authority of the Court to grant the mandamus may be disputed at any stage of the proceedings.

Where mandamus will not lie.—A mandamus does not lie to order the gaoler of the Queen's Prison to pay a certain sum weekly out of the fund for poor prisoners to a poor prisoner in his custody, the regulation of the prison being in the Secretary of State, according to Act of Parliament. (Reg. v. Hudson, 4 Law T. 353.)

PATENT.

Substitution of chemical equivalent substances.—A very important principle as to the infringement of patents depending upon chemical science, was laid down in Heath v. Unwin (4 Law T. 294). The particular nature of the patent and the alleged infringement need not be detailed, but the principle established was, that if a party substitutes for a part of a patent invention a well-known chemical equivalent, that is a mere colourable variation and an infringement of the patent; but where neither the world in general nor the defendant is aware that the substances substituted are equivalent, and where the defendant had no intention of imitating the patent invention, there is no infringement of the patent, either direct or indirect.

PLEADING.

We do not give questions of pleading in detail in these reviews; but we may just refer to one or two points decided during the last Term. The old opinion, that a man shall not be allowed to stultify himself, has been upset, at least so far as to allow a man to plead drunkenness (Gore v. Gibson, 4 Law T. 319; 9 Jur. 140), when sued as the indorser of a bill of exchange. The reasons in favour of lunacy at the time of contract being a good plea, would be still stronger, for drunkenness is a voluntary act. An interesting note is given by the learned reporter in the Jurist, tracing the course of the old doctrine; but he concludes by saying, that by the principal case, a contract entered into in a state of complete intoxication is void. We apprehend that "voidable" would have been more correct. It is clear, from the case, that the plaintiff was the immediate indorsee of the defendant, and it is not decided that such a plea would be good against a remote indorsee, as in the case of bills or notes for gaming consideration prior to the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 41. The distinction laid down by Pollock, C. B. must also be borne in mind, that such a plea would only be an answer to an action on an express contract, and not to one founded upon a contract implied in law, or for the supply of necessaries, on which ground Baxter v. Earl of Portsmouth (5 B. & C. 170) was decided.

An ingenious but unsuccessful attempt was made in Nordenstrom v. Pitt (4 Law T. 357), to bring error upon the common count for interest, for not alleging that the money was forborne at interest.

In an action for a deceitful representation on a sale, e. g. of the goodwill of a trade, not guilty puts in issue the sale as well as the deceit. (Mummery v. Paul, 4 Law T. 373.)

PRACTICE.

There are numerous points of practice which are to be recorded in the present review. As before, we have arranged them alphabetically.

Acceptance of costs.—Acceptance of costs under a judge's order, after a rule nisi has been obtained to rescind it, precludes the party receiving them from making it absolute. (Simmons v. King, 4 Law T. 355.)

Affidavit.—It was held in Cass v. Cass (4 Law T. 315), by the Court of Common Pleas, that it is no objection to the jurat of an affidavit that it states the affidavit to be sworn at the judge's chambers in the county of Middlesex, without there is an affidavit that there is no place in Middlesex called the judge's chambers. Similar allegations are required when a writ of summons is objected to as not containing the name of the county. (Lewis v. Newton, 4 D. P. C. 355.)

Amendment of record.—Melhuish v. Richardson (7 B. & C. 819), followed by the recent case of Cheese v. Scales (1 D. & L. 657; 2 Law T. 426, 448), establishes beyond question that each Court of Record has full jurisdiction over its own records, and that the propriety of amendments made in them cannot be disputed in a court of error. But in Jackson v. Galloway (4 Law T. 334), the Court of Common Pleas expressed their strong opinion, that, after the Court of Error has pronounced judgment, the power of amendment ceases. No case but Rex v. Carlile (2 B. & Ad. 302) was cited in which such an amendment had been made. It was there done with the consent of the Crown,—which would, we apprehend, make no difference, for consent cannot give jurisdiction—but it is remarkable, that subsequently an application to the Court to allow Rex v. Carlile to be reheard, was refused (2 B. & Ad. 971), as was stated, because they doubted whether they had any power, even with consent, to alter the judgment of a preceding Term, and no precedent could be found. It would be strange then, if, not possessing the power to alter the judgment, they should be able to amend and alter the issues to which the judgment refers, and so indirectly alter the judgment. In the principal case, even admitting the power, the lapse of two years was a sufficient answer.

Error.—A defendant who non pros's a plaintiff in error is entitled to enter the writ of error and the judgment upon the original record, under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 70. (Reg. v. Birch, 4 Law T. 292.) The defendant in error is bound to allow the plaintiff to have access to the postea, in order to complete the roll, or the plaintiff may himself bring in the roll and obtain a rule to compel them to complete it; but he cannot, before it is brought in, obtain such a rule. (Newton v. Holford, 4 Law T. 331.)

Judgment non obstante veredicto. — Judgment non obstante veredicto cannot be obtained where the other party is entitled to judgment upon the whole record. The loss of costs which may result from this is the punishment of the party for not demurring. (Willoughby v. Willoughby, 4 Law T. 320; Harvey v. Pritchard, 4 Law T. 338.)

New Trial.—Wait v. Simeon (4 Law T. 295, 338) was a novel application to the Court to allow a judge's order for stay of proceedings on payment of debt and costs, drawn up with the consent of the parties, to be rescinded, on the ground that the defendant had since obtained the evidence necessary to prove the pleas alleging gambling consideration. The order was rescinded on payment of costs, the sum claimed to be paid into court, and bear interest at 5 per cent. if the plaintiff ultimately succeeded. As Alderson, B. suggested, it was like a motion upon new facts after verdict; but it seems to be opposed to the case of Hall v. West (1 Dowl. & Lownd. 421; 2 Law T. 295), where the Court of Exchequer held, that they had no power to alter or rescind a judge's order which contained the words "by consent," although, in fact, they had been improperly inserted. Possibly, in the principal case these words were not inserted, a point on which we should be glad to be informed.

Where the substantial object of a new trial moved for by the plaintiffs, is to enable them to increase their damages, the Court will impose upon them the payment of the costs, although it might also have been obtained for the improper objection of evidence. (The Fishmongers' Company v. Robertson, 4 Law T. 313.)

Where the attorney for the plaintiff expressly swore at the trial that he was retained by him, the defendant may obtain a new trial upon an affidavit of the plaintiff himself that the statement was false. (De Bernardy v. Grimston, 4 Law T. 314, 399.)

New trial cannot be had by one defendant only.—There is some conflict between the cases on this point (Chitty's Archb. 1099); but in Doe dem. Mudgeon v. Chapman (4 Law T. 419) it was laid down that one defendant dissatisfied with the verdict should move to set it aside as to all. The reason, however, given in Price v. Harris (10 Bing. 331), where a motion by the plaintiff to set aside the verdict as to some of the defendants, was granted, would still seem to apply where the plaintiff moves; for it would be hard if, because one defendant has been improperly joined, that therefore a manifestly wrong verdict as to the others should be allowed to stand.

After trial before sheriff.—Where a motion for a new trial in an action tried before the sheriff is applied for solely as being against evidence, the rule laid down by the judges (4 M. & Scott, 485) requiring an affidavit of the circumstances, where no counsel was employed, does not apply; the sheriff's notes are quite sufficient. (Keening v. Ackerman, 4 Law T. 340.) It will be a sufficient answer by the defendant to a motion by the plaintiff for a new trial, because the verdict was against evidence, that leave was reserved to him to move to enter a nonsuit, if the Court see that such a motion, if made independently, would have been successful. (Mummery v. Paul, 4 Law T. 373.)

Payment into court.—In an action of trespass for breaking into the plaintiff's house and assaulting and beating his son, money may be paid into court. The assault and battery excepted in 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 21, means a personal injury to the plaintiff, and the exception of an action for debauching the plaintiff's servant or daughter excludes by implication an action for beating a servant. (Newton v. Holdford, 4 Law T. 358.) The Court will not allow a payment into court, by which the defendant seeks to bring himself within the protection of Lord Brougham's Act. (Brown v. Short, 4 Law T. 339.)

Relinquishment of plea.—More than a twelvemonth ago we brought before our readers the case of Hutton v. Turk (2 Law T. 74), which has not yet been reported anywhere else, by which it was decided that a plea may be withdrawn after it has been demurred to, but before joinder in demurrer, without payment of any costs. We then suggested —which we again repeat—that this stratagem of pleading should subject the party to costs; but as yet no rule of Court has been issued on the subject. In M'Intyre v. Miller (4 Law T. 358) a plea had been thus relinquished; but in making up the Nisi Prius record, the plea, the demurrer, and the relictâ verificatione were entered with the rest. After verdict, the defendant brought error, alleging that the plea had never been disposed of, and that the relictâ verificatione was a mere nullity. On a rule for execution, notwithstanding the writ of error, the case of Hutton v. Turk was cited by Bovill as amicus curiæ; but although the Court seemed to consider that the form adopted was authorized, yet they would not say that the objection to its insertion in the nisi prius record was manifestly frivolous. On a subsequent day, however, a summons was taken out before Mr. Baron Alderson to strike out the plea and proceedings from the record. He thought it too important a matter to be decided at chambers, and adjourned it to the Court then holding sittings after Term, where the other judges would sit as his assessors. (4 Law T. 376.) It was then decided that, after the relictâ verificatione, the proceedings ought not to have been entered upon the record. The amendment was, however, allowed, upon payment of the costs of the application and the writ of error (which included two other probably frivolous grounds), if abandoned in three days.

Repleader.—A repleader will not be granted after a verdict upon an immaterial issue, if other material issues going to the whole cause of action are disposed of upon the record. (Willoughby v. Willoughby, 4 Law T. 320.)

Resealing record.—It should be borne carefully in mind that, whenever a cause is made a remanet from one sitting to another, the record must be resealed before the commencement of the sitting to which it stands over. (King v. Tress, 4 Law T. 355; 9 Jur. 105.)*

Return day of writ of trial.—There is no limitation imposed in terms by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, as to the period within which a writ of trial is to be returned; but if the plaintiff inserts a day so distant as that the defendant will be prejudiced thereby, the Court will order the officer of the Sheriff's Court to return it earlier. (Billing v. Railton, 4 Law T. 359.) The writ of trial had been obtained on the 3rd of January, and the action tried on the 7th, but it was not returnable until April 15.

Security for costs.—Before issue joined, it is not essential in an application for security for costs, that it should be made as soon as the knowledge of the plaintiff's residence abroad is acquired. (West v. Cook, 4 Law T. 375.) A defendant, under an interpleader rule, may move for security for costs like any other defendant. (Benazech v. Bessett, 4 Law T. 374.)

Suggestion to deprive plaintiff of costs.—It was thrown out by Mr. Justice Williams (1 Dowl. & Lownd. 820) that a motion for a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of costs should be made within the same time as a motion for new trial; but in Harding v. Howard (4 Law T. 341) Mr. Justice Wightman said that the motion was in time after that period had elapsed, if before final judgment and taxation of costs. (See 4 D. P. C. 157, and Review, suprà, vol. 2, 447.)

Writ of summons.—Although it is not essential that the residence of the defendant be correctly stated (Windham v. Fenwick, 11 M. & W. 102), yet the place of the supposed residence must be described to be within the right county, and, therefore, a writ directed to T. H. of Wilson-street, Finsbury, in the city of London, is irregular. (King v. Hopkins, 4 Law T. 339.) In the same case it was held that the person at whose house a writ has been left for the purpose of supporting a distringas is entitled to treat it as a service upon him, and to apply to set it aside as irregular. So in Stevenson v. Thorne (2 Dowl. & Lownd. 230; 3 Law T. 205) a party was held to be entitled to set aside an irregular writ which had been served upon him, although in the affidavit he described himself differently from the description given in the writ.

PRISONER.

Charging prisoner in execution.—The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, which abolished the Fleet Prison, and constituted the Queen's Bench Prison the only prison for debtors, has not altered the practice as to charging in execution a prisoner in custody on a criminal charge. The Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer had no such power, because they were unable to change the custody and commit the defendant again upon the criminal matter. (Jones v. Danvers, 5 M. & W. 234; Chitty's Archb. 854.) And in the Queen's Bench the practice was for the party to be brought up by a writ issued out of the Crown side of the court. This disability of the other courts and the practice in the Queen's Bench still exist. (Gibb v. King, 4 Law T. 292.)

In execution for costs in ejectment.—But for the fact that the point was again raised in Doe dem. Simons v. Rice (4 Law T. 340), we should have thought that it was quite clear that the 48 Geo. 3, c. 123, applied to prisoners in execution for nominal damages and costs in ejectment. (Doe v. Reynolds, 10 B. & C. 481, to the contrary, has long been overruled by Doe v. ——, 1 D. P. C. 69; Doe v. Sinclair, 5 Ibid. 615; and Doe v. Ward, Ibid. 290; Doe v. Payton, 7 Ibid. 671.)

STAMP.

The following singular document was put in to support a plea of accord and satisfaction in an action for seduction, and was held to require only an ad valorem stamp:—"Received of A. B. (the defendant) by the hand of his friend, the sum of 10*l.* in addition to the various amounts received of him at different times, in consideration of any favours conferred or services rendered to him by either of us at any time during our acquaintance; and which sum we hereby acknowledge to be ample remuneration, and we beg to return him our best thanks for the same." The defendant had a verdict.

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY.

Warrants executed abroad.—A decision of great practical importance was given in Davis v. Trevanion (4 Law T. 341), in which case a warrant of attorney executed in France was set aside because not duly attested according to the provisions of the statute. The statute, said Wightman, J. applies to all warrants of attorney whatsoever and wheresoever. This is in accordance with the principle, that a contract, which, on the face of it, is to be performed in a country different from that in which it is made, is governed by the laws of the country where it is to be performed. A debt contracted in France, with French interest to be paid in England, could not be enforced in England if the English laws of usury applied. (See Story, Conflict of Laws.)

Attestation.—The attesting attorney must be named by the defendant, that is, the circumstances must shew that he has exercised a free choice, although he did not name him in the first instance. (See cases, 1 Law T. 612.) But, in consequence of the nice objections that have been raised to attestations, it has become not uncommon to insert in the body of the warrant a statement that the defendant has expressly named the attorney to attest, and for the defendant to repeat the formula of appointment before the execution. This prudent course should always be adopted. In Walton v. Chandler (4 Law T. 374) it was considered sufficient, in the absence of fraud, although the attesting witness was the brother of the plaintiff's attorney. In no case should the agent to the plaintiff's attorney be the attesting witness, for, after Prior v. Swaine (3 Law T. 332; 2 Dowl. & Lownd. 37), the risk of its being set aside would be very great.

WILL.

Estate of trustees.—The dictum of that learned judge, Mr. Baron Parke, in Barker v. Greenwood (4 M. & W. 421), that whenever there is a limitation to trustees by the words of inheritance, the trustees are to take only so much of the legal estate as the purposes of the trust required has received the stamp of judicial authority in the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in Adams v. Adams (4 Law T. 395).

WITNESS.

An attachment will not issue against a party in a civil cause for endeavouring to influence a witness not to attend at the trial. (4 Law T. 340.)

* We understand the correctness of this report has been doubted by one of the taxing masters. We wish, therefore, to state, that having heard the motion for the rule, and the argument when it was made absolute, and also referred to the authorities cited, we have no doubt that it is correct.

THE PROPERTY LAWYER.

NOTES ON CONVEYANCING CASES.

Several cases have recently been decided in the courts of common law which demand the conveyancer's attention. There is no part of his duty which requires more anxious attention than the consideration of informal and untechnical instruments.

Where a title has passed repeatedly under the review of counsel, in consequence of sales or mortgages, all is usually smooth enough; but where from any cause the title has not been sifted, irregularities occur with which it is not easy to deal. On the one hand it is most desirable not to magnify mere intechnicalities into serious difficulties of title,—for in our complicated system doubts are more easily raised than allayed,—so, on the other hand, no objection of substance must be overlooked. Questions of considerable nicety often arise upon the operation and construction of covenants, for the solution of which a reference to first principles and early decisions becomes necessary. A case involving the effect of covenants is therefore always important to the practitioner.

Warranty: Implied and express covenants.—In the case of Williams v. Burrell and Another (4 L. T. 415), this subject received a full and satisfactory judicial decision.

There, lessees of the settled estates of the late Earl of Egremont having been evicted by the successor to the title and the estates, by reason of the defective execution of the power under which it was intended to grant the leases which had proved invalid, the evicted lessees filed their bill in Chancery against the executors of the late earl for recovery of the value of the tenements from which they had been evicted. The cause coming on for hearing before the Master of the Rolls, a case as to the effect and construction of the warranty or covenant contained in the lease was stated for the opinion of the Court of Common Pleas. The case set forth the lease, and the circumstances under which the lessees were evicted. The material part for our present purpose is the following clause contained in each lease.

And the said earl, for himself, his heirs, and assigns, the said demised premises, with the appurtenances, unto the said J. W. his executors, administractors, and assigns, under the rent; covenants, conditions, exceptions, and agreements before expressed, against all persons whomsoever lawfully claiming the same, shall and will, during the said term, warrant and defend.

The lessees, under the direction of the executors, had defended their possessions, and the executors had paid the taxed costs of the present Earl of Egremont; but the lessees had been left to pay the mesne profits, and their own costs, and had received no compensation for the loss of their interests in the tenements. There were two questions stated; first, whether J. W. the lessee, was entitled to recover, under the warranty or covenant above stated, from the executors of the late earl, the amount of the mesne profits paid to the present earl, the lessee's costs, and the value of his interest in the tenement. Secondly, whether the assignee of a similar lease, who had been evicted under the same circumstances, was entitled to recover such amounts from the late earl's estate. And thirdly, whether the evicted leaseholders were entitled to interest upon such amounts. It was admitted that the clause was not, in the technical sense of the term, a warranty, because a legal warranty is only applicable to freehold interests; but, for the plaintiffs, it was contended that the term "warrant and defend" used in the above clause constituted an express covenant for quiet enjoyment, and that "during the term" meant the full term affected to be demised by the invalid lease, not that interest which the lessor, the late earl, could lawfully grant, namely, during his own life. The authorities referred to on both sides will be found in our report. On the part of the executors, it was insisted that the clause amounted only to a covenant in law, and was therefore confined to the lessor's own acts, or to acts which had taken place during his own estate; that it rested upon the plaintiffs to shew that this was an express covenant on the part of the lessor; and that, notwithstanding the cases cited for the plaintiffs, this might be only an implied covenant, which was likened to a covenant in law. There was no breach of the covenant in the late earl's lifetime, and the obligation was, that, when called upon, he would warrant and defend. As regarded the lease, of which the assignee of the original lessee was ejected, it was contended that an assignee could only sue by reason of priority of estate, and here the priority of estate ceased before the breach, that is, on the death of the late earl.

The Court determined, that the clause was not a covenant in law, but either an express or implied covenant; there being no distinction in legal effect between them, which bound the estate of the lessor to make good the interest which the leases affected to grant; and that an assignee of such a lease was equally entitled with an original lessee to recover all the sums claimed except interest. In stating the opinion of the Court, Tindal C. J. after going over the facts said that the clause

> Could not be strictly and properly a warranty; and indeed the authority Co. Lit. 389 is clear upon that point. A warranty in such sense can neither be pleaded in law, nor can the party to whom the warranty is granted vouch, as he may when it is annexed to a real estate.
> That such a warranty was also admitted to be, when annexed to a chattel interest, in the nature of a covenant for quiet enjoyment. That the defendants contended it was only an implied covenant, or more properly a covenant in law only, and therefore extending no further than for quiet enjoyment during the continuance of the interest which passed by law under the demise, namely, for the life of the lessor only. The plaintiffs contended that it amounted to an express covenant. His lordship then proceeded:
> It appears to us that some confusion has arisen from want of distinguishing with sufficient accuracy between covenants in law and implied covenants, and from the use of these terms indiscriminately for each other. A covenant in law is, properly speaking, an agreement which the law infers, from the use of certain words of grant having a known legal operative force, as the word dedi in a feoffment, or demisi in a lease; and these words, after having had a direct operation in creating an estate, have a new and secondary operation given to them, and are held to form a covenant by the feoffor or lessor for the quiet enjoyment of the estate which they have already created.

This is plain and distinct. It will be remembered that the occurrence of such covenants in law as applied to instruments executed after the commencement of the present year, will be rendered less frequent, by the effect of the 6th section of the "Act to simplify the transfer of property" (7 & 8 Vict. c. 76). The words "grant" or "exchange" will not create any covenant by implication except in any cases where, by Act of Parliament, it shall be declared that the word "grant" shall have such effect. The Chief Justice thus states the nature of an implied covenant:—

> A covenant of this nature (covenant in law) is sometimes, too, it would seem, improperly called an implied covenant; whereas an implied covenant, in its proper legal sense, is a covenant not formally stated in a deed, but which is collected by constructive inference from the terms used in it; and we think an implied covenant, in its proper sense, should not be distinguished in its effects or legal consequences from an express covenant. It is, indeed, a matter of construction in every case, to ascertain whether the intent to covenant in such or such a manner is sufficiently manifest in the words used in the instrument; but the intention once ascertained, the real effect and consequences of such implied covenants as are not in any manner affected by the clearness or obscurity of the terms employed; such a difficulty, if overcome, in arriving at the construction, an implied covenant, in its proper sense, differs in no respect from a covenant which is expressed; and we think a covenant arising from the terms of the warranty is not, as contended for by the defendants, a covenant in law, but is, in the proper sense of the word, an implied covenant, to be construed in the same manner, and attended with the same result, as an express covenant for quiet enjoyment.

And after going through the authorities in support of the opinion of the Court, his Lordship said—

> Therefore, both on principle and authority, we think this is an express covenant for quiet enjoyment, which extends to the term purported to be granted; consequently the defendants are liable thereon as executors of the covenant.

So the assignee of a similar lease had the same right of suing on this covenant as the original lessee; and, as in Spencer's case (5 Rep. 16), it was held that a covenant in law for title would pass with the estate, there was neither principle nor authority to shew that an express covenant, either for title or quiet enjoyment, would not equally pass and be available by the assignees of the lessee or the executors of the assignee. The liability of the executors for the mesne profits and value of the term was held "too clear for discussion," and they were also held liable for the costs upon the particular circumstances. It is scarcely necessary to observe, that, although such a covenant as we have here serve as a "plank in shipwreck," no one could be advised to place much reliance upon it as a protection against an apprehended defect of title; for it is clear that, in ordinary cases, the evicted holder's costs could not be recovered, and these costs may constitute a very serious part of the loss.

A second case of covenant was Hopkinson v. Lee (4 Law T. 395), decided in the Queen's Bench, where it was held that if the interest is joint, an action of covenant must be brought in the names of the joint covenantees, although it was expressly stated that the covenant was "a distinct covenant with and to the other covenantee."

This shews the care which should be bestowed upon covenants, especially when, as in the case of Hopkinson v. Lee, the object of the covenant was to protect a party from a covenant by way of surety into which he had entered. W.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—BANKERS.

A question lately occurred whether the Statute of Limitations be applicable to the case of an account between a banker and his customer. In order to determine it, it became necessary to consider what the legal relation between the parties is. It has frequently been said, but more in argument than decision, that money paid into a bank is a deposit; that the banker is a sort of bailee or trustee for his customer, and that the relation is one of personal confidence, and not of contract. However consonant this may be with popular opinion, it is nevertheless clear that, in the eye of the law, the banker and his customer are regarded as debtor and creditor. Thus, in Carr v. Carr (1 Mer. 541, n.), the question was whether, under a bequest of debts, a bill of exchange payable to the testator and lodged at his banker's, and also a cash balance due to him on his banking account, would pass? The Master of the Rolls (Sir Wm. Grant) held that both passed. He was clear, he said, that the bill of exchange passed. He had entertained some doubt on the other point, but thought that the money which had been paid into the banker's ought also to pass as a debt. "This was not a depositum. A sealed bag of money might, indeed, be a depositum; but money paid in generally to a banker could not be so considered." He observed, "that money had no ear-mark; but when money is paid into a banker's, he always opens a debtor and creditor account with the payor. The banker employs the money himself, and is liable merely to answer the drafts of his customer to that amount. This would clearly support a commission of bankruptcy; it would not pass by the description of ready money (sed, vide infra); and therefore it must be considered as a debt, and pass by that description." So in the case of Devaynes v. Noble (1 Mer. 568), the same learned judge said, "There is a fallacy in likening the dealings of a banker to the case of a deposit, to which in legal effect they have no sort of resemblance. Money paid into a banker's becomes immediately a part of his general assets, and he is merely a debtor for the amount." Again: the Court of Queen's Bench, in Sims v. Bond (5 Bar. & Ad. 392), laid down that sums which are paid to the credit of a custom: with a banker, though usually called deposits, are in truth loans by the customer to the banker. (See also, to the same effect, Parker v. Marchant, 1 Y. & C. N. C. 307; and, on appeal, 1 Phil. 361.) The same doctrine has been clearly followed out by the Lord Chancellor in the case of Foley v. Hill (1 Phil. 399). The facts were shortly these: In 1829 the plaintiff opened a banking account with the defendants, and paid into their hands 6,117*l*. 10*s*. for which they sent him a receipt, inclosed in a letter, in which they agreed to allow interest at 3 per cent. upon the balances from time to time in their hands. The defendants subsequently drew two cheques on the bank, but no dealing took place, and no entry was made in the bank books, after the year 1831. The bill was filed in January, 1838, for an account, &c. The defendants relied on the Statute of Limitations. The Lord Chancellor allowed the defence, on the grounds that the balance due was a debt from the defendants to the plaintiff; that at law the statute might be pleaded, and that it was equally available in courts of equity, which he said, adopting the doctrine of Lord Redesdale in Hovenden v. Lord Annesley (2 Sch. & Lef. 607, 630), act not merely by analogy to the statute, but in obedience to it.

Having in our quotation from Carr v. Carr, given Sir Wm. Grant's dictum that a general cash balance at a banker's will not pass under the description "ready money," it is necessary to state that the contrary has lately been decided by Vice-Chancellor Bruce, and on appeal by the Lord Chancellor, in the case of Parker v. Marchant before referred to. (See also Vaisey v. Reynolds, 5 Russ. 12; Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Jur. 401.)

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Holidays at the Law Offices.—The whole of the common law and Chancery offices were closed on Good Friday, and will so remain till Tuesday in next week, those days being holidays appointed to be kept by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42; and by a rule of court signed by all the judges those days are not to be reckoned in computation of time for pleading in any action or rules and notices, with the exception of notices of trial, and the execution of writs of inquiry. In all cases where parties have been served with copies of writs to appear in eight days, if the last of those eight days should happen to fall on either of the above-mentioned days, then by the Uniformity of Process Act, next Wednesday, being the Wednesday in Easter week, is to be taken and considered as the last of such eight days for entering an appearance.

Taxing Master of the Court of Bankruptcy.—The vacancy created in the office of taxing master in this court by the death of the late D. H. Richardson, esq. has not yet been filled up. The appointment, which is a very important and lucrative one (the salary being 1,200*l*. per annum), is in the gift of the Lord Chancellor.

Trade of the United States.—The annual report of the Secretary of the United States Treasury is just out. The exact imports and exports for the year ending June 30, 1844, vary but little from the account published in December last. They stand thus:—Domestic exports from the United States, 1844, 99,715,179 dollars; foreign goods re-shipped, 11,527,248 dollars; total, 111,243,427 dollars. Imports into the United States 1844, 108,434,935 dollars. Balance in favour of the United States, 2,808,492 dollars. Vessels cleared from the United States in 1844:—American ships, &c. 8,148; foreign, 5,577; total, 13,725. The above were navigated by 153,407 men, and 4,425 boys.

Judges' Chambers.—Mr. Baron Rolfe, the vacation judge, will sit as usual to-day, and Monday and Tuesday next, notwithstanding the whole of the common law offices will be closed.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

This Society has petitioned for a repeal of the Certificate Duty. The following are the allegations of the petition:—

"That by the Act 25 Geo. 3, c. 80, for granting duties on certificates to be taken out by solicitors, attorneys, and others, every attorney, solicitor, and proctor was required to take out an annual certificate on which, if he resided in London or Westminster, or within the Bills of Mortality, there was charged a stamp duty of 5*l*. and if he resided in any other part of Great Britain, a stamp duty of 3*l*.

"That such annual certificate duties have by various Acts been increased, and ultimately, in 1815, by the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, the following annual duties were imposed upon every attorney, solicitor, and proctor:—

"On those practising within the limits of the twopenny post, who have been admitted for three years or upwards	12
"On those not admitted so long	6
"On those residing elsewhere who have been admitted three years	8
"On those not admitted so long	4

"That by the last-mentioned Act a stamp of 120*l*. is also charged upon all articles of clerkship to an attorney, solicitor, o. proctor, and a further duty of 25*l*. upon his admission.

"That by a return made to your Honourable House by the registrar at the Stamp Office, bearing date the 22nd May, 1833, the number of attorneys, solicitors, and proctors who paid the stamp duties for their certificates from Easter Term 1819 to Easter Term 1820, was 6,764, and the amount received for such duties was 57,646*l*.; and from Easter Term 1832 to Easter Term 1833 the number of certificated attorneys, solicitors and proctors was 9,221, and the sum received for certificates, 79,006*l*.

"That the number of certificates issued by the registrar of attorneys and solicitors appointed by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, between the 15th November, 1843, and the 15th November, 1844, was 9,001, and the amount of certificate duty paid thereon in that year was 90,000*l*. or thereabouts.

"That it appears by a return made to your Honourable House, pursuant to an order dated 6th June, 1833, that the duties on 540 articles of clerkship to attorneys and solicitors received between Easter Term 1832 and Easter Term 1833 amounted to 64,800*l*.

"That such duties since that time have increased in proportion to the number of certificates issued.

"That the annual sum of 9,000*l*. or thereabouts, is also paid on the admission of attorneys, solicitors, and proctors into the superior courts.

"That the stamp duties so paid for articles of clerkship, admissions, and certificate duty, amount to the sum of 179,000*l*. annually.

"That no profession except that of your petitioners is charged with similar stamp duties, nor are the same nor any annual stamp duties imposed on the higher branch of the legal profession.

"That such duties are not founded on any just principle of taxation, and are partially and unequally borne."

YORKSHIRE LAW SOCIETY.

At a general meeting of the Yorkshire Law Society, held at Lockwood's Hotel, Pavement, York, on Friday, the 14th March, 1845, G. H. Seymour, esq. President, in the chair.

After the ballot for new members, the following Report of the Committee was read:—

During the period that has elapsed since the last general meeting, held Summer Assizes 1844, little has happened to engage the attention of the committee, nor have the proceedings of Parliament materially increased the business before them, no measures having been introduced during the present session directly affecting the profession.

The Ecclesiastical Courts and County Courts Bills, introduced last session, have been for the present abandoned; this the committee regret, as the former provided for many real improvements upon the present system, and they cannot but ascribe the postponement of these Bills to an influence more in favour of centralizing professional business in the metropolis than of the public advantage.

The committee have good cause to congratulate the members of the society on the formation of a General Association of Provincial Law Societies, which took place on the 11th January last, at Manchester. At the meeting held on that occasion, deputations attended on behalf of many provincial societies, comprising a very large proportion of the country solicitors, not only of the northern and midland counties, but the southern counties of Kent and Somersetshire were represented at the meeting.

The resolutions of the meeting forming the Association were advertised in the Law Times, and will no doubt have been seen by the members of this society; the committee have since framed rules for the management of the Association, a copy of which is laid on the table with this report.

The committee hope the members of this society will agree with them in thinking that it is essential that the Association of Provincial Law Societies should be entirely unconnected with the Metropolitan Law Association; for, although on many subjects they will, no doubt, be able to co-operate with the latter, there are matters relating to the profession resident in the provinces which require their especial attention; and it can hardly be doubted that if an association like the one now formed had been in existence at the time of the passing of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, the clause which led to numbers of country solicitors travelling to London to get admitted in the courts would, by its vigilance, have been amended so as to have rendered such trouble and expense unnecessary.

The committee have pleasure in stating that the management of the newly-formed Association has been placed in able hands, and they look forward to its success with confidence.

In conclusion, it is with considerable gratification that the committee mention the fact that the president of this society has been elected the first president of the Association of Provincial Law Societies; they hope, in that character he will be the first of a long line of distinguished ornaments of the profession.

York, 14th March, 1845.

THE LAW SOCIETY'S CHARTER.

Our readers will have observed several notices in the daily papers regarding a caveat against a new charter to the Law Society, the hearing of which before the Lord Chancellor was from time to time deferred, on account of other pressing cases.

We are glad to say that the matter in dispute has been settled. It was, perhaps, scarcely to be expected that 1,300 lawyers would agree in opinion on any subject. By some concessions, however, on both sides, an arrangement has been effected, the caveat withdrawn, and the new charter passed to the Great Seal on Friday, the 14th instant, the charter bearing date the 26th February, when the caveat was lodged.

By the new charter, (to which we may hereafter advert), the joint-stock character of the society has been abrogated. Shares to the amount of 8,000*l*. and upwards have been presented by the members to the corporate body, and each member also relinquishes one share, by way of admission fee, into the new society.—Legal Observer.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOLICITORS' BANK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I have read your remarks as to the formation of a Solicitors' Bank with pleasure, as I have long thought such an institution ought to be formed, but I think it will not be complete unless it conducts all the ordinary business of a bank, confining its customers, however, to members of the Profession.

Every solicitor has during the year payments to make in town, and it would, I have no doubt, be to his advantage to keep a banking account with a bank in which he would feel an interest, and thus be enabled to make such payments without paying his country bankers their commission in doing so for him.

The transactions above referred to would, of course, be a source of profit to the bank, as, in addition to the claims made on all business transacted by bankers for their customers, the balances remaining to the credit of the parties keeping accounts would be so much additional capital with which to make loans, and the general business of banking would not, I should think, materially increase the expenses of working the institution.

I am, &c.

George Bell, Junr.

Welford, March 3, 1845.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

[We have been obliged, for want of space, to omit the beginning of the following letter:—]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

With what hurry was the Act of last session passed. —Who knew its clauses as the Bill was in progress? —Did any law society watch?—Was the Argus-eyed body in Chancery-lane present there? It was inferred from the language and nature of the statute during a certain Parliament, that there were no lawyers in that Parliament. Perhaps the future historian will draw some similar inference from the session of 7 & 8 Vict. Recollect, too, that the author of the 20*l*. clause in this Act—not in my Lord Cottenham's Bill—was (I believe) stated in the House of Lords to be Mr. More O'Ferrall, an Irish member for the county of Kildare (who added it in that mysterious place, a select committee); so here was a piece of legislation affecting so many and such important interests, done by an Irish member of the Lower House, and now discovered by the law lords! The amendment is to come. If this is a shade better, it will be a recommendation. However, I am desirous of saying a few words to you on a part of your last admirable article on this subject, where you recommend that all debtors who do not pay, after notice, &c. should be treated as insolvent, and liable to be summoned before a commissioner of bankruptcy, and thereon subject to punishment, if fraud is proved. All this is so far good; the principle is excellent; who is to prove the fraud is the question, and where and when. The creditors are the persons who would be most likely to know of the existence of fraud, and could prove it; but unless the investigation into the affairs of the bankrupt is carried on in the place in which he has traded, and sympathy shewn to the creditor as well as the debtor, the regulation is useless; it is giving a person a ladder and destroying the steps. Creditors of bankrupts who live within a hundred miles of Basinghall-street must be at the expense of their journey to and fro, remaining there if they desire to look into the affairs of the bankrupt. Our town, with the neighbouring one of Portsmouth, numbers about 70,000 inhabitants, and yet if a bankruptcy occurs here or there, the creditors, who may fairly be supposed to live in the neighbourhood, have no opportunity (unattended with expense) of exposing fraud, or looking into the dealings of him whom they have trusted and found wanting.

The evil of the present system of districts is bad enough; pray avoid its extension. I could say more on this subject, but meanwhile I would suggest deliberation and deprecate haste.

I remain, &c. Edward K. Stace.

MAGISTRATES' CLERKS BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I think Mr. Trevor takes a one-sided view of section 12 in the Law Times of the 15th instant. I think the course of justice is open to great suspicion where clerks to the magistrates, or their partners, act as advocates before justices to whom they or their partners are clerks; and in illustration of my position I will mention two cases which have occurred to me in actual practice.

I appeared for a woman in a bastardy case, the defendant (a man of property) being represented by the partner of the clerk to the magistrates. The case was very strong against the defendant, but at the close of it the court was cleared, and the magistrates and their clerk were left to consider their decision, and after being closeted together for a considerable time, they dismissed the case.

In another case I lately appeared for the surveyors of highways, where they were summoned for non-repair of a road, which they contended was not a highway. The partner of the clerk to the magistrates appeared to prosecute. There was much discussion as to the law of the case, as to which the magistrates consulted their clerk. Again were the magistrates and their clerk closeted together, and the result was again unfavourable to my client.

Now, was the clerk to the magistrates in the above cases in the unbiassed position he ought to hold? In both cases my clients complained of the influence which was thrown into the scale against them by reason of the advocate on the other side being a partner of the legal adviser of the magistrates who had to decide the case. I do not wish to insinuate that any improper influence was actually used, but the course of justice ought to be above suspicion.

I have not a large sessions practice, and yet the above cases have happened in it within the last six weeks. Ex uno disce omnes.

I confess I think the 12th section of the bill not only just, but absolutely necessary, and I conceive that no one but a magistrate's clerk can think otherwise.

I am yours, &c.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE LAW TIMES.

Gentlemen,—You solicit opinions as to the cause of the great increase in the number of appeals against orders of removal.

So far as Yorkshire is concerned, I can state that the great inducement for parishes to appeal against orders of removal is, that nine in ten of every order appealed against may be upset on technical informality, either in the order, examination, or notice of chargeability. The consequence is, that the most grievous injustice is perpetrated at every quarter sessions, and parish-officers are continually declining to take out orders of removal, preferring the cost of maintaining the paupers rather than to take out orders, which, however well the case is made out on the merits, can be upset by legal ingenuity.

If the Editors of the LAW TIMES would supply a form of Order of Removal, which shall be invulnerable, they would thereby do more to raise their position as distinguished lawyers than they imagine. At present it is a perfect matter of course that every order taken out is, by many parishes, appealed against, however clear the case may be on the merits. The policy of so doing, the returns in your last paper exhibit. Last year, of 1,751 orders appealed against, only 101 were confirmed.

I am, &c.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"A CONSTANT READER" prefers the following complaints:—

As your paper has always been open to receive and make known all professional grievances, I venture to mention two or three which must interest a great portion of your readers, viz. gentlemen who are candidates for admission as attorneys at the Incorporated Law Society. Those to which I allude are in the shape of fees, which are demanded not only from those who pass their examination, but from those also who are rejected. On leaving the articles of clerkship to be perused, a fee of ten shillings is demanded; and this is actually repeated as often as a gentleman may have to give notice of his intention to apply for admission (as in the case of his having been rejected), although the articles cannot require a second perusal, and in many cases have remained in the possession of the clerk of the society. But this is comparatively small when we look to the next, which is a fee of two guineas, demanded from all who are declared fit to be admitted. Now this last is universally allowed to be a most unjust tax. A gentleman must either submit to these impositions, or else forfeit his five years' service, his premium (perhaps 500*l*.), and the amount he has paid for stamp-duty; for his certificate from the examiners is not given unless these fees be paid. If there were any just ground for charging these, it certainly would not be a matter of complaint; but really, who can say to what purpose these fees are applied? Why are articled clerks to subscribe to and support a society composed of members of the Profession whose object it is to throw as much difficulty in the way of candidates for admission as they can, and whose interest it is to keep the Profession as thin as possible? The average number of attorneys admitted is rather more than 300 annually. This number will give the society about 800*l*. per year, exclusive of lectures and admission fees to their library, both of which will, in course of time, no doubt, be made requisites before a candidate can be considered fit for examination, as will appear by referring to the preliminary questions to each examination. These things should be taken up in a proper spirit by those who will, when admitted, perhaps exclaim vehemently against the taxes already imposed upon the Profession; and, while petitions are being got up in almost every part of the kingdom for the repeal of the certificate-duty, it will be well to look after a society like this, which will doubtless impose as large taxes as the certificate-duty itself, should it be repealed; and this is no doubt the reason why it is so busy in getting these petitions presented. The facility with which their Act of Parliament has been obtained, by which they say these fees are authorized to be taken, renders it imperative on the Profession to keep a sharp look-out.

IN fairness to both parties in the Profession, we give insertion to the following communication, signed "A SOLICITOR," on the Justices' Clerks Bill:—

The 12th section of the above Bill appears at present to excite much interest, and some gentlemen, who appear to fancy their "vested rights" are at stake, have already sounded the alarm. That the clerks to the justices have been very much in the habit of conducting prosecutions against prisoners committed for trial by magistrates whose clerk they are, is no doubt the fact; but, from an experience of some years, I can confidently assert that it is a system which places additional difficulties in the way of an accused person; and I have more than once heard it asked in court by persons not interested in the case (but who were surprised at the advice given to the Bench), if the clerk was not interested in the matter being sent to a jury. If it is a practice leading to abuse, the sooner it is remedied the better. The attention of the Legislature has been called to it more than once. And this Bill only proposes to carry out the principle of the 102nd section of the Municipal Corporations Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76), by which clerks to justices in boroughs are expressly prohibited from conducting prosecutions at assizes or sessions. I do not think this has been productive of any inconvenience to the public, or that there has been any difficulty experienced in filling the office with men of the first standing in their profession; and the Legislature will not, I am sure, now draw an odious comparison between officials in boroughs and counties. If the practice in boroughs has been found to work well, extend it to the counties; if otherwise, rescind it, and place the clerks in boroughs on the same footing as those in counties.

A SOLICITOR, using the signature "S. S." puts the following case of difficulty in procuring a Certificate of Naturalization by a person resident in Scotland, and seeks advice from any of our readers who may have had a similar case.

There appears to me to be an important omission in the "Act to amend the Laws relating to Aliens," 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66, relative to the administration of the Oath of Allegiance required to be taken by the 10th section of that Act.

By this section, after setting out the form of the oath, and that it shall be duly administered "before any of her Majesty's judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, or Court of Common Pleas, or master or master extraordinary in Chancery, and that the judge, or master or master extraordinary in Chancery, whether in England or in Ireland, before whom such oath may be administered, shall grant a certificate," &c.

I have a client resident in Scotland who is about to apply for a certificate of naturalization. It will be observed, on reference to the section in question, no provision appears to be made for administering the oath in that country; and I shall be obliged to any of your readers for his opinion as to whether such oath could be administered by any of the judges of the superior courts of Scotland, or whether it will be necessary for my client to come to England for the purpose of taking such oath.

It will be seen that throughout the Act, with the exception referred to, the words are Great Britain and Ireland; and that, in the section quoted, the authorities before whom the oath is to be taken are only those of the English and Irish Courts.

SATURDAY, MARCH 22, 1845.

THE HEIR-AT-LAW SOCIETY.

SOME month since we promised a revelation of the doings of this Society. That announcement called forth a letter of defiance from Mr. Ross. Notwithstanding his threats, we should have submitted to the public a case which would have exhibited its true character and connections, but that one or two of the documents in our possession, though such as to leave no moral doubt, might have been subjected to legal doubt, and, as our readers are aware, we have learned, by experience, that neither a man's handwriting, nor his name attached to a printed paper, is deemed sufficient to justify an assertion that they are what they appear; we have waited, therefore, for confirmatory evidence; but, as positive proof is rarely to be obtained in any case, so it has turned out in this; we cannot prove that names and handwritings are what they seem, because no witness beheld the movement of the pen, and now-a-days no evidence less than that will be deemed to justify publication.

However, though we may not yet make known the damning facts we hold, we are glad to diffuse, as widely as our opportunities permit, an exposure of the Society which has recently taken place at Guildhall. We slightly abbreviate the report in the daily papers.

GUILDHALL.—THE HEIR-AT-LAW SOCIETY.—Hugh Williams, the clerk of the Heir-at Law Society, again appeared before Sir James Duke, to answer the complaint of a poor man, named Bridger, who had come to London to prosecute a claim to an estate in the country, worth 40,000*l*. The charge was, that the society had received 2*l*. 4s. 6d. for the special purpose of taking counsel's opinion, and, in violation of good faith, had not so applied it.

Williams had attended on a previous day, when he stated that the manager, Mr. George Ross, was out town; and that, in fact, Mr. Ross knew nothing of the matter, as the complainant's money had been embezzled by a late clerk. The complainant having ascertained that the manager is a prisoner in the Queen's Bench, and not a visitor in the country, renewed his application.

Sir James Duke asked if Ross was now in attendance?

Williams replied he was not; but he was there on behalf of Mr. Ross and the society.

Sir James Duke said he had received letters from parties who complained that they had paid money and received no service from the society. If this was the practice of the society it bordered on swindling.

Williams said he was ready to answer any charge.

Sir James asked who Watson, the chairman, was?

Williams replied he was a gentleman.

Sir James Duke said that was no answer. If Mr. Watson was a respectable man, he need not shrink from publicity.

Williams replied that the proceedings were too public, and that was the reason he should not give names.

Sir James said Mr. Boyle, of the Temple, had come forward to disclaim being what Williams had represented, the standing counsel of the society.

Williams stated that he was the society's standing counsel now, cases were drawn, and submitted for his opinion. He produced the book in which the cases and opinions were entered, and said the society's early cases had been submitted to Mr. Barker. It was very easy to cast imputations.

Sir James Duke asked who Mr. Barker was.

Williams replied he was a barrister of long standing.

Sir James Duke said he was astonished the public could be led astray by a society which had attracted the notice of one of the Queen's judges, and pointed out as a fit object for prosecution by the Attorney-General.

Sir James Duke asked if Mr. Ross was still out of town?

Williams said he was. He had gone to Brighton.

Sir James asked when he saw him last?

Williams said he should not answer that question. There was no complainant in court, and was he to be examined, and to make a defence where there was no charge?

Sir James Duke said if he would tell who were the seven directors of the society, he would feel obliged.

Williams replied he would not tell, for the reasons he had already given.

Sir James hoped the public would be cautious in their dealings with a society, the directors of which shrunk from the disclosure of their names.

Williams said, of course they would be ashamed to see their names in a police report. Surely the case was not to be entered upon ex parte. Who accused the society? Had Sir James Duke any right to examine him (the clerk) at all?

Sir James Duke said the complainant had taken out the summons, and perhaps Mr. Williams could account for his absence.

Williams declared he had not compromised with the complainant, and if he now came for his money, perhaps the magistrate would order it should not be paid.

The aldermen called for Mr. Toole.

Mr. Toole said he would state his case. He had not exactly a complaint to make. He was at Hull some months ago, and he undertook to obtain an opinion on the claim of a poor man named Doughty. He obtained the opinion of an eminent practitioner, which was adverse, from want of certain papers. The poor man got more papers, and as a last resort placed them in the hands of the society. Upon paying the money, he obtained the following receipt:—

"Heir-at-Law Society, No. 358. Office, 14, Chatham-place, Blackfriars.

"Received the 13th of August, 1844, of Mr. Joseph Doughty, the sum of 2*l*. 4*s*. 6*d*. being the fee of counsel for opinion and advice herein. George Ross."

Williams, interrupting the complainant, asked what was the charge?—Toole said he did not make a charge.

Williams observed, that he had no right to be heard at all. He was not to cast imputations on the society if he had no charge. He protested in the strongest manner against any thing further being heard, as he had no charge to make.

Sir James said it was for him to judge whether there was ground of charge after hearing the circumstances.

Williams again formally protested against Mr. Toole being heard.

Mr. Toole, however, continued: Such a society, honestly conducted, would be a great benefit to society.

Williams said he was willing to return Mr. Toole the papers.

Sir James said he would not allow Mr. Toole to be interrupted. The time to reply was when he had finished.

The complainant continued.—After paying the fee, the client received a letter that his case would be submitted to counsel in its turn, but from August to March that turn had not arrived. A great many applications had been made at the office in Trafalgar-square, and Chatham-place, but no information had been obtained.

Sir James asked if an opinion had been taken on this case?

Williams referred to his book, but could not find one.

Sir James remarked that it would not have been difficult to manufacture an opinion, and affix any counsel's name to it. He asked Williams if he should read the opinion of the society, expressed by one of Queen's judges.

Williams protested energetically against any ex parte proceedings, or any expression of insinuations against the society.

Sir James Duke said it did not appear that the society had done anything in the case mentioned by Mr. Toole but give a receipt for the money. The gentleman sitting at his left hand, and whom Williams did not appear to know, was Mr. Boyle, whom he had misrepresented as being the standing counsel of the society.

Williams denied that he had so represented Mr. Boyle.

Sir James Duke said he gave the society credit for engaging a man of Mr. Williams's ingenuity and boldness.

Mr. Boyle begged to state that he was not the standing counsel for the society, or in any way connected with it. His opinion of certain cases had been obtained through a solicitor, in the ordinary manner. He had a list of the cases in which he had advised, and would show it to the alderman.

Sir James thanked him for his attention, and said it might be of some utility to print that list. It ran as follows:—"To advising on papers, Jan. 19, re Salomon; Jan. 19, re Pelham; Jan. 26, re Phillips; Jan. 29, re Barrott; Feb. 8, re Danvers; Feb. 14, re Crump; Feb. 15, re Haweis; Feb. 28, re Carew; March 5, re Wood; March 27, re Wood; May 29, re Salusbury; May 29, re Barnes; June 11, re St. Aubyn; June 11, re Meredyth; August 6, re Swinton; August 6, re Rawlins; August 6, re Eustace."

Mr. Tomkinson, of the Walworth-road, made a complaint, but in his case a legal opinion seemed to have been taken.

The chief clerk told Williams if he wished to see Mr. Ross, he might find him in the Queen's Prison; but Williams turned a deaf ear to it.

Sir James Duke, therefore, asked him if he wished to hear where Mr. Ross was?

Mr. Williams said no, he did not. It was shocking that there should have been an inquiry, when no charge was made. Such insinuations ought not to be permitted. The society was ready and able to answer every accusation that could be brought against it.

Sir James was glad to hear it, and discharged Mr. Williams from further attendance on Bridger's complaint.

From a prospectus dated 18'2, which was put in, it appeared the society was described as having a capital of 100,000*l*. in 100 shares of 1,000*l*. each, one half paid up, the other half made up of accumulating profits; rest, 25,000*l*.; established, 1839; conducted under the superintendence and management of seven directors (three being a quorum) and able assistants; George Ross, manager; W. H. Watson, chairman. A paper, which gives the resolutions of the committee held on the 9th November, 1841, states that the society have now placed by clients at their disposal various sums amounting to upwards of 800,000*l*. to be laid out in mortgage. Another prospectus, dated February, 1845, which was handed to the magistrate, gives the amount to be loaned on mortgage at only 500,000*l*., but it states that the society has 450 claims relating to property amounting to 20,000,000*l*. under consideration.

Here we have the names of Mr. Barker and Mr. Boyle figuring as standing counsel to this association of ——— (let the reader add whatever epithet he deems it to deserve). Mr. Boyle, however, publicly repudiates the "greatness thrust upon him." But where is Mr. Barker?

Since Mr. Barker has not yet put in his denial, we beg to ask him two questions; we do not put them without a reason, and we hope, for his own sake, he will favour the Profession with a reply. First, "Has he ever given his opinion upon cases submitted by the Society, without the intervention of a solicitor, and with only the words 'Heir-at-law Society' indorsed?" Secondly, "Has he, in all instances, received a regular fee for such opinions; or has he shared, with Mr. George Ross, and Mr. R———, the so-called attorney for the Society, the profits of the business, in lieu of formal fees?"

We ask these questions, in hope that they will meet with an explicit reply in the negative, accompanied with such explanations as to the manner of the employment, the parties with whom the transactions took place, and the constitution of the Society, as Mr. Barker is doubtless competent to give. And we think that from both Mr. Barker and Mr. Boyle some further narrative is due to the Profession, not only to relieve themselves from the imputations which have attached to them by the report which we have published above, but to aid the Profession in investigations which will no doubt be now actively made for the purpose of revealing to the credulous public the true character of the Heir-at-law Society.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

From the Hull Advertiser of the 17th of January last, we take the following very tailor-like advertisement. Mr. William Henry Pearce has mistaken his profession.

WILLIAM HENRY PEARCE, Attorney-at-Law, 29, Vincent-street, Kingston-upon-Hull, solicits attention to the Act of Parliament which came into operation the Ninth Day of August last, since the passing of which a material alteration in the Law has taken place, and as the practice in the Court of Bankruptcy (where the debts do not exceed 300*l*.) will be as similar as possible to that in the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors (precisely the same form of Schedule being used and all other things to be done thereon being as nearly as possible assimilated to the practice in the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors), W. H. P. therefore begs to offer his professional services to persons in pecuniary difficulties, feeling assured that his constant and successful practice (upwards of ten years) in making up the Accounts of Insolvents and preparing their Schedules afterwards, will fully enable him to do the like in the Bankruptcy Court.

SHAM LAWYERS.

For the first time we have found some members of this tribe daring not only to act as attorneys, but to assume the title.

Quære, have not Messrs. Sanders and Co. upon their own confession, subjected themselves to the penalties of the Act?

Behold a copy of a card which we beg to submit to the consideration of the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association:—

LECTURES ON MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

By Alfred S. Taylor.

Delivered at Guy's Hospital, 1844.

Lecture X.

Arsenic in solution in water, is clear, colourless, possesses scarcely any perceptible taste, and has a very faint acid reaction. In this state, we should first evaporate a small quantity on a glass plate, slowly, when a confused crystalline crust will be obtained. On examining this crust with a common lens, it will be found to consist of numerous minute octohedral crystals, presenting triangular surfaces by reflected light. By this simple experiment, arsenic is distinguished from every other metallic poison:—1. On adding to the solution ammoniac-nitrate of silver, a rich yellow precipitate of arsenite of silver falls down, rapidly changing in colour to a greenish-brown. The test is made by adding to a very strong solution of nitrate of silver, a weak solution of ammonia, continuing to add the latter until the brown oxide of silver, at first thrown down, is almost re-dissolved. The yellow precipitate is soluble in nitric, tartaric, citric, and acetic acids, as well as in caustic ammonia; it is not dissolved by potash or soda. 2. On adding to the solution of arsenic ammonio-sulphate of copper, a rich green precipitate is formed, the tint of which varies according to the proportion of arsenic present, and the quantity of the test added. This test is made by adding ammonia to a solution of sulphate of copper, until the bluish-white precipitate at first produced, is nearly re-dissolved; it must not be used too highly concentrated, as it possesses a deep violet blue colour, which may render obscure the green precipitate formed. The precipitated arsenite of copper is soluble in all acids, mineral and vegetable, and in ammonia, but not in potash or soda. When dried and collected, it possesses this valuable property: by very slowly heating a few grains in a tube of small bore, arsenious acid is slowly sublimed, in a ring of minute resplendent octohedral crystals, oxide of copper being left as a residue.

An important medico-legal question has arisen, in relation to the tests for arsenic; namely, whether we can rely upon any tests for this poison, independently of its reduction to the metallic state;—is it absolutely necessary, chemically speaking, to obtain the metal, in order to say that arsenic is certainly present in an unknown case? There is a popular prejudice in favour of this metallic reduction; and courts of law, as well as the public, are disposed to regard the obtaining of the metal as the only conclusive proof of the presence of this poison. The acquittal of Donnall, at Launceston, in 1817, mainly took place from the circumstance that the medical witnesses could obtain no metallic arsenic; they trusted to the liquid reagents alone, and these had unfortunately been applied to coloured fluids mixed with organic matter. At a trial on the Norfolk Spring Circuit, 1833, the medical witness admitted that the metallic reduction would have been more satisfactory, but he had consumed the fluids of the stomach in applying the liquid reagents. This evidence, although not absolutely rejected by the Court, was not well received, and the prisoner was acquitted. This being a purely chemical question, must of course be answered on chemical principles; for it is chemical certainty that the law requires. If a white powder were presented for analysis, and it was found to possess distinctly the three first characters pointed out, could any chemist entertain a reasonable doubt that the powder was white arsenic? I think not. The reduction process might corroborate, but I do not see how it could add greater certainty to the results thereby obtained; and in heating such a powder with flux, the chemist knows that a metallic sublimate must of necessity be formed, for there is no white solid in the whole range of substances known to chemistry which possesses these properties. If we are so situated that we are obliged to rely upon one test only, then the process by reduction should be preferred. But even here, so many mistakes have been made relative to the supposed metallic crust obtained from an unknown solid, that Dr. Turner and others have recommended that it should always be reconverted to arsenious acid, in oxidating it by heat, and that the white solid thus produced should be tested by liquid reagents. If arsenic in the form of a sublimate were presented to a chemist, and he were required to state its nature, he would necessarily treat it in this way before expressing a judicial opinion; because its real nature could only be with certainty established by such experiments. In a case in which the particulars are entirely unknown, there is nothing in the physical characters of an arsenical sublimate to justify a witness in giving a positive opinion respecting it before he has submitted it to various chemical processes. It appears to me that the action of sulphuretted hydrogen and the characters of the resulting sulphuret, coupled with the negative effect of hydrosulphuret of ammonia, as clearly indicate the presence of arsenic, chemically speaking, as the obtaining of a metallic sublimate. Where the matter is at all doubtful, the sulphuret should be reduced; but in such a case, if a sublimate be obtained by the reduction of the sulphuret, the precise nature of this should be verified by gently heating it in a wide reduction tube under a free access of air.

Marsh's Test.—This test depends on the decomposition of arsenic, and its soluble compounds by hydrogen evolved in the nascent state, from the action of diluted sulphuric acid or zinc. The apparatus is of the most simple kind, and is so well known as to need no description; the arsenic may be introduced into the short leg of the tube in the state of powder; but it is far better to dissolve it in water by boiling, either with or without the addition of a few drops of caustic potash; the metallic arsenic combines with the hydrogen, forming arsenuretted hydrogen gas, which possesses the following properties:—1. It burns with a bluish-white flame and thick white smoke (arsenious acid). 2. A cold plate of glass held in the flame near the point receives a dark stain from the deposit of arsenic upon it; this stain is composed in the centre of pure metallic arsenic, which may be sometimes raised up in a distinctly bright leaf of metal. Immediately on the outside of this is an opake black ring (suboxide or hydruret of arsenic), which, when viewed by transmitted light, is of a clear hair-brown colour at the extreme edge. If the quantity of arsenic be very small, the metallic lustre and opacity may be wanting, and the whole stain will have this colour by transmitted light; on the outside of this black ring is a thin wide film of a milk-white appearance, which is nothing more than arsenious acid reproduced by combustion. 3. A white saucer moistened with ammonio-nitrate of silver, held about an inch above the flame, will be found, if arsenic be present, to be coloured yellow, from the reproduced arsenious acid vapour being absorbed, and forming yellow arsenite of silver, easily soluble in acetic acid and ammonia; unless the gas possess these properties, there is no certain evidence of the presence of arsenic in the liquid examined.

Marsh's test is undoubtedly one of great delicacy. MM. Danger and Flandin assert that metallic deposits may be procured when the arsenic forms only the 2,000,000th part of the liquid examined. M. Signoret states that he has procured metallic deposits with only the 200,000,000th part of arsenic in the liquid; this is in the proportion of one grain of arsenic dissolved in about 400,000 ounces, or 3,000 gallons of water. As the delicacy of this test has been already made a subject of discussion in a court of law (Reg. v. Hunter, Liverpool Spring Assizes, 1843), it may be proper to offer a few remarks respecting it. It was stated on that trial, that the one-millionth part of a grain of arsenic might be rendered visible by Marsh's test, and the judge, guided by this statement, put the question to another medical witness, whether arsenic could be so removed from the stomach in three days as that it would be impossible to discover the one-millionth part of a grain in the body. It appears to me the facts relative to the delicacy of tests are not always stated with sufficient clearness on these occasions. Thus we ought to know two points: 1st, the total quantity of poison experimented on; and, 2nd, the degree of dilution, or the total quantity of liquid in which the poison was dissolved or suspended. There is no doubt that considerably less than the millionth part of a grain of arsenic may, by Marsh's test, be rendered visible on a glass plate. It is possible to distinguish with the eye a piece of leaf gold which would weigh less than the ten millionth part of a grain; but the real question is, whether the test will discover arsenic in a single drop of solution, made by dissolving one grain of the poison in a million grains or sixteen gallons of water; if not, the statement amounts to nothing; for it is clear that if more than one drop of such an extremely diluted solution be taken, the test is acting upon a larger quantity of arsenic than the above form of expression would indicate. I have generally found that the fractional quantity stated to be detected referred rather to the degree of dilution than to the absolute quantity of poison present; whereas a test may fail to act, as we have already seen, either from the smallness of the quantity of poison present, or from the very large quantity of water in which it is diffused. The results of my own experiments are, that where the arsenic is mixed with the acid liquid in a tube capable of holding two fluid ounces, very faint and scarcely perceptible deposits begin to be formed on a glass plate with a quantity equal to the 2,160th of a grain; the diffusion here being equal to two million times the weight of the poison with the 1,080th of a grain in the same quantity of water, the arsenic forming, therefore, one millionth part. Slight brown annular stains were procured with the 720th of a grain, the arsenic being in the proportion of about the 800,000th of the liquid. The stains were much more decided, but quite imponderable, with the 100th grain in one fluid ounce of water (the 48,000th part), and the 67th grain in two fluid ounces (the 64,800th part), the deposits on glass were decided and characteristic; and it is at this point that the tests begin to be safely available for the purposes of legal medicine. The delicacy of Marsh's test has no doubt been sometimes improperly estimated by the assumed weight of the metallic deposit on glass; whereas it is probable that the quantity of arsenic in one such infinitesimal deposit—if transferred to the apparatus—would give no indication whatever of its presence. In these experiments it must be remembered that we are operating on the whole quantity of the poison, dividing and subdividing the metal into a series of deposits, the weight of some of which might not be equal to the millionth part of the weight of the arsenic which is actually furnishing them.

There are numerous objections to Marsh's test. Other substances will combine with nascent hydrogen, and when that gas is burnt, a deposit will be formed on glass which may be mistaken for arsenic. Late researches have shewn that a liquid containing antimony, tellurium, selenium, iodine, bromine, phosphorus, and sulphur, or some kinds of organic matter, may in this way produce an inflammable gas, and leave a deposit on glass. The only objection of any practical force is that founded on the presence of antimony. There are these differences between the arsenical and antimonial stains: the stain of antimony has not the bright metallic lustre which that of arsenic sometimes presents. By transmitted light it is of a smoky black, while that of arsenic is of a hair-brown colour. Although the antimonial burns like the arsenical flame, yet the third property is entirely wanting. If the ammonio-nitrate of silver be held over the antimonial flame, the silver is reduced; no yellow arsenite is formed, as in the case of arsenic. This last criterion distinguishes the arsenical flame from that produced by all the other bodies above mentioned.

Reinsch has lately discovered a very simple method of determining the presence of arsenic in liquids. We should add to the suspected solution a few drops of pure muriatic acid, and place in it a slip of bright copper. There is no change until the liquid is brought to the boiling point, when, if arsenic be present even in small quantity, the copper acquires an iron-grey coating from the deposit of that metal; this is apt to scale off if the arsenic be in large quantity. We remove the slip of copper, wash it in water, dry it, and gradually heat it in a reduction-tube, when arsenious acid will be sublimed in minute octohedral crystals; if these should not be apparent from one piece of copper, several may be successively introduced; this test succeeds perfectly with powdered arsenic, the arsenites, arsenic acid, the arseniates, and orpiment; it will even separate the arsenic from the arsenite of copper, and from common lead-shot; when the quantity of arsenic is small, the copper acquires a faint violet or blue coat, and the deposit is materially affected by the quantity of water present; or, in other words, the degree of dilution. But one great advantage is, that we are not obliged to dilute the liquid in the experiment, and there is no loss of arsenic, except as it may be removed by the introduction of successive portions of copper. This test failed to detect the 4,000th part of a grain of arsenic in thirty drops of water, the dilution being equal to 120,000 times the weight of the arsenic. The deposit on copper commenced with a violet-coloured film, when the quantity of arsenious acid was equal to the 3,000th part of a grain in thirty drops of water, or under a dilution of 90,000 times its weight. It was also very decided with the 2,000th part of a grain in the same quantity of water; but in neither of these cases could octohedral crystals of arsenious acid be obtained by heating the copper. The following experiments will shew how this test is liable to be affected by dilution:—The copper was coated in a few seconds when boiled in a solution containing the 4,000th part of a grain in ten drops of water, although the test had failed to detect the same weight of arsenic in three times that quantity of water. So again, the 2,160th part of a grain in thirty drops of water gave an arsenical deposit on copper, while the same weight in half an ounce of water did not produce any effect on the metal. Certain objections may be urged to this test. Thus it may be said that arsenic was present in the muriatic acid; this is at once answered by boiling the copper in a portion of the muriatic acid before adding the suspected liquid. A more important objection is, that other metals are liable to be deposited on copper under similar circumstances. Thus, this is the case with antimony, whether in the state of chloride, or of tartar emetic; nor is it always possible to distinguish, by the appearance, the antimonial from the arsenical deposit. Should the quantity of antimony be small, the deposit is of a violet tint; if large, of an iron-grey colour, exactly like arsenic. Tin and lead become tarnished under the same circumstances, but there is no decided metallic deposit. Bismuth produces a deposit very closely resembling that of arsenic. With respect to mercury and silver, a metallic deposit takes place in each case without boiling. In a salt of nickel or cadmium, the copper undergoes no change; hence this is another important distinction between cadmium and arsenic. Lastly, if an alkaline sulphuret, or sulphuretted hydrogen, be present in the liquid, the surface of the copper will become tarnished; but this effect takes place on contact, without boiling, and without rendering the addition of muriatic acid necessary. There is one answer to all these objections, namely, that from the arsenical deposit octohedral crystals of arsenious acid may be procured by slowly heating the slip of copper in a reduction-tube. If, while heat is applied to copper in a long piece of tube, drawn out at one end, a current of air be gently blown through it, a ring of white arsenious acid will be obtained; this may be filed off, boiled in water, and tested by the ammonio-nitrate of silver and sulphuretted hydrogen.

Arsenious acid, when in a state of solution, is not liable to be precipitated by any animal or vegetable principals; although all such substances render it less soluble in water. The liquid for analysis should be filtered through muslin, cotton, or paper, in order to separate any insoluble matters. Should it be coloured, this is of little moment, provided it be clear; if viscid, it should be diluted with water, and boiled with a small quantity of muriatic acid: on standing, a deposit may take place, and this should be separated by a filter. As a trial test, we may now boil, in a portion of the liquid, strongly acidulated with pure muriatic acid, a slip of bright copper. In a few seconds, if arsenic be present, this will acquire a grey metallic coating; if the copper remain unchanged, the arsenic, if present, must be in extremely minute proportion; if, on the other hand, the copper be covered by a grey deposit, it should be dried and heated in a reduction-tube in the way already described (Reinsch's test), in order to obtain from it octohedral crystals of arsenious acid. From several such slips of copper a quantity of metallic arsenic may be procured, sufficient, on reconversion to arsenious acid, to allow of a solution in water b'ing made, to which all the liquid tests may be applied. In this way the 144th part of a grain of arsenious acid was detected in two fluid drachms of gruel, milk, porter, and other organic liquids, in so many different experiments. It has also been thus easily separated from wine, brandy, and the liquid contents of the stomach of a person poisoned by arsenic. Here our analysis might be closed, if the object were to determine only the presence of arsenic; since a case can rarely occur in medico-legal practice, where it would be necessary to extract the whole of the arsenic from the fluid contents of the stomach. Having satisfied ourselves that arsenic is present, we may get rid of a portion of the organic matter by boiling the liquid with acetic acid, and filtering. Sulphuretted hydrogen gas may be then passed into it, and the precipitated sulphuret of arsenic collected. The sulphuret has sometimes a dark brown colour, from adhering organic matter; it is then better to transform it to arsenic acid by boiling it in nitro-muriatic acid, during which process the organic matter is entirely destroyed, and a solution of arsenic acid is obtained, and rendered fitted for testing, by digesting the evaporated residue in distilled water; or the sulphuret may be deflagrated with nitre, and arseniate of potash thereby obtained. In this case the surplus nitric acid should be driven off by sulphuric acid. An abundant deposit of metallic arsenic is procured by boiling the liquid, in either case, with muriatic acid and copper. In this way it is easy to analyse wine, coffee, tea, milk, porter, brandy, and similar liquids, for arsenic. Fowler's mineral solution, containing the arsenite of potash, may be thus examined; but in this case it would be better to resort at once to Reinsch's test: if the liquid for analysis should contain oil, this may be separated after boiling, by passing it through a wet filter. The result of a direct analysis is this: Two grains of arsenic were dissolved in half-a-pint of coffee. The liquid was rendered slightly alkaline by potash, in order to dissolve the arsenious acid, then evaporated, and the residue strongly heated. This residue was then digested in alcohol, to dissolve out any arsenite of potash present, and a solution of a pale straw-colour, amounting to about two drachms, was obtained. This was strongly acidulated with acetic acid, and again filtered. A current of sulphuretted hydrogen gas was passed into one half, and a yellow sulphuret soluble in ammonia was readily obtained, although sulphuretted hydrogen failed to detect the poison in the original coffee. The other half of the solution (one drachm) yielded also very satisfactory results with Marsh's test.

MANN v. RICKETTS.

Practice—Inrolment of decrees—Caveat—Entry—Uniform practice—General orders—Calculation by lunar or calendar months.

The question on this motion was, as to the existing practice with respect to the inrolment of decrees.

The decree in this cause was made by the Master of the Rolls, on the 23rd of February, 1843, and the docket was signed by the Lord Chancellor and the Master of the Rolls on the 15th of August following. The defendant presented a petition of rehearing, and when about to set down the cause before the Master of the Rolls, he found that the decree had been inrolled. The motion now made was to vacate the inrolment, on the ground that it had been made after the time within which inrolment could take place without an order nunc pro tunc, and that no such order had been obtained.

Two points were made: first, that Lord Clarendon's order, made respecting inrolments in 1671, was in force; and, secondly, that if that order had been modified by a modern practice, under which six months was the period for inrolment without the order nunc pro tunc, the six months of modern practice are lunar, and not calendar months.

Cooper and Kent, for the defendant's motion, on the first point contended that Lord Clarendon's order of 1671 had never been repealed, and was still in force. It directs "that all decrees, dismissions, &c. be drawn up, signed, and inrolled before the first day after the next Michaelmas or Easter Term after the same shall be pronounced respectively, and not at any time after without the special leave of the Court." (Beame's Orders, 205.) That order was stated (2 Dan. Ch. Prac. 679) to be still in force. The same thing is laid down in the older books of practice (2 Comyn's Digest, tit. Chancery, p. 312; Practical Register, 323; 1 Harrison's Chancery Practice, 322, Newland's edition, 1808). Here the decree, not having been inrolled by the last day of the Easter Term after it had been pronounced, it ought not to have been inrolled without an order. There is another order of Lord Clarendon's which relates only to the entry of decrees: "that all orders, &c. which shall be pronounced and made in Michaelmas and Hilary Terms, or the vacations after, be actually entered before the first day of Michaelmas Term then after; and that all orders, &c. which shall be pronounced in Easter and Trinity Terms, or the vacations after, be likewise entered before the first day of Easter Term then next following; and that no orders, &c. that shall not be so entered, shall be afterwards entered, but by the special order of the Court first had and obtained." (Beames, Orders, 290; Gilbert For. Rom. 163; Cherrill v. Martin, 4 Sim. 344; Attorney-General v. Newberry, C. P. Cooper's Reports.) On the second point they contended that, in the absence of any general order to the contrary, a month in this court meant a lunar month. (Robinson v. Newdick, 1 Merivale, 13.)

Hallett, contra, cited Barnes v. Wilson (1 Russ. & Myl. 486); Deloraine v. Brown (3 Bro. C. C. 643); 2 Smith's Chancery Practice, 5, 2nd edit. The practice is now that six months, that is six calendar months, are allowed for inrolling orders and decrees.

The Lord Chancellor.—In the case of Barnes v. Wilson I decided that the inrolment of the decree was to be deemed complete on the delivery of the documents to the messenger, for the purpose of being carried to the Lord Chancellor for inrolment; and I then consulted the six clerks, and received from them a certificate that such, in their opinion, was the practice. I understand that Vice-Chancellors Knight Bruce and Wigram require the cause to be reheard unless the minutes are spoken to within a limited time.

As to the two orders of Lord Clarendon, I am not sure whether the last, that of 1691, whether it does not include decrees; it would apply to decrees. But supposing the latter order only applies to the entry of decrees, there is no inconsistency between them. If the party is negligent in entering under the order of 1791, that does not prevent him inrolling the decree: but for that purpose he must obtain an order nunc pro tunc. I am told by the register that the practice is that decrees may be inrolled without an order nunc pro tunc within six months. If six months have been adopted by way of equalizing the periods under Lord Clarendon's orders, and that practice has been acted upon, as I am informed it has, for more than a century, such uniform practice acquiesced in by the Court, would overturn Lord Clarendon's orders. I can only obtain a certificate from the officers as to the practice. Then as to the question whether the six months are lunar or calendar months, it comes to the same thing. I must require the officers of the court to certify what is the practice on that point. I am told that for upwards of a century the practice has been to reckon time by calendar months. I must, therefore, act upon the established practice. Probably calendar months have been adopted, that periods should be fixed instead of fluctuating. The Court adheres to the general orders and rules, unless where there has been a long and uniform practice to the contrary, which the Court has sanctioned by acquiescence. If the officers report that six months have become the settled period for inrolling decrees, I must act upon it, as well as that the months are calendar months. At the Accountant-General's office time is reckoned by calendar months. It was contended that, under the general order of the 18th of January, 1838, which directs that the six clerks are to bring inrolments and dockets into the Rolls Chapel, the inrolment is not complete until it has been brought into the Rolls Chapel. But that order calls them inrolments, and is only intended to provide for their safe custody. The inrolment is complete when authenticated by the signature of the judge who made the decree, and by the subsequent signature of the Lord Chancellor. That the parties have no means of knowing that a decree has been inrolled, only goes to the question that some new general rule may be required on the subject. It is one of the difficulties arising out of the abolition of the Six Clerks Office which has not been provided for. The party intending to have the cause reheard can always prevent this inconvenience by immediately entering a caveat against the decree.

DALTON v. HAYTER.

Exceptions—Irregularity—Service—5th order of 1828—Practice.

The 5th order of 1828 requires exceptions for insufficiency to be referred not before eight days or after fourteen; and if the order to refer the exceptions, though obtained, is not served within the fourteen days, it is to be considered as abandoned.

This was an appeal against an order of the Master of the Rolls, allowing the reference of exceptions to an answer for insufficiency. The question turned upon the construction of the 5th order of April 3, 1828, which directs, "that when exceptions to an answer for insufficiency are not submitted to the plaintiff may, at the expiration of eight days after the exceptions are delivered, but not before, unless in injunction causes, refer such answer for insufficiency; and if he do not refer the same within the next six days, he shall be considered as having abandoned the exceptions, in which latter case such answer shall be forthwith deemed sufficient."

On the 8th of November the plaintiff delivered exceptions to the defendant's answer for insufficiency; on the 16th of November, which was Saturday, the time for submitting to the exceptions expired, and on the 23rd of November the plaintiff obtained, and served an order for setting aside the exceptions. The question made at the Rolls was, whether Sunday was to be reckoned in computation of time under the order, when it was the first day of the second period mentioned in the order, viz. the six days, during which the plaintiff might refer the exceptions.

Wakefield and Wood contended that the eight days having expired on Saturday the 16th, plaintiff could not obtain an order to refer the exceptions before Monday, and consequently that the 17th (Sunday) would not count as one of the six days. They cited Ashmole v. Goodwin (2 Salk. 254); Wathen v. Beaumont (11 East, 271); Bullock v. Hedington (1 Sim. 481); Mootham v. Baskett (1 Merivale, 2[illegible]); Anon. (1 Strange); Lee v. Carlton (5 Term Rep.); Taylor v. Harrison (1 Myl. & Cr. 274); Attorney-General v. Clack (1 Myl. & Cr. 367).

Roupell and Beavan, contra, cited Hunter v. Capron (5 Beav. 93); Macintosh v. Great Western Railway (1 Hare, 328).

The Lord Chancellor then stated that in Ireland Sunday is excluded in all cases.

Wakefield, in reply, cited 3 Dan. Ch. Pr. 258.

JUDGMENT.

The Lord Chancellor.—The plaintiff in this case excepted to the defendant's answer for insufficiency. The exceptions were filed on the 8th day of November, and the eight days allowed by the 5th general order of 1828, for submitting to the exceptions, expired on the 16th of November. On the 18th of November an order to refer the exceptions was obtained by the plaintiff, which was clearly in time, and served on the 23rd of November. One question is, whether the service was made in time. Another question made, whether, when the first day of the six mentioned in the order falls on a Sunday, it is to be reckoned, does not arise. It is immaterial for the determination of this case, for the order was not served in time. The order was not irregular; but it had been abandoned. That is not the ground upon which the case comes here. The original motion should have been refused, according to the case of Taylor v. Harrison (1 Myl. & Cr.) In that case the order was obtained, but not served in time, the Vice-Chancellor ordered the exceptions to be taken off the file, and that order was confirmed, on appeal, by Lord Cottenham. That is the course when the order is obtained in time, but not served in time. The case, too, has been lately decided at the Rolls, in Mackdonald v. Plummer, on the 17th of February, 1845. Here the order to refer was served out of time. The order of the Court below ought to be discharged. The order was right but by the subsequent neglect of the party, it was not served in time. The Master will decide upon the question of service, when it is raised before him. The parties must be in the same situation as to proceedings in the cause as when this motion was made.

MANN v. RICKETTS.

Enrolment of decrees—Lord Clarendon's Orders—Certificate of officers—Practice.

The Lord Chancellor.—In this case, I have received a certificate from the officers of the court stating that, for more than seventy years past, six calendar months had been the time allowed for enrolling decrees; and it is a much more convenient time than that fixed by Lord Clarendon's orders, because it is a fixed period. The senior Clerk of Records and Writs states, that to his personal knowledge during sixty years, such has been the established practice; and that there is a book of the late Mr. Deedes, an officer at the Rolls, which carries back the same practice to an earlier period; and that that book has always been deemed an authority. It is also stated by the certificate, that if no caveat, or subsisting caveat appears, all decrees will be enrolled, as of course. I do not think this a case for costs.

Re Wood, a Lunatic.

Practice—Renewal of copyholds.

Bayley supported a petition for liberty for the committee of the estate to take the necessary steps, and apply the requisite funds to obtain a renewal of a customary or copyhold estate, held on lives.

Ordered.

Re York, a Lunatic.

Allowance for draining.

Hallett appeared to support a petition by the committee of the estate, which prayed that a sum of money, together with the produce of timber cut down, might be applied to the under-draining of part of the lunatic's estate, according to a plan of which the commissioner had approved; the tenant had undertaken to draw the stones required for the purpose.

ROLLS COURT.

Monday, Feb. 24.

Fraser v. Wood.

A testator, in 1809, devised his estate, subject to his debts, and in 1813, a creditors' suit was instituted, and a decree for an account, &c. afterwards made. Several proceedings were taken to keep alive the suit till 1838, when it abated. In 1842, the estates were sold, and in the abstract of title every thing relating to the suit was suppressed, and upon its being discovered, a separate report was obtained that the debts amounted to a sum specified. The purchaser objecting to the title, on a reference to the Master, he found a good title could not be made, which finding the Court confirmed, and refused an inquiry as to the debts.

This cause came on upon exceptions to the Master's report, objecting that he ought not to have found that a good title could not be made to the Manor of Bramston Hall, &c. in Suffolk. The estate was put up to auction under very stringent conditions of sale; and on the 10th of May, 1842, John Wood, the defendant, became the purchaser, at the price of 30,000 guineas. On the 18th of May an abstract of title was delivered, consisting of thirteen parts, of which the seventh was the will of John Revett, dated 27th November, 1809, and devising his estates, &c. at Bramston Hall, for the benefit of his wife and children, subject to his debts, and authorizing his trustees to sell. The testator died on the 1st of December, 1809. In 1813, Mr. Jessop instituted a creditors' suit, and a decree was made in 1817 for an account, &c.; but though there were several proceedings in the cause, no effective steps were taken till 1838, when the suit abated by the death of Catherine Anne Pytches, the daughter of the testator. In 1825, the trustees conveyed to Hodgson and another to sell, and they made title to Fraser, the present vendor. Wood was a simple contract creditor of the testator, and proved his debt, amounting to 27*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* but had never after taken any step in the matter. When the abstract was delivered to the defendant, all mention of the suit was carefully suppressed; and on Mr. Wood discovering the matter, he was told that it had long since been disposed of. The purchaser, however, not being satisfied, the plaintiff, on the 24th of November, 1842, filed his bill for a specific performance, and the defendant by his answer having taken objections, on the 6th of April, 1843, there was a reference to the Master as to the title, and on the 3rd of July following, the defendant's objections were carried in, which respected the debts of the testator. From that till the 12th of February, 1844, nothing was done, when the plaintiff brought in his answer to the objections, and a separate report of the Master, stating the amount of the testator's debts to be 1,650*l.* and also a paper purporting to be minutes of an order confirming that report: and this the plaintiff thought sufficiently satisfactory. Upon the report of the Master, stating a good title could not be made, objections were taken by the vendor.

Turner (with him Cole), for the vendor.—The separate report was got to satisfy the purchaser, who objects that other creditors may come in; but the length of time since 1817, is sufficient to rebut any presumption of that kind. [The Master of the Rolls.—The presumption which would otherwise arise, is in this case neither way, for the matter has been all the time in court.] We do not dispute the right of the purchaser to have the debts reported due paid out of the purchase-money. Besides, the purchaser was himself a creditor, and knew all the facts at the time. They cited 1 Sugd. V. & P. 422.

Kindersley (with him Wood).—The separate report was obtained from a different Master, and is, in fact, no report at all. The registrar refused to draw up the order. The concealment of the suit is inexcusable, and the proof of the debt by the purchaser is of no consequence. The Master, therefore, rightly found the title not good. The conduct of the parties in keeping back the information as to the suit, coupled with the stringent conditions of sale, disentitles them to an inquiry. (Esdaile v. Stephenson, 1 Sim. & St. 122; Hyde v. Dallaway, 2 Hare, 528.)

The Master of the Rolls.—The trustees for sale of certain estates sold them; and, on a reference to the Master, objections to the title were taken in July 1843. On the argument of the exceptions, these facts appeared. [Here his Lordship stated the facts.] In this state of the cause, and there being a decree, the parties take upon themselves to sell by auction, before they knew whether it was necessary to sell or not. The abstract of title is delivered, but no reference is made therein to this suit. Objections are taken, and the Master takes them into consideration. Can anybody doubt that the Master was right, under such circumstances, in reporting as he did? They rely on presumption alone, and they endeavour to make good the title and to remove the objections by a separate report. I am reluctant to think that they procured it from a Master who did not know the case. But it is not confirmed. What, then, is wanted? If the cause is brought on on further directions, there are a great many irregularities which cannot be set right without much time; and the question is, if time may be given for that purpose. Each case depends on its own circumstances; and I ought to see that there is not a great deal of error, and that the difficulty can be got over in a short time. I do not see that that is so in this case; and, therefore, I overrule the exceptions.

Tuesday, Feb. 25.

Ex parte Lithgow, re The Eastern Counties Railway Company.

Petition to tax the costs of taxation of a bill of costs—Tender of amount—Service on railway company.

Trower applied to obtain a reference to tax costs of taxation to which the Eastern Counties Railway Company were liable under their Acts. The original petition was served upon the secretary of the company, but all subsequent process upon the solicitor only. On the petition being brought on, the Court made the order; but Mr. Roupell, for the company, had asked that it should stand over, and subsequently said the service of this petition was irregular, being on the solicitor, and not on the secretary, as the Act directed. This, it was submitted, was not so.

Roupell, for the company.—The application that it might stand over had been made, but the petitioner had drawn up the order stating my appearance, and had served it on the company, at the same time serving the petition on the secretary. I now appear on this second service.

Trower.—The company having taken the petitioner's land, on a reference to tax his bill of costs, less than one-sixth was taxed off, and therefore the company were liable for the costs of taxation, and the order to refer them for taxation was consequently right.

Roupell.—Before this petition was presented, on the 12th of February last, we tendered the petitioner the amount of the taxed costs which had been ascertained, together with the costs of the petition and the costs of the irregular petition, &c. in all about 26*l.* and we are still ready to do the same. We are, therefore, entitled to the costs of this application.

Trower.—We delivered our bill in January. The affidavit on the other side only states 26*l.* tender, but does not say there is no more.

The Master of the Rolls.—This is ridiculous and absurd, if not culpable conduct. Here the one side is ready to pay, and the other has not said the tender is too little. The respondents may make an affidavit.

Roupell.—And if no affidavit, there may be a reference to tax.

The Master of the Rolls.—Yes, distinguishing the costs before and after the petition.

Wednesday, Feb. 26.

Lawson v. Paddon.

Exceptions to an answer for scandal and impertinence—Exceptions to the Master's report, allowing the exceptions for impertinence—Concealment by a vendor of his previous insolvency.

The defendant Paddon, having agreed with James Hilton Lawson for the purchase of certain property, the day previous to that fixed for the completion of the purchase, searched the register of the Insolvent Court, and found that James Hilton Lawson had been an insolvent in 1831. He must then have sworn that he was not entitled to any property in possession, remainder, or expectancy, whereas he was in possession of the property in question. Upon the discovery of the insolvency, the defendant gave the plaintiff notice to rescind the contract. The plaintiff, however, having obtained a release from his creditors, filed a bill for specific performance; in the answer to which the defendant said the plaintiff sold the property, "falsely claiming to be entitled thereto," and afterwards repeated the same expressions. He also stated that the plaintiff had concealed his insolvency, and "speculated upon the possibility of his not searching the Insolvent Court." To this answer exceptions were taken for scandal and impertinence. The Master allowed the latter, and exceptions were taken to his report on that account.

Southgate, for the exceptions, said the whole consisted of only forty-nine words, and the taking exceptions in such a case was an abuse of the rule. (Att. Gen. v. Rickards, 6 Beav. 444; Marshall v. Mellersh, Id. 558.) Besides, the defendant did conceal his insolvency, and the answer stated no more than the fact. The creditors had not all released the plaintiff.

Rogers, contrà.—The passages in question bear cruelly on the plaintiff, and are unnecessary. Only three debts, amounting to less than 5*l.*, had not been released.

Southgate.—Attorneys seldom search the Insolvent Court, and the plaintiff knew it. As to cruelty, the language is still on the answer, and the plaintiff did not except to the report declaring it not scandalous.

The Master of the Rolls.—I cannot encourage the practice on either side. True it is in the answer, but then it is done because it is disagreeable to the other side. On the other hand, it is not a fit subject for reference to the Master for scandal and impertinence; neither is it proper to come here on exceptions from the Master's report. On the one hand, the plaintiff concealed his insolvency, which is sometimes innocent, but it is not so here; and on the other, the language used is not material, but still it is too trumpery and ridiculous to come here about. The Master has found the impertinence, but not the scandal, and I am at a loss what to do. There is evidently a bad spirit on both sides, which I do not approve. I shall read over the papers.

Feb. 27.—The Master of the Rolls.—The whole proceeding is excessively foolish and ridiculous. I will not disturb the Master's resort. I overrule the exceptions, and give costs to neither side.

Beauclerk v. Ashburnham.

Baily, in this case (reported 4 Law T. 431), stated that the trustees had withdrawn their opposition, and it was proposed that it should be declared that the leaseholds in question were within the power, and that it should be imperative on the trustees to agree to the purchase of them, &c.

The Master of the Rolls.—No; I leave it to them to accept or reject, knowing my opinion. I do not wish it to be imperative on them. All I say is they cannot reject leaseholds generally, or these in particular, because they are leaseholds. In other respects I leave them free to use their discretion. If they wish an inquiry respecting them, they can have it. You have said nothing as to costs.

Baily.—We propose to pay them out of the trust fund. There is a question as to two sets of costs to the two dissentient trustees who have opposed separately.

The Master of the Rolls.—I think they must have each his costs.

Sidebottom.—And as between solicitor and client?

The Master of the Rolls.—Yes.

Boschetti v. Power.

Practice—Orders—1 Wm. 4, c. 36, s. 15, r. 3.

An attachment may issue after the time for answering has expired, though the plaintiff has previously joined with the defendant in a commission to take the answer.

The time is not thereby extended.

The plaintiff cannot proceed upon the old practice, and issue the attachment in the vacation, returnable immediately, under the new rules, unless the defendant is in London, or within twenty miles thereof, according to the 1 Wm. 4, c. 36, s. 15, r. 3.

In this case, which has appeared so often in the columns of the Law Times, application was made to discharge an order for an attachment for want of an answer, on the ground of irregularity.

Turner (with him Rogers), for the defendants.—The 1 Wm. 4, c. 36, s. 15, r. 3, allows a writ of attachment to be issued in vacation, immediately returnable, if the party be within twenty miles of London; but if he is not, there must be fifteen days between the teste and return. (1 Dan. Prac. 589.) That was not so here, the return being immediate, though the party is in Gibraltar. On the 3rd of February last the plaintiff joined in a commission to go to Gibraltar to take the answer, and on the 7th of the same month the time for answering expired.

The Master of the Rolls.—When is the commission returnable?] The first day of Easter Term. This is important, as they have issued an attachment, which is to be executed before the commission is returned.

Lowndes (with him Torriano), for the plaintiff.—The fact is, they moved for an extension of time to answer, which was refused them, except upon the terms of paying into court money in their hands, which terms they declined. On the 7th of February, the time for answering expired, and we issued our attachment, pursuing the old practice, as the writ of attachment was not done away with by the Orders of 1841, which annulled the other processes of contempt. The common course is to issue the attachment, and proceed under the new Orders to take the bill pro confesso. [The Master of the Rolls.—I am surprised at you; but proceed, you are on a strict point of practice.] The officers of the Court informed us we were right. We consulted them, as they are empowered, under the 4th Order of October 1842, to ascertain whether a writ is of the proper form, and they told us we were quite regular. If not, they have misled us. It is because the wishes of the Court, as to the terms offered to the defendants, were not complied with, we take this course. We stand upon the old practice, and are not bound to take the liberty given us by the 1 Wm. 4, c. 36. The clause was intended to apply to the writs abolished by the Orders of 1841. There is no irregularity. As to joining in the commission to take the answer, we are not thereby in the least prejudiced. We joined in it to take an answer, but we knew nothing about it. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—That proposition, as to joining in the commission, needs more illustration than you have given it; commissions are different — some returnable without delay, others not.] All we have to do with it is, that it gives us a right to have a commissioner. When a plaintiff joins in a commission, he knows nothing about it; and it has, therefore, no operation to deprive him of the right of taking any remedy he can. We do not proceed under the 1 Wm. 4, c. 36. The 1st Order of 11th April, 1842, has been under consideration in Elloft v. Brown (2 Hare, 618), and in Harrison v. Stewardson (Id. 533). [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Has there been any case in which a writ of attachment returnable immediately has been issued against a person residing abroad?]

Turner, in reply.

Thursday, Feb. 27.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The defendants reside in Gibraltar, and on the 7th of February the time for answering expired. On the 21st of January they moved for an extension of time to answer, but were refused. On the 3rd of February a commission, bearing date the same day, and returnable without delay, was issued. The plaintiff joined in that commission, and by the course and practice of the Court that commission runs till the first day of next Easter Term. The time for putting in an answer having expired on the 7th of February, an attachment issued according to the practice of the Court, and the commission does not operate to extend the time; and it is immaterial whether the plaintiff joined in the commission, or not. The plaintiff being entitled, under ordinary circumstances, to an attachment after the time for answering has expired, on the 10th February sued out his writ, returnable immediately, and delivered it to the Sheriffs of London, though the defendants were known to be at Gibraltar; and this motion is made to discharge that order for irregularity. Now the 1 Will. 4, c. 36, s. 15, r. 3 authorizes that course to be pursued in vacation, if the defendant be resident in London, or within twenty miles of it, but otherwise, it requires fifteen days between the teste and return of the writ. But the defendant insists that he had a right to proceed on the old practice, and to direct the attachment to the Sheriffs of London, though the defendant was known to be in Gibraltar. It is not necessary to inquire whether the defendant may proceed upon the old practice, for it does not appear that there was any such practice as this. According to Lord Clarendon's Orders, the practice was to issue writs of attachment to London in all cases, except where it was known that the defendant was not there; but there was no practice to make out an attachment to a county where the party was known not to be. This might have been done to shew where the party then was, and for taking bills pro confesso. Moreover, the attachment ought not to be sued out without a previous order obtained; here there was none. The statute says it may be sued out without an order, if made returnable in fifteen days; but that was not so here. The attachment is, therefore, irregular, and I must discharge the order with costs.

Torriano submitted whether it should be with costs, as they were misled by the officers of the court.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I have so ordered because I think it purely vexatious.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Feb. 12, 13, 14, and 19.

STEVENS v. STEVENS.

Deposit of deeds—Solicitor—Fraud.

A farmer who had a mortgage upon property delivered all the title-deeds, except the deed assigning the mortgage to himself, to his solicitor, for the purpose of preparing an abstract, with a view to a sale. The solicitor fraudulently completed the sale of the property, and some time afterwards absconded. Until the solicitor absconded, no inquiry was made by the mortgagee as to his deeds; and it was held, under the circumstances, that the mortgagee was not liable as a party to the solicitor's fraud.

The circumstances which gave rise to this suit will sufficiently appear from the Vice-Chancellor's judgment.

Russell, Wigram, Campbell, and Jackson, for the plaintiff, cited Evans v. Bicknell (6 Ves. 174); Martinez v. Cooper (2 Russ); and Greig v. Wells (10 Ad. & Ell. 90).

Swanston, Chandless, and Greaves for the defendant.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In the observations which I am about to make I shall assume that two questions of fact will be answered in the defendant's favour, namely, that before July 1842, the defendant was not aware that Lingwood's purchase had been completed by payment of his purchase-money, and that he did not authorize or assent to the receipt by Ledyard of Lingwood's purchase-money. If I were satisfied that those two questions of fact would be answered in the defendant's favour, I should dismiss this bill. There is not, in my opinion, any ground for supposing that there was any dishonest intention on the part of the defendant.

Ledyard was the defendant's solicitor. He was a solicitor of good credit, who had dealt so much in raising loans of money and in procuring money and security for money, as to approach very much the character of the old scrivener, of which there are so few instances, if any, at the present day. Ledyard appears to have assisted a person of the name of Scriven in the purchase of a farm in the neighbourhood of Cirencester, in which place Ledyard lived, for 1,200*l*. It was accordingly conveyed to Scriven and his trustee to bar dower, and Scriven immediately, or almost immediately afterwards, and his trustee, mortgaged the estate to Ledyard, with power of sale, for 1,200*l*. which sum, in fact, Ledyard seems to have advanced. Ledyard appears not to have trusted much to Scriven, and especially to have taken possession of the estate himself, so far as that can be understood in the sense of receiving the rents. There does not appear any trace of actual receipt or enjoyment on the part of Scriven himself. This occurred in 1827. In the year 1831 it appears the defendant, who was a farmer in the neighbourhood of Cirencester, and a client of Ledyard's, has 1,000*l*. to lay out. He seems to have applied to Ledyard for a security, and Ledyard determines to let him have this security; and accordingly Ledyard prepares and causes to be engrossed and executed a deed, which may be called a deed of transfer of the mortgage. It is not, in the ordinary form of such instruments, subject to redemption; it does not assign the debt, or give the usual power of attorney to the assignee of the debt to use the name of the assignor. The assignment of the mortgage was upon the alleged receipt of 1,200*l*.; but 1,000*l*. only was paid, and Ledyard takes from the defendant a promissory note for 200*l*. the difference, and gives up to the defendant the security, and the defendant appears to have had sole possession of the title-deeds and of the deed of transfer, Ledyard appearing willing to trust him, and he does not appear to have made any indorsement on either of the deeds with respect to the 200*l*. portion of the purchase-money of the mortgage security remaining unpaid. whereas between Ledyard and the defendant there might have been a lien for that amount. Ledyard does not appear to have made himself personally liable for the money, as I understand the deed, and the defendant appears from time to time afterwards to have received the interest from Ledyard, but only on the 1,000*l*., the case appearing to be very much in the dark as to the 200*l*. Some years afterwards, namely, in the year 1840, Ledyard contracts to sell the farm to a proprietor in the neighbourhood, a gentleman or farmer, who had an estate on which he resided immediately adjoining. The contract is made late in December 1840, and it is to be inferred that at or about that time Ledyard applies to the defendant for the deeds, and I think it may be assumed, for the purpose of making an abstract. That which is positively proved by White, then Ledyard's clerk, is that the defendant in the month of January brings the deeds with him; and omitting for the present that which is stated in the answer, the case rests very much upon the evidence of Mr. White.

Now inferring, as I do from his evidence, without resorting to the answer for information, that the deeds were left with Ledyard for the purpose of preparing the abstract with a view to a sale, I am of opinion there was nothing improper in it, and there was not gross negligence. Mr. Ledyard was the person who, subject to any effect on the power that the transfer had made, would have the power of sale. At all events, he was the prominent man with respect to the farm; he was the person with whom the defendant had dealt, and either acting for himself or acting for Scriven, the defendant might well have supposed that he, the defendant, might with propriety sell the farm, and not forgetting the position in which Ledyard stood with regard to the 200*l*. it appears to me that it was a reasonable thing in the defendant to lend the deeds to Ledyard for the purpose of making an abstract, and that it was not incumbent on the defendant to suspect that an improper use would be made of those deeds. It has been ingeniously and fairly observed, that the deeds would not enable a complete or fair abstract to be made, because the actual deed of transfer was retained; and if there had been any reason to suspect actual fraud, the observation might have weight; but I am of opinion the course adopted in this respect was consistent with perfect fairness. The defendant, a farmer be it recollected, might have well thought, and probably did think, "I can do no harm in lending the deeds; they will be safe in the solicitor's hands; I had rather not part with my own deed, I had rather keep it." He might have supposed, if he thought about it, that the business of the transfer to him having been transacted at Ledyard's office, Ledyard might not require that deed for the purpose of being abstracted. In any event, if Ledyard had wanted it, he might expect to be asked for it, which he was not, and I think it was a natural course of conduct. The circumstance, however, that they were never returned to him may be a strong circumstance with respect to the character of the delivery. But when it is considered that Ledyard stood in the position of solicitor to him; when it is considered that the defendant was not bound, as in my opinion he was not bound, to suspect any thing wrong; when I assume he was not aware of the purchase having been completed by payment of the purchase-money; and when I assume, as it is fair to do, if any knowledge on the subject is to be ascribed to this defendant, that he was certain that the money could not be paid, and that his security could not be taken from him as long as he had his own deed; certain, in this sense, that if he thought about it he must be aware that could not be done without a crime. I am of opinion no inference arises against him, from the circumstance that he did not call back the deed, although he may have been aware that the treaty with Ledyard was in active progress, and though he may have been aware a time was appointed for completing it. He had a right to think the money would not and could not be paid without his concurrence, without the production of the deed, the retention of which by him prevented a possibility of making an effectual title, and he was entitled, as I repeat, to believe that Ledyard would not do, and did not intend to do, any thing unfairly.

I am of opinion, therefore, that in the mere delivery of the deeds, upon the mere custody of the deeds, however long, nothing arises in this particular case; and if I were satisfied upon the two questions of fact which I have mentioned, which are quite beside the notion of any fraud or gross negligence having been committed before the month of July 1842, in which Ledyard absconded, I should dismiss the bill. With regard to the two questions of fact in which I have reserved myself, there is evidence which, as at present advised, I think requires sifting.

After hearing counsel for the defendant upon sending issues upon the two questions mentioned in the Vice-Chancellor's judgment, his Honour directed them to be tried.

SHADBOLT v. WOODFALL.

Assent by executors—Bequest of leaseholds.

Where executors have assented unconditionally to a specific bequest of leasehold estates, they are not entitled to be indemnified out of the testator's general estate on account of the covenants in the lease.

The testator, in this case had by his will bequeathed specifically certain leasehold property, and the executors assented unconditionally to the bequest. The executors now sought to be indemnified out of the testator's general estate in respect of the covenants on the part of the testator which were contained in the lease.

Russell and Whateley, for the executors.

Wigram and Nicholson, for the defendants.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered that the executors, having unconditionally assented to the bequest, they were not entitled to the indemnity they asked.

Friday, Feb. 21.

GOSLING v. CARTER.

This case, which is reported ante, p. 393, was this day spoken to upon the minutes, when

Wigram and Hardy, for the plaintiff, stated that they were ready to prove the existence of debts, and further argued that the heir-at-law was not a necessary party to the sale, as the executors had full power under the circumstances to sell. They cited Tylden v. Hythe (2 Sim. & Stu. 228); and Forbes v. Peacock (11 Sim.)

Teed and Goldsmith, for the defendant, were not heard.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In this will there is an express power of sale, and but one, given so as not to be exercised until after the death of the testator's widow. She is still alive. I decline deciding against the purchaser, without binding myself to any opinion that, whether the widow does or does not disclaim, the express power of sale is not now exercisable. For the purposes of this suit, I hold that the power of sale is not now exercisable. But there is, in a certain sense, an implied power of sale, because the debts are charged upon the testator's real estates, and therefore there is, in a manner, a power of sale. I am of opinion that in this will there is an intention that the sale should be made by the executors, or one of them, and not otherwise. The next question is, whether such intention is expressed so as to create a legal power, in which case the heir need not join. I am of opinion that it is a question of too great a nicety and difficulty to decide against a purchaser in a suit for specific performance. The purchaser requiring the concurrence of the heir-at-law, must pay for the discovery of such heir, or not, according to his contract; but I repeat, that I decline making him take the estate without the concurrence of the heir. Without prejudice then to any question as to the legal estate, I decide that the executors, as there are debts admitted, have power to sell. I do not decide that the heir-at-law is a necessary party, but I will not compel the purchaser to take the title without his concurrence.

ALLEN v. WEDGWOOD.

Costs—Purchaser of equity of redemption and of prior interests made co-plaintiff in a foreclosure suit with the person entitled to the first mortgage, against a mesne incumbrancer.

In this case, which was a suit for foreclosure against Mr. Wedgwood, who had contracted to purchase under a trust-deed for creditors (subject to the mortgages of Mrs. Parry, one of the plaintiffs), and also against Mr. Gwyther, a judgment creditor, it appeared that, subsequent to the registry of the judgment of Gwyther, the equity of redemption was assigned to the plaintiff Allen, and he afterwards purchased the interests of some of the creditors under the trust-deed.

Allen was now joined as plaintiff in this foreclosure suit with the person entitled to the prior mortgages.

Russell and B. L. Chapman, for the plaintiffs.

Allnutt, for the defendant Gwyther, offered to disclaim if the plaintiffs would pay Gwyther's costs, at the same time submitting that, as this suit was constituted, he was entitled to his costs, as his judgment debt had a priority over the interests claimed by the plaintiff Allen.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that a question of great nicety might possibly be raised if this offer were not accepted. He mentioned the cases of Toulmin v. Steere (3 Mer. 210), and Moratta v. Murgatroyd (1 P. Wms. 393).

Russell then acceded to the proposition, and the costs were directed to be entered in the decree as paid by consent.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.

York, Thursday, March 20.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

REG. v. WILLIAM MARCHANT.

A notice given by the guardians of a union to a person intended to be charged as father of a bastard child under the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, and 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, is sufficient if signed by a majority of the guardians of the union duly assembled at a meeting of the board of guardians, and need not be signed by the whole body of guardians, nor by a majority of them.

An order in bastardy under the same statutes alleged that it was duly proved to the justices that the child was born a bastard, and was chargeable, and that it was duly proved on oath there, as well by the evidence of the mother as upon other testimony corroborative in material particulars of her evidence, that W. M. was the father of the said child. Held, that it was sufficiently stated that the evidence upon which the order was made, was taken upon oath. Held also, that if it had not sufficiently appeared, that would have been an objection to the order as well under the statutes above cited as under the present statute of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101.

The indictment was for disobeying an order in bastardy made before the late statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101. It consisted of three counts, two of which stated the substance of the order, and the other set it out at length. The order was as follows:—

"City of York, } At a Petty Sessions of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the
To wit. } City of York, holden at the Guildhall of and in the said City, on the sixteenth day of March, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Forty, before us, two of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace of and for the said City.

"Whereas the township of Clifton is situate within the York union, and part of the said union is within the said city of York:

"And whereas, the guardians of the said union have now applied to us, the justices here assembled, and holding the petty sessions aforesaid, in and for the city aforesaid, for an order upon William Marchant, of the township of Clifton aforesaid, labourer, whom they, the said guardians, charge with being the putative father of a female child, which has lately been born a bastard of the body of Deliah Clark, widow, and has, by the inability of the said mother of such child to provide for its maintenance, become chargeable to the said township of Clifton, to reimburse such union for the maintenance and support of the said child:

"And whereas due notice of the intention of the said guardians to make this present application was, on the twenty-eighth day of February last, given by the said guardians to the said William Marchant, and the said William Marchant being now called, and not appearing, either by himself or his attorney, we, the said justices, so here assembled as aforesaid, nevertheless proceed to hear such application, in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided; and it being now proved to us, the said justices so here assembled as aforesaid, that the said child was on the twenty-fourth day of November last past, that is to say, since the passing of an Act passed in the fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty, King William the Fourth, intituled 'An Act for the amendment and better administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales,' at the township of Clifton aforesaid, born a bastard of the body of the said Deliah Clark: And that the said child, on the eighteenth day of February last past, and within three calendar months of the making of this present application, by reason of the inability of its said mother to provide for its maintenance, became, and from thence hitherto hath been and still is chargeable to the said township of Clifton: And it being duly proved on oath now here, as well by the evidence of the said Deliah Clark, the mother of the said child, as upon other testimony corroborative in material particulars of the evidence of the said Deliah Clark, to the satisfaction of us, the said justices here, that the said William Marchant is the father of the said child: we, the said justices here assembled as aforesaid, having heard the evidence in this behalf adduced, are satisfied of the facts aforesaid, and that the said William Marchant is really and in truth the father of the said child: And it appears to us, the justices so here assembled as aforesaid, to be just and reasonable, under all the circumstances of the case, that the said William Marchant should pay unto the guardians of the said union such sum or sums of money as the said union has expended, and also such sums as the said union may from time to time expend, for the maintenance and support of the said child, not exceeding the sum of one shilling and sixpence by the week.

"And whereas no application has been made with respect to the said child to any Court of General Quarter Sessions, under the provisions of the said Act, so entitled as aforesaid:

"Therefore, we, the said justices, so here assembled as aforesaid, do now hereby order that the said William Marchant do pay unto the guardians of the said union, the sum of eleven shillings and eightpence expended by the said union for the maintenance and support of the said child from the eighteenth day of February aforesaid, when the said child became chargeable as aforesaid to the present time, and do also pay to the guardians of the said union, weekly and every week from henceforth, until the said child shall attain the age of seven years (if the said child shall so long live and continue to be chargeable to the said township of Clifton), such sum and sums of money as shall be weekly expended by and on behalf of the said union, for the maintenance and support of the said child during the time last aforesaid, not exceeding the sum of one shilling and sixpence in each and every week.

"Given under our hands and seals at the session aforesaid.

"EUST. STRICKLAND,
"THOS. BARSTOW."

The indictment alleged that due notice of the intention of the guardians of the poor to make the application to the justices at petty sessions had been given by the said guardians to the said William Marchant. The statute 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 72, enacts, "That when any child shall hereafter be born a bastard, and shall, by reason of the inability of the mother of such child to provide for its maintenance, become chargeable to any parish, the overseers or guardians of such parish, or the guardians of any union in which such parish may be situate, may, if they think proper, after diligent inquiry as to the father of such child, apply to the next general quarter sessions of the peace within the jurisdiction of which such parish or union may be situate, after such child shall have become chargeable, for an order upon the person whom they shall charge with being the putative father of such child, to reimburse such parish or union for its maintenance and support, &c."

The 73rd section enacts, "That no such application shall be heard at such sessions unless fourteen days' notice shall have been given under the hands of such overseers or guardians to the person intended to be charged with being the father of such child of such intended application; and in case there shall not, previously to such sessions, have been sufficient time to give such notice, the hearing of such application shall be deferred to the next ensuing general quarter sessions, &c."

The 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, s. 1, transfers the jurisdiction of the Court of Quarter Sessions to special or petty sessions, and provides that all enactments in the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, relating to the Court of General Quarter Sessions, shall be taken to apply to the said justices in special or petty session, except that the notice to the person intended to be charged with being the father of the child, need not be given more than seven days instead of fourteen days before the session at which the application shall be heard."

The notice proved to have been given in this case was as follows, and it appeared in evidence that the parties whose signatures were attached were only a small portion of the guardians of the union:—

"TO WILLIAM MARCHANT, ...
"Whereas, Deliah Clark, now in the York Union Workhouse, was, on the twenty-fourth day of November last, delivered of a female bastard child, and the said child, by reason of the inability of its said mother to provide for its maintenance, on the eighteenth day of February instant became chargeable to the township of Clifton, and from thence hitherto has been maintained and supported by the York Union, in which the said township is situate: And whereas we, the undersigned, being a majority of the guardians of the said union, duly assembled at a meeting of the board of guardians of the said union, HAVING MADE diligent inquiries as to the father of the said child, do find and charge that you, William Marchant, are the father of the same: Therefore take notice, that we, as such guardians of the said union, intend, on the sixteenth day of March next, to apply to the justices of the peace, at the petty sessions which will be then holden by them, at half-past twelve o'clock at noon, at the Guildhall in and for the city of York, within which city part of such union is situate, for an order upon you, the said William Marchant, to reimburse the said union for the maintenance and support of the said child, and to make such further order for its future maintenance and support as to the said justices shall seem meet. Given under our hands, at a meeting of the board of guardians of the said union, held this twenty-seventh day of February, one thousand eight hundred and forty.

"HENRY SMALES, Presiding Chairman.

"GEO. DRUMMOND.	HENRY COBB.
JOSEPH WADE.	W. PLOWS.
RICHD. BROADMEAD.	SAML. HERBERT.
THOS. WALKER.	THOS. DEWS.
THOS. MASON.	FRAS. CALVERT.
THOS. BILLESBY.	RICHD. SMITH."

Phillips, for the defendant, objected that no sufficient notice had been proved. The statute 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 72, provides that the overseers or guardians of the parish, or guardians of the union, may apply for an order, &c. The 73rd section enacts that no such application shall be heard unless fourteen days' notice shall be given under the hands of such overseers or guardians to the person intended to be charged. The subsequent statute reduces the number of days to seven, but makes no other alteration in the notice required. The notice here is signed by twelve guardians of the union, who are alleged to be "a majority of the guardians of the said union duly assembled at a meeting of the Board of Guardians of the said union." It is uncertain whether this means a majority of the guardians of the union, or only of those who were duly assembled at that meeting. But it is not sufficient, even if the words can be construed to mean, that the notice was given by the majority of all the guardians, because, according to the words of the Act of Parliament, it ought to be given by the guardians, and not merely by a majority, by which must be understood the whole of the guardians. Where the Act requires certain things to be done by all the guardians, it is not sufficient that they should be done by a majority, but still less, by a majority of a meeting which itself comprehended only a small section of them.

Bliss, for the prosecution, contended, that though the sections were worded as above stated, still that the act of a majority of a meeting of guardians was the act of the whole, and was valid for all purposes.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I think the notice sufficient.

Phillips then objected that the order was bad, because it did not appear that it was proved upon oath before the justices that the child was born a bastard, or that it was chargeable to the township. He further contended that the words, "and it being duly proved on oath here, as well by the evidence of the said Deliah Clark, the mother of the said child, as upon other testimony corroborative in material particulars of the evidence of the said Deliah Clark, to the satisfaction," &c. did not sufficiently shew that both the evidence of the mother and all the other testimony were upon oath. With regard to the first point, it was material before the justices that the birth and the chargeability should be proved; and, being material, they must have been proved upon oath, and it should have been so alleged in the order. Reg. v. The Justices of Buckinghamshire (4 Law T. 341) is a case decided by your lordship last term involving this very principle. It may be said that that decision was under the late statute, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101; but there is no difference in this respect between the statutes.

WIGHTMAN, J.—That case was decided on general principle, not on the particular words of the statute.

Phillips.—The same case applies to the second point. It ought to appear distinctly, and without any uncertainty, that both the evidence of the mother and the material testimony in corroboration, were taken upon oath; but it is consistent with the wording of this order that only a part of the evidence may have been upon oath, or that the case might have been duly proved on oath, in the opinion of the justices, by entirely different evidence, and that neither that of the mother nor the corroborating testimony alluded to by the order, might have been upon oath at all. Reading the words above quoted as a parenthesis, it does not appear at all that the mother's evidence was upon oath. (Reg. v. Jates, New Sessions Cases, pt. 2; Ex parte Gray, 1 Bitt. & S. 116.)

Bliss, contrà.—The two first averments are merely introductory, and it is unnecessary to allege that they were proved upon oath. With regard to the latter point, the averment that it was proved upon oath overrules the whole sentence.

WIGHTMAN, J.—It is quite true that it ought to appear clearly on the face of the order that every thing material was proved upon oath; but I think it was not necessary to allege that the birth and the chargeability were so proved; and as to the other point, if you put a fair construction on the words used, it must be understood that all the evidence taken was on oath. I think, therefore, the objections cannot be sustained.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT.

Derby, Tuesday, March 18.

(Before Lord Chief Justice TINDAL.)

COULSON v. SANDARS and ANOTHER.

In a conviction under stat. 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4, for pretending to tell fortunes, it is not necessary, in describing the offence, to allege to whom the pretence was made, and, in the warrant of commitment issued in pursuance of such conviction, it is enough to allege generally that the party was convicted of being a rogue and vagabond, "for that he did pretend and profess to tell fortunes;" nor does the addition of other unnecessary words, as "and did use certain devices, by palmistry and otherwise," vitiate the warrant. It is not necessary, in express terms, to say where the party convicted is to be kept in safe custody; it is enough, if it appears clearly upon reading the whole of the warrant.

Declaration, in trespass for false imprisonment.

Plea—Not guilty, by statute.

On the part of the plaintiff a warrant of commitment was put in, signed by the defendants, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the borough of Derby, the material parts of which were as follows:—

"Whereas William Coulson was duly convicted before us, two, &c. of being a rogue and vagabond, for that he, on, &c. did pretend and profess to tell fortunes, and did use certain devices by palmistry and otherwise, &c." Then followed a command to the constable to deliver the said William Coulson to the keeper of the house of correction at Derby; and then a command to the said keeper the said William Coulson safely to keep to hard labour for the space of two calendar months.

On the part of the defendants, the conviction upon which the warrant of commitment was founded, was put in. It followed the form given by the statute, the 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4, and was in these words:—

"Derby, } Be it remembered, That on to wit. } at William Coulson is convicted before us (naming the justices), two of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county, of being a rogue and vagabond, within the intent and meaning of the statute made in the 5th year of the reign, &c. for that the said Wm. Coulson, on , at , did pretend and profess to tell the fortune of one Benj. Ferne, a subject of her Majesty, &c., with the intent, and for the purpose of deceiving and imposing upon the said Benj. Ferne; and for which said offence the said Wm. Coulson is ordered to be committed to the house of correction at Derby, there to be kept to hard labour for the space of two calendar months. Given under our hands and seals, &c."

Signed and sealed by the defendants.

Hill, Q. C. and Waddington, for the plaintiff, submitted, 1st, that the conviction was bad for uncertainty, in not stating to whom the pretence was made; which, they contended, was as necessary in a conviction under this statute, as in an indictment for obtaining money under false pretences. In the latter case it was immaterial whether the pretence was made to the person defrauded; and so here it was immaterial whether the pretence was made to the person whose fortune was to be told; but unless the conviction shewed to whom the pretence was made, it wanted the requisite certainty. Then the warrant is bad. There is no doubt that the warrant ought to follow the conviction. (Daniel v. Phillips, 1 C. M. & R. 662.) It does not here.

The stat. 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4, provides, "that every person committing any of the offences hereinbefore mentioned, after having been convicted as an idle and disorderly person; every person pretending or professing to tell fortunes, or using any subtle craft, means, or device, by palmistry or otherwise, to deceive and impose on any of his Majesty's subjects, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond within the true intent and meaning of this Act; and it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace to commit such offender (being thereof convicted before him by the confession of such offender, or by the evidence on oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses) to the house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding three calendar months." The warrant, therefore, charges two distinct offences; but the conviction only one. But the warrant is also bad; first, because it neither states to whom the pretence was made, nor whose fortune was to be told, nor alleges any intent to deceive and impose upon any one; it shews no offence under the statute; and, secondly, because it does not shew where the plaintiff was to be kept to hard labour. It is true the 17th section provides "that no proceedings to be had before any justice or justices of the peace under the provisions of this Act shall be quashed for want of form;" but the defects pointed out here are substantial defects, affecting the magistrates' jurisdiction.

Humfrey, Q. C. and Ponsonby, for the defendants.

TINDAL, C. J.—I am of opinion that this conviction is sufficient to sustain the warrant of commitment, and that the defendants, therefore, are not liable in trespass. The statute provides a form of conviction; that form is followed; and the blank which is left for the description of the offence is filled up in the words of the statute; it is said that the conviction ought to have stated to whom the pretence was made; but the answer is, that it matters not to whom the pretence was made; the statute says generally every person "pretending to tell fortunes." Then the warrant recites generally that the plaintiff has been convicted of pretending to tell fortunes; but not with the same particularity as the conviction; nor is the same particularity necessary. It is true that the warrant adds also, "and did use certain devices by palmistry and otherwise;" but that is unnecessary, and may be rejected as surplusage. As to the last objection, it is quite clear, from the whole of the warrant, where the plaintiff was to be kept in safe custody. There is a direction to the constable to take him to the keeper of the house of correction at Derby, and then a direction to that keeper safely to keep the plaintiff, which could only be in the house of correction; for if the keeper were to allow him to go elsewhere, it would be an escape. Upon the whole, therefore, the defendants are not liable, and the plaintiff must be nonsuited.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.

Exeter, Friday, March 21.

(Before Mr. Justice ERLE.)

REG. v. AVERY and ANOTHER.

Practice—Evidence.

The evidence of an accomplice, though uncorroborated, is evidence to go to the jury.

Prisoners were indicted for entering lands by night, &c. in pursuit of game.

The principal witness was an accomplice.

Slade, for the prisoners, submitted that the evidence of the accomplice was uncorroborated, and that, therefore, there was no case to go to the jury.

ERLE, J.—My own opinion is, that I have no right to withdraw any case from the jury where there is even one competent witness for the prosecution, although he be an accomplice, and uncorroborated. That is my view of the law.

Greenwood and Rowe, for the prosecution.

Slade, for the prisoner.

Exeter, Monday, March 24.

(Before Mr. Justice COLERIDGE.)

DOE dem. MOLESWORTH, Bart. v. SLEEMAN.

Evidence.

This ejectment was brought to recover a piece of land which was said to be within the limits and to belong to a manor.

A witness was called for the plaintiff to prove the locus in quo to be within the bounds of the manor, by giving evidence as to the reputation of its limits. He stated that he lived within the limits of the manor, but admitted he had never held any of the manorial lands, nor had any thing personally to do with the manor.

Crowder objected that he was not a competent witness. This witness is called, he argued, to give hearsay evidence of the boundaries of this manor, without having any legitimate means whatever of ascertaining or testing the accuracy of any thing he might have heard about it. The rule is, no doubt, that the tenants of a manor may give evidence of what they have heard other deceased tenants say of its customs and bounds; and this rule is a reasonable one, as they have an interest in correctly ascertaining the facts respecting these matters. It is like the hearsay evidence of members of a family respecting the pedigree of such family, in which cases none but its members are held to be admissible witnesses.

Greenwood contended that the witness was clearly admissible. He lived within the limits of the manor, and had the same means of ascertaining its boundaries as any of the tenants could have. He cited Crease v. Barrett (1 C. M. & R. 919).

COLERIDGE, J.—I have never understood there is any such limit or distinction with regard to the admissibility of witnesses called to give evidence respecting the reputed bounds of a manor, as that contended for by Mr. Crowder. All that is necessary is, that such witnesses shew they have been so circumstanced as to be in a situation to ascertain what those boundaries were. I think this witness is in that situation, and I shall therefore receive his evidence.

Greenwood and Montague Smith, for the plaintiff.

Crowder and Butt, for the defendant.

HOME CIRCUIT.

Maidstone, Tuesday, March 11.

REG. v. COBUS.

Where a prisoner charged with any offence has been removed to a lunatic asylum, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54, the Court will not discharge the recognizances of the prosecutor and witnesses, but will respite them until the next assizes.

The prisoner had been committed on a charge of murder, and on a certificate of two justices of the peace that he was insane, the Secretary of State had issued his warrant under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54, for the removal of the accused to a lunatic asylum.

Deedes now applied, on behalf of the prosecutor and the witnesses who had been bound over to prosecute and give evidence, that their recognizances might be discharged.

ALDERSON, B.—I think I ought to be particularly careful in acting upon a statute such as this, which supersedes the common law and the much more wholesome state of things that existed under it. Formerly, if a prisoner, when brought to trial, exhibited any symptoms of insanity, it was the judge's duty to empannel a jury in open court, to try whether he was insane or not, and the question was publicly decided. Now what is to prevent a murderer from being smuggled away into a madhouse, without the slightest public investigation with regard to the heinous charge brought against him? Two justices of the peace, behind the back of the prosecutor, give a certificate that the man is insane, and the case may be hushed up for ever. In this instance there is, perhaps, no actual ground for any exception being taken to the course pursued; I only speak of the principle. At any rate I think I should not be acting properly were I to discharge these recognizances. I will respite them until the next assizes, with an intimation to the prosecutor and witnesses that they need not come up again until they are summoned. I cannot help repeating that in this case, as well as in every similar one, a prisoner accused of murder may escape justice altogether, unless two magistrates consent to certify that he is sane.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.*

AYLESBURY.

(Before Mr. Baron PARKE.)

REG. v. WM. DAY, clerk.

Felonious cutting and wounding—When common assault.

In an indictment for feloniously cutting and wounding, with intent to disable and do grievous bodily harm, the felony is not supported by proof that the prosecutor, in the act of warding off a blow, pushed his hand against that of the prisoner, and so received a wound on his finger; the prisoner having cut and slit the smock frock of the prosecutor in a manner which indicated an intention to injure that garment, and not the person of the prosecutor. These facts, however, are sufficient to support a conviction for a common assault.

The prisoner was indicted for cutting and wounding James Batchelor, with intent, in the first count to maim and disable him, and in the second, to do him some grievous bodily harm.

Birch, for the prosecution, called the prosecutor, who swore that the defendant being in a public-house, he went to him at the request of the landlord, with the view of persuading him to leave the house. To this application the prisoner made no reply, and the prosecutor retired into the parlour: after which the prisoner was observed to take out a penknife from his pocket, open it—and return it. In a few moments afterwards, the prosecutor renewed his solicitation to the prisoner, who thereupon sprung on him and knocked him over a form with his fists, in one of which he appeared to have some instrument. When the prosecutor recovered his legs, he put forth his hand to ward off the attack of the prisoner, and in so doing he pushed it against the right hand of the prisoner, in which was a penknife, which ran into the prosecutor's finger, just deep enough to bring blood. The prosecutor and other witnesses, when called upon to describe the blows given by the prisoner, said that he seemed to hold the penknife in his hand and to use it as if he were attempting to cut the frock of the prosecutor, for his motion was "up and down several times," as if he was scarring the frock; and that, on being produced, bore three long marks as if it had been slit downwards by as many cuts from a knife; while there were scars in several other places, through which the knife had not penetrated, and all in the same direction. In this state of things,

PARKE, B. intimated that there was an end to the felonious part of the charge against the prisoner. It was evident from the account given of his conduct and actions by the prosecutor and the other witnesses, that the object of his attack was the dress, and not the person of the prosecutor; and the cut received by the prosecutor was not one inflicted by the knife coming against his hand, but his hand coming in contact with the knife at a moment when no intention existed in the mind of the prisoner to inflict any wound on his person.

Sanders, for the prisoner, then submitted that there was not even enough to sustain a conviction for a common assault. If there was no felony because there was an absence of any intent to injure the person of the prosecutor, the attack of the prisoner on the dress of the prosecutor exclusively could not amount in the eye of the law to an assault; for every assault must presume an injury to, or at least an attack on, the person. The person here of the prosecutor was never touched.

Parke, B.—No, it was not; but surely it is an assault on a man's person to inflict injury to the clothes on his back. In the ordinary case of a blow on the back, there is clearly an assault, though the blow is received by the coat on the person. It certainly appears to me that there is plenty of evidence here to support a conviction for a common assault; but I will confer with my brother Patteson on the subject.

The learned Baron then retired for a few moments, and on his return into court announced, that the opinion of Mr. Justice Patteson entirely coincided with that previously expressed by himself. He accordingly directed the jury to acquit the prisoner of the felony, but to find him guilty of the common assault.

Guilty—six weeks' imprisonment.

Reg. v. Abraham.

Shooting at with intent—Felony and common assault.

The indictment charged that the prisoner shot at John Earl, with intent to maim him and to do him some bodily harm.

From the evidence of the prosecutor it appeared that he was in a field hunting small birds in a hedge with some other boys, when the prisoner, who was then a gamekeeper, came up to them with a gun on his arm, and ordered them off. Upon this the prosecutor ran away with his companions, but had not got more than 40 or 50 yards off when he heard the report of a gun, and at the same moment felt several shot rattling against his back and arms, one of which struck him on his hand and lodged in his finger. Turning round, he saw the prisoner with his gun up to his shoulder pointing towards him.

Another witness proved that the prisoner said afterwards, that he had "warmed their tails a goodish bit for them."

Parke, B.—There can be no doubt that this is an assault, but I think the felonious part of the charge cannot be supported by these facts. In order to do so it must appear clearly that the prisoner discharged the gun at the prosecutor with the intent laid in the indictment; but he seems to have waited till the prosecutor had attained such a distance from him as not to be injured by the shot. He would rather appear to have fired after the prosecutor and his companions with the view of frightening them than with any serious intention of inflicting any injury to their persons. This conduct, though very reprehensible, is yet not sufficient to bring the case within the Act, and he ought therefore to be acquitted of the felony and convicted of an assault.

The jury found the prisoner guilty of a common assault accordingly.

Sentence—two months' imprisonment.

Wells was counsel for the prosecution, and Sanders for the defence.

Brewers.—By a return lately issued, it appears that there are in the United Kingdom 2,695 brewers, of which number 2,362 carry on business in England, 211 in Scotland, and 122 in Ireland. There are 86,234 victuallers in the United Kingdom. In England, 57,855; in Scotland, 15,501; and in Ireland 12,878. In England there are at the present period 31,729 persons licensed to sell beer to be drunk on the premises, and 4,022 persons to sell beer not to be drunk on the premises. There are no such licenses in Scotland or Ireland. In the United Kingdom there are 26,716 victuallers who brew their own beer. There are 26,715 persons licensed to sell beer to be drunk on the premises who brew their own beer, and 12,603 brewing their beer, not so licensed.

The Corn Laws.—An important and interesting return, as regards its bearing upon the operation of the laws affecting the importation and consumption of corn, grain, meal, and flour, has been printed by order of the House of Commons, on the motion of Mr. W. Miles, M.P. It appears from this paper, that during the year 1844, ending the 5th of January, 1845, the gross total quantity of wheat and wheat flour imported into this country amounted to 1,381,875 quarters: viz. 1,145,883 quarters of foreign, and 235,992 quarters of colonial, produce and growth. The quantity entered for home consumption during the same period amounted to 1,026,976 quarters, of which 791,385 quarters were of foreign, and 235,591 quarters of colonial growth and produce. The quantities remaining in the warehouse at the close of the year 1844 amounted altogether to 439,823 quarters. The largest importations of wheat and wheat flour appear to have taken place in the months of May, June, July, August, and September, and the smallest in the months of February and December. The quantities thrown upon the market, or, in other words, entered for home consumption, amounted in the month of July to 427,623 quarters, and in that of August to 187,504 quarters, or about two-thirds of the whole quantity entered for home consumption in 1844. The monthly average price of wheat in England and Wales was, in January, 1844, 51s. 1d.; in February, 53s. 5d.; in March, 56s. 6d.; in April, 55s. 4d.; in May, 55s. 6d.; in June, 55s. 8d.; in July, 54s. 4d.; in August, 50s.; in September, 46s. 4d.; in October, 46s. 2d.; in November, 45s. 11d.; and in December, 45s. 3d. per quarter: thus shewing that the price of wheat was never higher than 2*l.* 16s. 3d. nor lower than 2*l.* 5s. 3d. per quarter, giving opportunity for a difference between the two extreme prices of only 11s. a quarter. The total quantities of barley imported in 1844 amounted to 1,029,021 quarters, of which 1,022,076 quarters were entered for home consumption; the total quantity of oats and oatmeal imported to 304,757 quarters, of which 264,854 were entered for home consumption; the total quantities of rye and rye-meal imported to 26,591 quarters, and the total quantities entered for domestic consumption to 28,779; the total importation of pease to 109,176 quarters, and the quantities entered for home consumption to 122,984 quarters; and the total importation of beans to 154,582 quarters, and the total quantities entered for domestic consumption to 225,680 quarters. It further appears, according to this return, that the total quantity of corn, meal, and flour, the growth of Ireland, imported into Great Britain from the former country, amounted to 2,801,206 quarters, of which 440,153 quarters consisted of wheat and wheat flour, and 2,242,310 quarters of oats and oatmeal alone.

Bills in Progress.

DEATH BY ACCIDENTS COMPENSATION.

After reciting that no action at law is now maintainable against a person who, by his wrongful act, neglect, or default, may have caused the death of another person, and it is oftentimes right and expedient that the wrongdoer in such case should be answerable in damages for the injuries so caused by him; it enacts,—

1. That whensoever any person shall, by his wrongful act, neglect, or default, have caused the death of another person, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would (if death had not ensued) have entitled the party injured to maintain an action in any of her Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, and recover damages in respect thereof, then and in every such case the person causing such death shall be liable to an action for damages resulting therefrom, notwithstanding the death of the person injured.

2. That every such action shall be for the sole benefit of the wife or husband, or child or children of the person whose death shall have been so caused as aforesaid, and may and shall be brought by and in the name of the executor or executrix, or administrator or administratrix, or if there shall be neither executor or executrix, administrator or administratrix, then by the wife, or husband, or child, or one of the children, of the person deceased; and in every such action the jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the pecuniary injury resulting from such death to the parties respectively for whom and for whose benefit such action shall be brought; and the amount recovered, after deducting all costs in and about such proceedings, shall be divisible and divided amongst the before-mentioned parties in such shares and proportions as the jury by their verdict shall find and direct: Provided always, that not more than one action shall lie for and in respect of the same subject-matter of complaint; and if two or more actions in respect thereof shall at any time be brought, it shall be lawful for the court or a judge to order that the same may be consolidated, and also to direct in whose name the action after consolidation shall proceed, as well as to make such other orders therein as to them or him shall seem fit.

3. That in every such action the plaintiff on the record shall be required, together with the declaration, to deliver to the defendant or his attorney a particular of the person or persons for whom and on whose behalf damages shall be claimed in such action.

4. That nothing herein contained shall in any way or manner be construed to discharge or relieve any person or persons, corporation or company, from being proceeded against criminally for any matter done or omitted for which this Act provides a civil remedy; and that the amount of any damages and costs that may be recovered in any action as aforesaid shall and may be recoverable out of the lands, hereditaments, goods, and effects of any person or persons, corporation or company, notwithstanding the same shall and may have been forfeited to the Crown by the conviction of any person or persons causing such death, for felony or misdemeanor in consequence thereof.

5. That no voluntary deed, conveyance, or assignment, otherwise than for a valuable and bonâ fide consideration, made by any person or persons, corporation or company, after he or they shall have caused the death of any person or persons as aforesaid, shall be valid or binding as against the party entitled to recover damages and costs in any such action against such person or persons, corporation or company.

6. That no proceedings under and by virtue of this Act shall be commenced or taken before the expiration of three months, nor after the expiration of six months from the death of the party injured as aforesaid.

7. That in case any person who may have been so injured by the act, neglect, or default of another, and who may afterwards die in consequence thereof, shall in his lifetime have recovered damages in an action against or received compensation by agreement or compromise from the person or persons, bodies corporate, or company, for the injury he may so have sustained, then and in such case the remedies provided by this Act shall not accrue to the personal representatives or surviving relations of such deceased person as aforesaid.

8. That it shall be lawful, notwithstanding anything herein contained, for the personal representatives or surviving relations of any deceased persons as aforesaid to compromise any claim against any person or persons, bodies corporate or company, for injury or loss that he, she, or they may have sustained.

9. That the following words and expressions are intended to have the meanings hereby assigned to them respectively, so far as such meanings are not excluded by the context or by the nature of the subject-matter; that is to say, the word "person" to apply to bodies politic or corporate, whether sole or aggregate; and words denoting the singular number are to be understood to apply also to a plurality of persons or things; and words denoting the masculine gender are to be understood to apply also to persons of the feminine gender.

10. That this Act shall come into operation from and immediately after the passing thereof.

JEWISH DISABILITIES REMOVAL.

Reciting that the declaration prescribed by an Act of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 17, intituled "An Act for repealing so much of several Acts as imposes the Necessity of receiving the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper as a Qualification for certain Offices and Employments," on admission into office in municipal corporations, cannot conscientiously be made and subscribed by persons of the Jewish religion: it is therefore enacted, That, instead of the declaration required to be made and subscribed by the said recited Act, every person of the Jewish religion be permitted to make and subscribe the following declaration within one calendar month next before or upon his admission into the office of mayor, alderman, recorder, bailiff, town clerk, councillor, or any other municipal office in any city, town corporate, borough, or cinque port, within England and Wales, or the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed:

"I, A. B., being a person professing the Jewish religion, having conscientious scruples against subscribing the declaration contained in an Act passed in the 9 G. 4, intituled 'An Act for repealing so much of several Acts as imposes the necessity of receiving the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper as a Qualification for certain Offices and Employments,' do solemnly, and sincerely, and truly declare, That I will not exercise any power, or authority, or influence, which I may possess by virtue of the office of   to injure or weaken the Protestant Church as it is by law established in England, nor to disturb the said church, or the bishops and clergy of the said church, in the possession of any right or privileges to which such church or the said bishops and clergy may be by law entitled."

2. That such declaration shall be of the same force and effect as if the person making it had made and subscribed the declaration aforesaid contained in the said Act of the 9 G. 4, c. 17.

DIVORCE (PRIVY COUNCIL).

Reciting that it is expedient that the obtaining divorces à vinculo matrimonii should be rendered a remedy common to all classes of the community, and such cases may conveniently be considered by the Judicial Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council: it is enacted,—

1. That if any person shall present a petition to her Majesty in Council, complaining of adultery committed, and praying for a divorce à vinculo matrimonii, and her Majesty shall think proper to refer the same to the said committee, the matter of the petition shall be inquired of by the said committee, according to the usual course of proceeding, and according to such further rules and orders as it is hereinafter authorized and empowered to make; and if the said committee shall report that a divorce should be granted as prayed, then it shall be lawful for her Majesty to confirm the same report by order in council, and such order shall be binding on all parties, and shall have the force and effect of a divorce à vinculo matrimonii, any law, custom, or usage to the contrary, in any wise notwithstanding.

2. That the said judicial committee shall have power to make such rules and orders of proceeding as it shall deem fit for conducting the said inquiry, touching the requiring the proof of an action having been brought for criminal conversation by the said petitioner against the alleged adulterer, and a verdict having been obtained by him, touching the requiring the production of a sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court of separation à mensâ et thoro, touching the examination of the petitioner, and otherwise as to the said committee shall seem fit, and generally such rules and orders for regulating its proceedings in divorces as it shall think fit, which rules and orders, being submitted to her Majesty, and confirmed by order in council, shall be laid before both houses of parliament within one calendar month next after such order in council being made, if parliament be sitting, or if not, within one calendar month after the commencement of the then next session, and shall be deemed and taken to be binding on the said committee, and on all parties before it, in such matters of divorce, unless one or other house of parliament shall, within one calendar month after the same shall have been laid before it, present an address to her Majesty, praying that the said order in council may be rescinded, in which case such rules shall have no force or effect whatsoever.

3. That it shall and may be lawful for the said Judicial Committee to make it one condition of the granting such divorce that such provision shall be made for the wife, when divorced, as may seem reasonable and just in all the circumstances of the case, which conditions, if approved by her Majesty by order in council, shall be deemed and taken to be binding on the petitioner after the dissolution of his marriage; and the wife shall, after such dissolution, have such and the like remedies for recovery of the annuity granted as she would have had in case the said petitioner had executed a bond, or other instrument under seal, conditioned to pay such annuity, provided that the said Judicial Committee shall have power to require such petitioner to give his own bond, with securities, to be approved by the clerk of the council, for the discharge of such annuity.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

Again the week is without an incident requiring particular notice.

THE GAME LAWS.

Very widely erroneous notions prevail on this subject from the dictum we lately heard fall from a learned judge, that game was as much the property of the person whose land fed it as the coat on his back, down to the equally extravagant error of supposing that game ought to be regarded by the law in the same light as sparrows.

We take no extreme view of the matter: so long as game continues to be a luxury by the sale of which money is to be made, and so long as game feed on corn and are incapable of being reclaimed, so long will the peculiarity of the case necessitate provisions adapted to meet it.

Is it just, and ought it to be so esteemed, to allow no sort of prior right or facility to him who feeds game to benefit by the produce of that food? If the game be not his property, that which fattens it and gives it its growth and its value is his property. And yet are there men who contend that there should be no law or obstacle to prevent any one, not only from taking the game thus fed without let or hindrance; but that all the world should be at liberty to go by night with dogs and guns into other people's land, whereon game is fed, to take it there. This is what the law forbids, and what they who make outcry against the law approve of being done. The law goes no further, in point of fact, than to punish poachers for doing that, armed by night, which it were illegal to do unarmed by day, and remediable by action at law! With day poaching the game-laws do not interfere further than by fiscal regulations and by exacting a license from all who carry guns; subject to which proviso, every one is now at full liberty to kill game on his own land, or on that of another person with the leave of that person. (See 1 & 2 Wm 4, c. 32, s. 6.) When we hear the lavish abuse poured upon the game-laws, we are sometimes half disposed to believe that those who indulge in it are ignorant what the game-laws are. Any thing more lenient and irrepressive of innocent liberty it were difficult to devise; and yet the government are beset with entreaties to interfere, because in the execution of these mild and merciful enactments it happens sometimes through the passions of poachers that strife and bloodshed occur.

This is a perilous argument for the abolition of the law, unless resistance is a reason for the removal of restraint, and it be deemed fit to instruct the people that order yields to violence, and law to lawlessness; that the more sturdily and bloodily they resist, the more effectual the victory of outrage! If so, there is wisdom in this lesson to the lawless, and this premium to the passions. But if not, what becomes of the argument for abolishing a law because it is violently broken?

In point of fact, how stands this objection? The occurrence of outrage is clearly an evil much to be deplored. Is it, however, one of great magnitude and frequent occurrence? Ten thousand times has it been so stated with all the emphasis of conviction. Let us bring the case to the sober test of facts and figures, and, dispensing for a moment with the romance and even the philanthropy of the matter, let us see whether these occurrences are numerous or not. Here are the "Tables of Criminal Offenders for 1843," a Parliamentary return, where we find that the total number of persons convicted of the offence of night poaching during the whole year, and throughout all England and Wales, was 172! being the one hundred and twenty-third part of the entire conviction for crimes, and one-seventieth part of the simple larcenies alone! True it is that the summary convictions are not included for shooting by day without license, or for trespass by day in search of game, where the offender cannot pay the fine; and true it is, that imprisonment is in itself an evil, and much is it to be desired that our gaols were rendered places of improvement as well as of punishment. But does not this very fact shew how wrong-headed and perversely obliquitous are the anti-game-law party? Their objection is virtually against the system of prison discipline. But if so, why do they not expend their wrath and exert their power against that real and enormous evil, instead of diverting attention to a matter comparatively insignificant? This is the great moral ground on which we denounce all these mighty efforts to assail minor evils—they give protection to parent abuses. Have we not in our magisterial system, in our poor-laws, and in our prisons, ample evils to correct, which it is vitally needful to take in hand before we descend to the sufferings of poachers, who are mostly composed of dissolute and vicious men?

We do not deny that some modification might possibly be made for the better in the game-laws; but seeing the vast improvement they have at no distant period undergone, we earnestly invite the magistrates and the country to devote their minds to something of more sterling utility and pressing need, than Mr. Bright's fondness for farmers and pity for partridges,—classes of creation capable of taking ample care of themselves. S.

PROOF OF PATERNITY UNDER THE BASTARDY ACT.

A correspondent in the Law Times of the 15th instant suggests "that no woman, who can be shewn within a given time to have cohabited with more than one man, or who can be proved to be a person of lewd life, ought to be permitted to obtain an order on any person for the maintenance of her bastard. One reason for this is, that she is required to swear to the father, and this in the great majority of cases no such woman can do without perjury, inasmuch as she cannot possibly herself know to whom the honours of paternity should justly be given."

We have given consideration to the important provision our correspondent proposes. We cannot assent to it. Injustice might be done by it. The fact that a woman is profligate is not of itself a sufficient reason why the man who really is the father of her child is to be exempted from the support of his own offspring. The child is not the less his, nor are the obligations of a father less incumbent upon him. The difficulty of proof is another question: but it requires no Act of Parliament to provide against the danger of a mistake on this score. It is always open to the man to throw suspicion on the woman's testimony by evidence of her intercourse with others. Our experience is that such evidence has too much, rather than too little, influence on justices. It is rare in many places that a woman, whose testimony is thus shaken, succeeds in obtaining an order. Unless in gross and extreme cases, we believe the woman has not the uncertainty as to the father of her offspring, which our correspondent fancies. In those few cases she would certainly fail in nineteen cases out of twenty in obtaining an order; therefore the abuse would not obtain.

"The English law (he goes on to say) recognizes no action for seduction even, much less does it encourage the arts of the harlot, by permitting her to extort from the person she has seduced, a premium for her wickedness."

We are rather sceptical as to this seduction of men by women. We have a strong suspicion that these male innocents are rare occurrences. We never remember to have seen an authenticated instance of one. The English law recognizes no action for seduction, simply on the principle of volenti non fit injuria. The principle of making a man pay a trifle to the support of his own child, is because the child is his, and there exists a natural claim upon him to do so, which the law properly and justly enforces. The words "premium for her wickedness" are a mere flourish of speech, exceedingly deceptive and perfectly groundless in fact. If our correspondent will try the experiment of supporting a child till it is thirteen years old on 2s. 6d. per week, he will find it any thing but a premium. We believe the law as it stands to be humane, politic, and Christian; and we have every conviction that, in a vast majority of cases, the measure of justice falls short, if at all, on the woman's side.

JUSTICES' CLERKS. BASTARDY AND REMOVAL ORDERS, &c.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—What is all this about? asked the Bishop of Exeter; and, What are justices' clerks? Ask lawyers.

It is truly amusing at times to peruse the correspondence contained in your valuable publication, and now more particularly as affects Mr. Lumley's bastardy orders, and other persons' removal orders, &c., and though last not least, a letter from York, inserted in your last week's Law Times, wherein the writer recommends you to supply an invulnerable order of removal, "whereby you would do more to raise your position as distinguished lawyers than you imagine;" and I imagine that this proposed form of order is expected to supersede the necessity of justices' clerks having any legal capacity for preparing the necessary examinations and other documents upon which such order is to be grounded. I was not aware, until I read this letter, that there was any difficulty in preparing an order of removal, as its antique form is already almost invulnerable.

The recommendations and observations communicated to you on these subjects are all of a piece with that most curious mode of retrospective legislation proposed to be adopted for making legal Mr. Lumley's form of order in bastardy, than which a more inefficient document (in omitting almost every legal ingredient) could not by the most obtuse legal pretenders have been prepared. For my part, I have been greatly surprised that it should have been adopted at all, and such general adoption speaks volumes not only against the legal acumen of Mr. Lumley in these matters, but of the justices' clerks who made use of it.

It appears to me that the proposed legalizing of Mr. Lumley's orders, and the adoption of any form of order as a complete nostrum in the proposed amendment act, will cause a great anomaly, as the law with respect to such documents is, in legal principle, only the law of the land as regards all other documents whereby the liberty of the subject is assailed, and it is more than absurd to expect that documents purporting to be legal should only be required to be prepared as now intimated, and brought down to suit the capacity and slovenliness of any "'prentice hand."

One great fault is in the selection of justices' clerks from political favouritism, very often not from the ranks of the profession at all, and without any regard to their standing as respects their legal character and attainments; and the consequence is, that although the law very reasonably, and having especial regard to the liberty of the subject, as well in these as in other similar cases, requires a statement of circumstances to be fully made out to establish a settlement, according to the ingredients of each settlement, as fully contained and particularized in the specific Act of Parliament for that purpose, before a man and his family can be forced from their home and their dearest connexions, yet it very generally happens, that such justices' clerks omit some of the ingredients referring to such settlement as laid down and easily to be understood on examination of such specific Act of Parliament, and sometimes, yea, often, their examinations not containing an ingredient at all.

Why, Sir, no greater nicety is required in stating the evidence in examinations upon which removal orders are grounded, whereby a man is to be forcibly ejected from all he holds dear, than in any other case where the liberty of the subject is in jeopardy. And, constitutionally speaking, why should not the ingredients be fully developed and established wherein the poor man is so much concerned? I think it ought to be the more so, on account of his poverty and utter helplessness to remedy any irregularities.

These matters must be scrutinized like all other legal matters, and it is high time to get rid of the crudities and absurdities promulgated by persons calling themselves attorneys-at-law, when, in fact, at law has nothing to do with their capacities, and often with their other avocations.

It appears to me that a convenient expediency is sought to be substituted for law, and I imagine that if, instead of your making the attempt to draw an invulnerable order, you will set your wits to work, and eke out a specific for the invulnerability of some folks' intellects, "you will do more to raise your position as distinguished lawyers than you imagine."

The incapacities of justices' clerks are so notorious, that I and many other settlement attorneys prepare our own documents, and pay the clerks' fees (which apparently suits their appetite and convenience); our clients preferring to pay a few extra shillings, and sometimes pounds, rather than trust to such clerks. But it would be more consonant with justice (until a proper selection of clerks take place), if attorneys, in whom their clients repose confidence, should be allowed to prepare such documents without paying fees to such clerks as are now in being, very generally, than by making the Quixotic attempt to bring down the requirements of the law to their imbecile notions.

I fear that neither you nor the Secretary for the Home Department has as yet been made fully acquainted with the sort of justices' clerks that are employed by county justices to prepare legal process in very many districts, and it is very advisable that such appointments should be examined into. It would do great service if some law society or influential M.P. would obtain a return of justices' clerks, their mode of appointment, legal standing, additions, and descriptions; as it is certainly too much to expect, at this day, that inferior courts of justice, which are becoming so very general, and exercise so much power over the subject, should, for want of legal knowledge, have conferred upon them greater powers of dispensing with the bulwarks of the law than superior courts.

Before closing these observations, I will take the further liberty of asserting that the ignorance I refer to is not confined to cases of bastardy and removal, but the same or similar defects are to be found in most other documents emanating from the like source, wherein any thing out of the common jogtrot mode is requisite; and if the system be not altogether remedied, the legislature will be required, on many more occasions than those now proposed, to interfere, for the purpose of counteracting the evils arising from the appointment of inefficient clerks, and the utter absence of care and tact in the drawing of Acts of Parliament.

If I may be allowed to deviate from the text afforded me by the observations contained in the letter from York, and apply myself to the remarks that have been often recently made as to the numerous cases which have been brought before the Court of Queen's Bench on points of law, caused by the carelessness and deficiency of justices' clerks, and which are put forth as grounds for extraordinary legislation, may I not, with very great propriety, ask of you and your readers, what have been the sufferings of the many poor persons who have been illegally convicted and otherwise injured in their property and persons? it being notorious, that at petty sessions in country places, almost without exception, legal evidence is dispensed with, and in lieu thereof, a sort of "mixty, maxty, queer hotch potch," of what the clerks and justices call Law and Equity, as relates to evidence, is fully allowed and approved of—nay, I have often heard it boldly asserted, that such Courts are not bound by the rules of legal evidence at all. If the poor are to be protected, to be mercifully dealt with and to have full justice done, it is absolutely necessary to abide by the strict letter of the law, or those who are otherwise helpless will be still more so, and the dicta of any justice and his clerk will effectually swamp, very often, the only chance for justice. The very forms of the law are the substances of the law, to the poor man, more than to any other person.

If the country gentlemen, taking upon themselves the onerous duty of justices of the peace, find themselves in a dilemma, let them at once abrogate their present appointments, meet and choose their clerks from the talent of the Profession, for their several petty sessional divisions, and I have no doubt but they will easily select gentlemen every way conversant with the groundwork and practice of the law, and ready to advise as true amici curiæ, and to take upon themselves the pecuniary responsibility of their acts.

I trust the present "cacoethes scribendi" of some justices' clerks, which is not only ridiculous but lamentable, will be futile, and I am thankful that we have as yet a House of Lords to whom the proposed alterations will have to be submitted. It is evident, that as regards the law, it is our "dernier ressort" for better expectations.

I hope that nothing which I have written can possibly be deemed to apply offensively to many regular professional gentlemen performing the duties of justices' clerks, whose legal acquirements are well known to be an honour to the office and to the magistrates who have selected them.

En passant, I may observe that as respects both bastardy and removal matters, all the points of law which have of late so much annoyed the little lawyers, have been nearly worked up, and it is the opinion, at least, of the West Riding Bar, that this periodical tinkering is requisite to provide food for its astuteness, and is generally hailed as a harbinger of their future harvest.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

DISCHARGED PRISONERS' PASSES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—A man bearing a pass which purported to be of the above description, was lately apprehended and convicted of vagrancy, as a person wandering abroad to beg alms, &c. under 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 3, the pass being considered to be a palpable and gross forgery, for the following reasons:—

1. It was not sealed with any county or special seal, the essential mark of genuineness, which the Act expressly requires, for the most obvious reasons.

2. It contained a circuitous route for the bearer, taking him to a large town fully ten miles out of his direct road, and that within about sixty miles of the place of issue.

3. It was defective in the omission of no less than four very important parts of the form (schedule B of the Act), which the Act expressly requires to be followed, viz. the title or heading, and the N.B. at the foot, of the first or certificate form, the "directions for filling up" at the end of the second or route form, and the "memorandum for the guidance of the overseers," &c. at the end of the third or description form.

4. It was without a printer's name, and was meanly printed, and the signatures and seals were of suspicious appearance.

This document was transmitted, for examination, to the clerk of the peace for the county from whence it purported to emanate, in the full assurance that its spurious character would be confirmed. But your readers will be as surprised as I was myself, to learn that the reply was, "The pass is genuine, the circuitous route was inserted by mistake, we have no county seal!"

Perhaps a portion of your widely circulated paper will be usefully occupied in publishing these facts, that visiting justices and clerks of the peace may be aware of the mischief which they may do, by neglecting the plainest provisions of this Act of Parliament, while professing to act under it.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

24th March, 1845. W. P. P.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—That a justices' clerk ought in no case to be concerned for any party litigant before the justices whom he serves, I, as a justices' clerk, most readily concede. I had supposed that such a course was universally abandoned by clerks, and prohibited by justices.

But this is all that your correspondent "Audi alteram partem" attempts to prove, in his letter in your last; and the letter of Mr. Trevor in the LAW TIMES of the 15th inst. remains untouched by him. The argument of this gentleman is only in favour of the clerk's supporting the acts of his justices in ulterior proceedings, subsequent to the completion of the acts themselves.

In prosecutions for felony, two principal duties devolve on the attorney. The first is the conduct of the prosecution itself, including getting up the case, instructing counsel, preferring the indictment, &c. to the close of the trial. The second is, to obtain the allowance of the expenses, and to pay over the due amount to the prosecutor and witnesses.

For the former duty the clerk is especially fitted by his education and professional habits; few respectable attorneys, except such as hold this office, giving themselves the trouble to study criminal law and practice. His previous official knowledge of the case greatly facilitates the efficient discharge of the duty of prosecution. And the county allowance for professional attendance is in general so extremely low, that it is not worth the acceptance of a respectable attorney in single cases; whereas the clerk, conducting numerous cases at the same assizes, is sufficiently, though moderately, paid for his services, without expense to the prosecutor.

With regard to the second duty of receiving and accounting for the allowed costs, if justices' clerks be forbidden to prosecute, the business will, probably, for the reasons above assigned, often fall into less respectable hands; and, consequently, prosecutors and witnesses will frequently (as already in some cases so conducted they do) find great difficulty in obtaining their money. This does not happen when the justices' clerk prosecutes, both because the clerks are generally men of character, and also because any malversation would be easily checked by an appeal to the justices whom they serve, and who have absolute power to dismiss them.

So that when the clerk prosecutes, the usual result is that the case is intelligently and respectably conducted, the prosecutor is exempt from expense, and the allowances are faithfully accounted for.

If any other respectable attorney prosecute, either the prosecutor must pay him, or he must be inadequately paid. If an attorney of a different character, he will, probably, first neglect the case, and then pocket the allowances, leaving the poor prosecutor and witnesses, and, perhaps, even the counsel also, to their remedy at law!

The only objection suggested to the clerk's prosecuting is, that he may possibly advise improper commitments, in order to obtain prosecutions! How gross a libel, not on him merely, but on his employers, the county magistracy! They are suspected of first selecting as their clerk a mean and hungry pettifogger, and then allowing themselves to be persuaded by him into the grossest injustice upon a plain question of fact!

I am yours, &c.

POOR LAW CIRCULAR.

ACCOUNTS.

COST OF OBTAINING COUNSEL'S OPINION ON RATING LIGHTHOUSE.

June 7, 1844.

Auditor of Eastbourne Union—Inquired, as to the propriety of allowing, in the accounts of the overseers of East Dean, certain charges incurred by them, under the authority of the vestry, in obtaining counsel's opinion, with regard to the assessment of the dues derivable in respect of a lighthouse situated in that parish.

Ans. There is no fixed rule for determining the occasions on which overseers may properly employ professional persons; but it may be observed generally, that when the difficulties of any case are such, that it is not to be expected that overseers can proceed without professional advice or assistance, any reasonable expense incurred for such advice or assistance would be allowable in the overseers' accounts, as a charge incidental to the due execution of their office. Having thus stated the general principle applicable to such cases, the Commissioners must leave it to yourself to determine, in the present instance, whether, under all the circumstances, there was sufficient doubt or difficulty in the matter to justify the overseers in seeking professional advice. The Commissioners themselves will merely remark, that they do not perceive any circumstances which could have occasioned any such difficulty; that is to say, they do not see that the case of the lighthouse in question was in any material respect distinguishable from the cases in which lighthouse dues had been expressly held to be not rateable—nor do they consider there was any good ground for supposing that those decisions would be likely to be reversed, and a new principle of rating adopted, with regard to this description of property. The overseers of East Dean were fully aware of those decisions. The Commissioners think it right to add, that if the overseers were not justified by the circumstances of the case in obtaining the opinion of counsel, the sanction of the vestry would not of itself be sufficient to authorize the proceeding. The decision in R. v. Guyer (4 Nev. & Man. 158) shews, that where the law does not authorize the charging of any particular payment on the poor-rate, the mere concurrence of the vestry will be no protection to the overseers.

FIRE-ENGINE.

EXPENSES OF REPAIRING, NOT PAYABLE OUT OF THE POOR RATES.

May 25, 1844.

Overseers of Botesdale, Hartismere Union—Stated, that there was belonging to the parish of Botesdale a fire-engine, which for many years past had been kept in repair by voluntary contributions; but this means of preserving it in a state of efficiency had entailed an annual expense on a few individuals, while others, claiming the use of the instrument, refused their assistance; so that at length the overseers were without any funds wherewith to pay for keeping it in a proper and useful state. Requested to know whether charges for needful repair, and other necessary expenses, might not be paid out of the poor-rate, in which case all would bear a proportion of the burden.

Ans.—The only enactments of which the Commissioners are aware, authorising the provision and repair of fire-engines at the charge of the poor-rates, are the 12 Geo. 3, c. 73, and 14 Geo. 3, c. 78; and these statutes extend only to the cities of London and Westminster, certain parishes in Middlesex specially named, and other parishes within the bills of mortality. The Commissioners fully recognise the utility and importance of maintaining such engines in a state of efficiency, but they are nevertheless constrained to state, that however desirable the object in question may be in itself, there does not appear to be any lawful authority for charging the expense upon the poor-rates, in parishes which do not come within the range of the above-named statutes.

LUNATIC.—MAINTENANCE OF.

June 8, 1844.

Clerk of the Bingham Union—Stated, that Sarah the wife of Henry Richardson, about eight years ago, being a confirmed lunatic, and chargeable to the parish of St. Peter, Nottingham, was placed by that parish in the Nottingham Lunatic Asylum. An order of justices was then obtained under the 9th Geo. 4, c. 40, for the maintenance of the lunatic in the asylum by the parish of Tollerton (in the Bingham Union), where her settlement was adjudged to be. The parish of Tollerton did not at the time investigate the lunatic's settlement, but paid for her maintenance under the order, until about five years ago, when the same was continued to be paid by the board of guardians, and charged to the parish. In September, 1843, Henry Richardson became chargeable to the parish of St. Peter, Nottingham, and an order for his removal to Tollerton was obtained. The parish officers of Tollerton then investigated the matter of the settlement of the parties, and found that neither of them had any settlement there. In consequence of this, the parish officers gave notice of appeal against the order of removal, which was eventually quashed, but not on the merits, and they therefore gave notice to the board of guardians, not to make any further payment on account of the lunatic's maintenance in the asylum. The board of guardians and the parish officers respectively also gave notice to the managers of the asylum, that no such payment would in future be made; the managers of the asylum, however, disregarded these notices, alleging that they held an order for the maintenance of the lunatic by the parish of Tollerton, and they had accordingly made a demand on the guardians of the Bingham Union for the quarter's maintenance, due the 25th of March last. Requested the Commissioners' advice under the above circumstances.

Ans.—An order of removal unappealed against, has been decided by the courts to be conclusive evidence, as to the pauper's settlement, up to the date of such order. The Commissioners are not aware of any case in which this principle has been expressly held to be applicable to orders of maintenance under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 40. But where such an order has been made, and notice of it has been given to the parish of the alleged settlement, and that parish has submitted to it, allowing the time of appeal to go by, without appealing, the Commissioners are disposed to consider that the principle above referred to would apply to such a case, in the same manner as it does to orders of removal. The Commissioners, therefore, think that, as the parish officers of Tollerton, in the present instance, acquiesced in the order for the wife's maintenance under 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, and did not appeal against it as the might have done, they were concluded by it with regard to the settlement up to that time. Then, there is nothing to shew that any subsequent settlement has been obtained by the pauper. The order for the removal of the husband to Tollerton was quashed, but not (it is stated) on the merits. Consequently it proves nothing, one way or other: as to the settlement, if it had been quashed on the merits, there might have been a question how far the former order, under 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, being unappealed against, could be affected by it. Under the circumstances stated, the Commissioners see no reason to suppose that the order of maintenance could now be successfully resisted by the parish officers of Tollerton.

OVERSEERS

BOUND OVER TO PROSECUTE IN A CASE OF MANSLAUGHTER COSTS NOT PAYABLE OUT OF THE POOR-RATES.

June 28, 1844.

Messrs. Collins and Son, Bodmin—Stated that, in the month of October 1842, two men, whilst returning from a fair at Wadebridge in a drunken state, rode over and killed a poor woman, who was a pauper of the parish of Egloshayle; a coroner's inquest was held on the body, when a verdict of manslaughter was returned. The coroner then summoned the overseers of the parish of Egloshayle before him, and bound them in heavy penalties to prosecute at the next assizes, and committed one of the men to prison to answer the charge. The overseers being thus bound to prosecute, employed them (Messrs. Collins and Son) for that purpose, and the party was accordingly tried at the March assizes 1843. The overseers and parishioners were desirous that the costs of the prosecution should be paid, but the auditor objected to allow the amount in the overseers' accounts, considering it a charge which should not have been incurred by them. The overseers had no discretion in the matter after being bound in heavy penalties to prosecute, and without it no prosecution would have taken place. Requested the Commissioners' sanction to the overseers, under the circumstances, paying these costs out of the poor-rates. The coroner stated, that the course always pursued by him in all cases where the party injured is a pauper, was the one adopted in the present instance, in order to secure the proper prosecution of the offenders, and he contended that he had a legal right to do so.

Ans.—The Commissioners do not doubt the power of the coroner, under 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, to bind over by recognizance any person to prosecute in a case of manslaughter, who may know or declare any thing material touching the matter to be tried. But his power does not extend to binding over persons to prosecute in their official capacity. There is no obligation or duty attaching to overseers, as such, to prosecute charges of murder or manslaughter. They, in common with other persons, are liable to be bound over, but it is not as overseers, but as individuals. It consequently follows, that if they are bound over in any case, they cannot lawfully apply the funds which come to their hands for a specific purpose (viz. the relief of the poor) to the payment of any costs incurred in the prosecution which may not be allowed by the county. The practice, therefore, of binding over overseers in such cases (inasmuch as it proceeds upon the erroneous assumption that they have public funds at their disposal applicable to the payment of the costs of the prosecution) is much to be regretted. The Commissioners consider that the auditor would have no alternative, but to disallow as unfounded any payment of this nature which might be entered in the accounts of the overseers.

RECOVERY OF BALANCES FROM A DEFAULTING OVERSEER, WHO BECAME INSOLVENT.

June 27, 1844.

Clerk of the Alton Union—Forwarded resolutions of the vestry of Bentworth parish, whereby it appeared that the overseer, who had become insolvent, was in default with the parish, and that the vestry considered it inexpedient to proceed against him for the recovery, on account of the expense of the proceeding and the uncertainty of the result, requested to have the Commissioners' opinion thereon.

Ans.—The Commissioners cannot, of course, express any opinion as to the probable success of any proceeding which might be taken against the defaulting overseer, with a view to the recovery of the balance in his possession. It nevertheless appears to the Commissioners a case in which it would be proper that some endeavour should be made to protect the parish from loss. Such proceedings may not be effectual, but the present overseers will have discharged their duty in instituting them. If the defaulting overseer has not accounted to the justices, he can be required to do so, under 50 Geo. 3, c. 49. If he has accounted, and the justices have found a balance due from him, and such balance has not been paid over to the succeeding overseers, such overseers can apply to the justices to issue their warrant for the recovery of the balance; and in default of a sufficient distress, the defaulting overseer can be committed until the balance is paid, (50 Geo. 3, c. 49.) On the other hand, the overseer who is represented to have misapplied the moneys of the parish can be preceeded against, under the 97th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act, for such misapplication. If the justices should convict, the offender will be liable to pay treble the amount or value of the money misapplied. The Commissioners think it necessary to add, that in case the balance in hand, or any portion of it, should be recovered, the present overseers will of course be bound to charge themselves in their accounts with the moneys so obtained.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

Holiday has reigned in legal circles, and there is not so much as a rumour calling for comment.

This rest will enable us to clear off a heavy arrear, preparatory to the now fast approaching labours of the Term.

The civil business of the present circuit has been remarkably light. The assigned cause is the absorption of lawyers and clients in railway speculations.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE CITY LAW COURTS.

The sub-committee, to whom "all matters and things" connected with the proposed improvement of the city Law Courts were referred—namely, Messrs. Ashurst, Farrar, Anderton, Harrison, Barnard, Taylor, Thomas Wood, and John Wood were referred, have agreed to a report, which will be discussed by the Court of Common Council on Thursday next. The sub committee submitted to the Recorder the recommendations before made with regard to the Mayor's Court—to wit:—

"MAYOR'S COURT.

"1. The court to be thrown open to all practitioners.

"2. Counsel, duly admitted of the inns of court, to be allowed to plead, although the common pleaders of the city, have not been first feed. Such of the common pleaders of the city as are entitled to be compensated for the loss they will sustain by their not being necessarily feed before other counsel are employed.

"3. Attorneys duly admitted in the superior courts of Westminster Hall, on production of their certificate, and copy of their freedom, and residing within the city, and being enrolled in this court, to be admitted to practise in this court.

"The clerks of the Mayor's Court who at present have the exclusive right of appearing in it as attorneys, to be compensated (with the exception of the junior) by present sum or annuity for the loss they will sustain by losing that exclusive right; and for the loss of the right of alienation of their office, by some sum to be now ascertained, but to be paid at their respective deaths.

"4. The registrar or his deputy, to exercise for the future his ancient power of administering the affidavit to found a foreign attachment, upon the application of any attorney enrolled as above; but no such attachment to issue without the judge's fiat, or the order of the registrar or his deputy, the latter having respectively given good security.

"5. Pledges to be taken by the registrar, or his deputy, according to regulations of that purpose.

"Due security to be given by the registrar and deputy-registrar.

"6. Judge.—To meet the expected increase of business in the court, by its being thrown open, the present Judge of the Sheriffs' Court to preside as assistant to the Recorder, whenever required by the Recorder to do so, or if appointed by him for that purpose."

These propositions having been submitted to the Recorder, that gentleman gave in writing the following remarks on them:—

"1. I entertain doubts of the expediency of throwing open the Mayor's Court to the bar without restriction. The common pleaders are required to be freemen of London, and take an oath of office as common pleaders.

"2. If the suggested alterations for the improvement of the court should occasion any considerable addition to the business, it would be worthy of consideration whether the number of common pleaders should not be increased by act of Common Council.

"3. The Mayor's Court is a court by custom, and is essentially a court for the benefit of the citizens of London. The attorneys admitted to practise in the court should not only be free of the city, but resident within the jurisdiction.

"3. I am indisposed to effect any change in the existing customary mode of proceeding in foreign attachment.

"5. In order to preserve this important custom, it is essential to adhere to ancient form and practice. Before I can sanction a departure from the present mode of proceeding, the suggested ancient power of the registrar should be fully authenticated.

"6. This is in accordance with my own suggestion, and in strictness would only require the concurrence of the Court of Mayor and Aldermen; but, inasmuch as it imposes new duties upon an officer appointed by the Court of Common Council, their consent and approbation should be obtained. The suggested compensations appear equitable and just."

In a further conference between the Recorder and the sub-committee, the Recorder was heard again, and stated that he saw no reason to change his opinion, and therefore adhered to it.

The sub committee then turned their attention to the Sheriff's Court, and agreed to the following:—

"First. To enlarge the amount below which the cause should not be removeable.

"Second. That the process and subpœna should be compulsory wherever served. And "Third. That the execution should follow the defendant into any county.

"The sub-committee thereupon directed Mr. Solicitor to prepare the draft of a bill to accomplish these objects, adding any clauses for strengthening and improving the court in other respects that might appear to him desirable, and to lay the same before us for consideration; but such directions to the solicitor were subject to the confirmation of us, your committee, and were given only that time might be saved, and a rough draft of the bill be prepared for further consideration."

The whole question, as we have said, will come under the consideration of the Court of Common Council on Thursday.

A SUCCESSFUL RAILWAY PROPRIETOR.—The Duke of Devonshire, after having disposed of his extensive and very valuable estates near Ripon and Boroughbridge, is now offering his vast and magnificent property in Londesborough, near Market Weighton, for sale. The value of the Londesborough estate is rated at upwards of 500,000*l*. and, it is said, they have been offered to George Hudson, esq. of York, the great capitalist and rail proprietor, who is already an extensive purchaser of the noble duke's property in Yorkshire.—Newcastle Journal.

LIBERALITY OF LAWYERS.—We gladly insert the following communication from an esteemed correspondent:—The munificent donation and bequest of Mr. Jonathan Brundrett to the University of London is well known. The late Mr. Thorp, of Alnwick, in Northumberland, brother of Archdeacon Thorp, D.D. Warden of Durham University, by a testamentary bequest, established a scholarship in that university. Mr. Ralph Lindsay has also founded a like scholarship of 40*l*. a-year in the same university for natives of the diocese educated for three years at the Durham Grammar School, tenable for four years. We must not omit, also, the kindness and liberality of the late Mr. Hobler, of the Lord Mayor's Office, towards the City of London School, on the site of Honeylane Market, established under the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 35, to carry out the benevolent intentions of Mr. John Carpenter, formerly a solicitor and town-clerk of the city of London, who, by his will, founded four scholarships, and charged his estates, known as "The Carpenter Estates," with the burden thereof.—Legal Observer.

A LAWYER OUTDONE.—Robert Roache, a notorious pickpocket, was on Monday last, at the borough sessions, tried and convicted, for the third time, and sentenced to ten years' transportation. Like all other rogues, although conscious of his guilt, he was anxious to secure the services of a barrister to plead his cause before the jury. He had been too often similarly circumstanced not to be aware that this could only be done through the intervention of an attorney, and accordingly he sent for Mr. Owen, a gentleman at present enjoying a considerable amount of practice in this town. The thief was well aware, also, that unless he had something tangible to offer to the man of law, not one step would be taken towards his defence. He pleaded his poverty, but stated that the day before he was apprehended he had purchased a very valuable lever watch, which he was willing to hand over as security for the payment of the necessary fees. It is generally considered that lawyers act upon the maxim, "All is fish that comes to the net," and in this instance, at least, there was no objection to the terms proposed. The brief was duly prepared, and an able counsel, Mr. James, retained for the defence. During the day, the attorney, doubtless thinking it was time he had the "ticker" in his possession, instructed the counsel to apply to the recorder for an order to have the watch delivered up to him. The prisoner was charged with stealing handkerchiefs; the recorder said he had no objection to comply with the request, as he had nothing to shew that the watch was stolen, or had any reference to the charge upon which the prisoner stood indicted. Matters being thus far comfortably arranged, inquiries began to be made as to the patent lever. The prisoner said it had been taken from him by Mr. Tuck, bridewell keeper. Mr. Tuck was sent for, and when questioned upon the subject, stated that he had taken a brass chain attached to a potato from the prisoner, but that he had seen nothing of any watch. The "patent lever" was immediately sent for, and it turned out to be nothing more nor less than a potato, to which was attached a piece of brass chain, probably worth twopence, with which the "knowing one" had been "sporting his figure" at Lucas's repository, and other places, the resort of gentlemen. Of course there was an outrageous burst of laughter in the court at this disclosure, and the mirth was increased when the Recorder said, "I am sorry to see, Mr. James, that your lever watch turns out to be a potato." We suppose that the only party who would not join in the amusement would be the unfortunate attorney, who would, in common parlance, "laugh on the wrong side of his mouth."—Liverpool Mercury.

APPEAL BUSINESS IN THE HOUSE OF LORDS.—Since the opening of the session, the despatch of appeal business with respect to the hearing of causes is almost, if not entirely, without precedent. As many as twenty cases have been argued, and of those not a few have received judgment. On Monday, the 7th of April, the first day of the House sitting after the Easter recess on judicial business, two causes are fixed for hearing viz. Viscount Dungannon v. Smith, and Jack v. M'Entire. The following cases have been referred to the Appeal Committee:—Foley v. Hill; Ranger v. the Great Western Railway Company; Farmer v. Farmer (two appeals); Adams v. Evans; Thorneycroft v. Crockett; Robertson v. Pattinson; Lady E. R. Hastings v. The Marquis of Hastings; and Lord Montgomerie v. The Earl of Eglintoun; but until the committee shall have decided that the standing orders have been complied with, and the appeals are competent, no time can be mentioned for hearing them. In addition to the appeal causes fixed, as well as those before the appeal committee which have not yet been determined, there is the "Crawford and Lindsay Peerage" case to be submitted to a committee of privileges—the petition of the claimant James, Earl of Balcarres, for leave to lodge cases, as it is technically termed, having been considered by the House and allowed. With respect to that branch of the Auchterarder case which has been fully argued at the bar, The Rev. Dr. Gor- don v. The Earl of Kinnoul, rumour asserts that the decision of the Court of Session will be reversed when the judgment of the House of Lords is given. This, it is believed, will give to the ministers and party seceding from the Church of Scotland a sort of triumph; but the point in dispute nowise interferes with the previous decisions of the House establishing the right of the patron of benefices to present, calling upon the presbytery to confirm it, provided the presentee be duly qualified to perform the duties imposed upon him by law, and also provided he be of good moral character and of unexceptionable life. The judgment is to be given on Thursday, the 10th of April.

It has been rumoured that the Lords of the Judicial Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council, finding the cases in appeal from these islands occupy too much of their time, and occasion much inconvenience, have resolved to recommend to her Majesty the appointment of a revising barrister, whose special duty it would be to come here four times a year to report on such cases.—Jersey Times.

The will is in the colonel's handwriting, and dated 25th of April, 1843. Desires that his funeral should be private, one mourning coach, and that no carriages should follow. Leaves specific bequests to his son William Frederick, and to his daughter Louisa, wife of Lieut. Willan, Royal Artillery, and bequeaths to his grandchildren, the children of the latter, ten shares in the Van Diemen's Land Company. Leaves the rest of the property to his four sons, after the death of their mother (who is to enjoy the interest for her life), and regrets it is so small. Personal estate under 7,000*l*. — Historical Register.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LEGAL ASSOCIATION.

The following correspondence has passed between this Society and the Incorporated Law Society.

To R. MAUGHAM, Esq. Secretary to the Incorporated Law Society.

March 10, 1845.

SIR,—I am directed by the council of the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association, to state that they have reason to fear that much misconception prevails among the members of the Law Institution, in regard to the objects of the Legal Association, —that in the consciousness that those objects are substantially the same as those of the Law Institution, so far as regards the common interests of the Profession, the council deeply regret that their success should be endangered by any supposed want of cordiality between the two bodies; that to obviate all suspicion of this being the case, they request a conference with the Directors of the Law Institution, in the hope that it may lead to a principle of co-operation to the common advantage of the Profession.

The council trust that it is unnecessary to disclaim any wish or object of a pecuniary nature in urging such co-operation, as they fully rely, and believe they may do so with confidence, upon the support of their subscribers,—their only motive being to secure that unanimity, without which the best efforts of the Law Institution or of the Association, will fail in affording due protection to the Profession, or in promoting its respectability.

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

GEO. FITCH.

The Incorporated Law Society of the United Kingdom, 15th March, 1845.

SIR,—I am directed by the Committee of Management of the Incorporated Law Society to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, and to inform you that they are perfectly satisfied that the objects of the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association are highly praiseworthy, and the committee will always be glad to co-operate with the Association in matters for the common advantage of the Profession.

I am, Sir, your very obedient servant,

R. MAUGHAM, Secretary.

George Fitch, esq. Secretary.
Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A POINT OF PRACTICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In Nos. 82, 83, and 84 of the LAW TIMES, I find selections from correspondents respecting the practice in cases of sale by a mortgagor.

Your correspondent "T. H. A.," in No. 83, has therein stated that the question to be decided, namely, whether it is the province of the solicitor of the mortgagor or of the mortgagee to prepare the abstract of title, in case of a sale by the mortgagor, had arisen in a case in which he was himself concerned, and that a reference was made to the committee of the Law Institution for its decision; and they, most unequivocally, as your correspondent states, decided that the solicitor for the mortgagee had the right to prepare the abstract.

The case put by "A. F." has just occurred with me, and I contend that the mortgagor's solicitor had no right to prepare and deliver an abstract from his own draft abstract, and the copy taken by him of the draft mortgage. "H. W. I.," in No. 84, submitted a case for your advice of a similar nature. And in the same paper appears a letter from "P. B. T.," who questions the correctness of the views of your correspondents "A. F." and "T. H. A." Your correspondents "H. W. I." and "P. B. T." express themselves as young practitioners anxious to receive information. I am in the same position; and I write to request your consideration of the question, and that you will, through the medium of your valuable journal, set the matter at rest, that the Profession generally may, together with myself, be guided in the proper course to be pursued.

The solicitor of the mortgagor has written to me, stating his opinion that I have no right to furnish the abstract, as he has in his possession a draft, from which he can copy all he wants, and, in fact, has done so; and he also says that he has prepared an abstract of the mortgage security from his copy of the draft.

I am unwilling to do any thing which is not strictly correct and professional, and I shall, therefore, abstain from further claim until I learn your opinion. It appears to me, however, both in reason and justice, that I am of right entitled to prepare and furnish the abstract. I am in the position of the solicitor of a vendor in a case of sale of the mortgaged property, and as such I can see no ground for the solicitor of the mortgagor disputing my claim. Your early attention to my request will confer great favour upon your obedient servant,

EDGAR BOND.

Norwich, March 13, 1845.

[We would not presume to frame a rule for professional guidance. We can but submit any question that may arise to the judgment of our readers; and if differences of opinion should still exist after discussion, we would recommend that the matter be referred to, and decided by, one of the leading law societies. Opinions on the point sent by Mr. Bond will oblige.—ED. L. T.]

AGENCY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In your numbers of the 1st and 8th March, the attention of the Profession is called by your correspondents to the omission of the London attorneys as to payment of costs to their brethren in the country for agency matters, and "Another Country Solicitor" suggests that instead of returning the process to the office whence it was received, it should be forwarded with the account of charges to the London agent, who, on receiving the amount, will hand over the process, &c.

I take leave to suggest what appears to me a preferable plan, and one which will save the London agent much trouble, viz. that the process, with the account of charges, should be forwarded to Mr. Laidman, of the firm of Messrs. Laidman and Cox, of No. 119, Chancery-lane, who will receive the costs, hand over the process to the London attorney, and, on the 1st of every month, pay over the amount in his hands (after deducting a very small commission) to the London agent, and forward an account to the country solicitor.

Mr. Laidman is employed by many solicitors in my own neighbourhood, and has recovered for me many sums which I never expected to receive, and I am glad to have the opportunity of bearing testimony to the assiduity and punctuality which he evinces in the collection and payment to the London agent of the country agency charges.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

JOHN HARVEY BOYS.

Margate, 12th March, 1845.

COUNTRY AGENCY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In several of your late publications, subscribers have justly complained of the disreputable practice of London solicitors not paying the charges of their country agents, and various remedies are recommended; I beg to state the course I have for some time pursued, and with what I consider success.

Some few years ago, the East Kent Law Society, with the sanction of the Metropolitan Law Association, passed a resolution to send their affidavits of service of writs, &c. through an agent, to be delivered, on payment of the charges, and which has pretty generally been adopted by the solicitors in Kent without any complaint of the practice that I have heard of.

It is not reasonable to expect agents to give the time of their clerks to hunt up our small charges; and Mr. Laidman, of 119, Chancery-lane (an old managing clerk), having started as a collector of country agency charges, and being strongly recommended, I have employed him as my collector since January 1842, and I see I have sent him 238 accounts; of these he has received 190, and I have no doubt will get many of the others. I am therefore highly satisfied with the result of this system, and the advantages the employing him has been to me. On the first of every month he payed over the amounts received to my agents. I can strongly recommend him to the Profession, for his prompt attention in collecting, and the punctual way in which he renders his account.

The above accounts only include the business done since January 1842; but I sent him many others of a very ancient date, with which he was as successful as I could expect, recovering some which had been on my books for fifteen or twenty years.

I remain, Sir, yours, &c.

Dover, March 10, 1845. THOMAS PAIN.

SOLICITORS' BANK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The usefulness of the proposed bank, if it could be beneficially worked in practice, would most undoubtedly be great in the metropolis; but it appears to me that even there the expense for such a "temporary" purpose would operate as a great practical discouragement to the use of it by parties whom it is proposed to benefit.

I presume that deposits of title-deeds with equitable mortgages would be the principal security adopted for the proposed "temporary loans;" but whether legal or equitable, if the directors were not prepared to incur great personal responsibility, the sufficiency of the document given as security, and the goodness of the title, would most undoubtedly have to be regularly ascertained, in each case, by the bank solicitors, at the cost of the borrower. For considering the bare number of the profession in London (setting aside other considerations), it is impossible that the Directors could safely take for granted that every set of title-deeds brought to them for "temporary loans" (even by the shareholders in the bank, not taking into account others, of whom the Directors could have no knowledge whatever) disclosed a good title to the property sought to be pledged; and as to country solicitors, the argument applies still more strongly. I am not aware that it is the usual practice with London bankers to accommodate at all by loans in the way proposed, but in the country, where such "temporary" accommodation is now continually granted by bankers, the character of the solicitor applying, and of his client, is most probably known to the bank beforehand, and an investigation of title and the preparation of any very formal security thus avoided. It will be conceded that this "solicitors' bank" to be successful, should have the general support of the principal legal firms in London, and I can easily imagine that many of them might, and doubtless will, consider it highly objectionable to have the concerns of their clients exposed to the knowledge of any one office, however respectable.

The proposed bank might supply (in London) a want, but in my opinion it would be at too considerable a cost.

These remarks have been induced by your leading article of the 1st instant, and I shall be obliged by your giving them a place in your journal.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.
JOHN S. PEACOCK.

Darlington, March 12, 1845.

Re WELLS.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I positively deny the accuracy of the report in your last publication in reference to this case. The damages were 100*l.* (not 40s. as insinuated by your reporter) for a gross and unprovoked assault; and the costs were taxed at 36*l.* 5s. Your reporter, who was counsel for Wells, did not venture to assert in court that the plaintiff, a boy only nine years old, richly deserved the chastisement he had received, and I can appeal to Mr. Commissioner Stevenson, Mr. Pollock the Registrar, and other officers of the Bristol District Court of Bankruptcy, and many others present at the short hearing, of the truth of this statement.

I am, &c.
Bath, March 25, 1845. THOS. HIGGINS.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"A MAGISTRATE'S CLERK" forwards the subjoined observations and statements on the Justices' Clerks Bill:—

Although I am a magistrate's clerk, and have acted as such in the county of Suffolk for thirty years, I trust you will insert this, upon the principle of audi alteram partem. In two or three papers I have seen, Sir James Graham on Wednesday, the 12th instant, upon the second reading of the Justices' Clerks Bill, is reported to have said, "The bill would not occasion any additional expense to the counties; but even if it did, it would be better that such were the case, than that the monstrous injustice should continue of levying fees from innocent persons unjustly accused of crime, on their discharge from custody before a magistrate."

Now, Sir, for the twofold purpose of vindicating the justices' clerks in this district, as also the memory of many magistrates for whom I have acted, and who are now gone, to give an account of their deeds at another tribunal, I can most truly and conscientiously say, that I never knew a defendant, who was in custody and discharged, called upon to pay any fees. If a man is apprehended on a charge of felony, no fees are ever taken of him; if upon a summary proceeding, and the complaint is dismissed, the magistrates who hear it may, under the well-known act of 18 Geo. 3, adjudge the informant to pay all the costs; therefore, what inducement is there in any magistrate to act with such injustice and folly as stated by Sir James Graham? Of course I speak only as to my own knowledge, and Sir James had, doubtless, proof when he made this assertion.

Mr. Escott has also stated his doubts whether these fees were legal. I would refer him to the 22nd Geo. 2, under which act the fees have always been regulated and taken, as by a table allowed by two judges. Various acts also regulate the fees to be taken, and therefore no reasonable doubt can be raised as to their legality. I should hope no one, not even Mr. Escott himself, would say the fees set by the Highway Act are too high, viz. 6d. for every information, and 1s. for every order: these scarcely pay for paper, and I never take them, but have the comfort of framing the most troublesome informations and intricate orders under it for nothing.

I make these remarks with great deference to the honourable the Home Secretary, and I trust he may have been misinformed, but I hope I shall stand excused in rebutting such a statement, more particularly as it comes from such a quarter.

ANSWER TO THE QUERY OF "S. S."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR.—If you will refer to the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 42 (which was introduced into Parliament at my request), I think you will find an answer to your question.

I know that under that enactment Master's Extra have been appointed in most of the large towns in Scotland. I would at all events try the effect of swearing, &c. before one.

TO READERS.

THAT we may bring up a long arrear previously to the commencement of the business of the ensuing Term, we this week omit some of the usual commentaries on passing legal topics.

METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LAW ASSOCIATION.

A CORRESPONDENCE between this society and the Law Institution will be found in another place. It is satisfactory to see proof of so kindly a feeling existing between two powerful associations, each of which is capable of performing essential services to the Profession, that might be marred by jealousies or disagreements. The proffer of the younger and more energetic society is stamped with genuine good feeling and evident anxiety to advance, by combined exertions, the interests it is associated to protect. This timely correspondence will, at least, serve to remove any doubts which may have been excited in some quarters as to the feeling actually existing between the two societies, which is thus proved to be most cordial and friendly; giving assurance that the best friends of the Institution in Chancery-lane may advantageously support also the working society lately established.

SHAM LAWYERS.

THE following advertisement of another member of this tribe appeared in the Brighton Herald of 22nd February last. He should be strictly watched.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.

Parents or Guardians having sons or wards wishing to be apprenticed in London, are informed that Mr. Rearden, Albion Chambers, 11, Adam-street, Adelphi, London, has constantly several hundred vacancies to fill up in the establishments of Professional Gentlemen, Merchants, Tradesmen, and Mechanical Trades-men in nearly every branch of mechanical business that can be named. The premiums, in many cases, may be paid by instalments. As great attention is paid to the respectability, long standing in business, and stability of masters recommended by Mr. R., he has no doubt of giving satisfaction to those who may avail themselves of this notice. Mr. R.'s charge will in no case exceed 30s. which includes drawing the indentures and a copy.—Applications by letter, pre-paid, will meet with prompt attention.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

WE have to acknowledge the receipt of numerous suggestions of Forms that might usefully be added to the series now in course of publication for the Society. Due consideration will be given to each, and such as may appear likely to be in sufficient request to justify the cost of drawing and printing will be adopted. But correspondents must remember that, as all the Forms of the Society will be settled by Counsel, the cost of printing is not the only calculation. As it is impossible to answer individually the many communications upon this subject, the friends who so kindly forward suggestions must not consider themselves neglected because no immediate notice is taken of their letters; and we trust that they will continue to furnish like hints, assured that all will be appreciated and receive the most anxious consideration.

Now to report progress. Urgent business has prevented the very able Conveyancer, to whom has been intrusted the preparation of the Forms of Conditions of Sale, from completing them so speedily as we had anticipated. They are, however, promised in the course of the ensuing week, when they will immediately be sent to the printer. The many members who have ordered them must therefore excuse the unavoidable delay.

An abundant supply is now obtained of the Forms of Retainer, and they are being bound in volumes, to lie on the office desk; so that if the rule be adopted for every client to give a formal authority to the attorney, it may be asked without offence, and obviously as the general practice of the office.

Let us here observe that if any desirable alteration, in any form, should occur to the practitioner, he will much oblige by at once so informing us, the great object being to render the Verulam Society's Forms the most complete and practical that skill and experience can make them.

The fifth number of Practice Cases and the seventh of Magistrates' Cases will be delivered early next week. But the reporters being on circuit, the unavoidable delay in forwarding and returning proofs, &c. renders it impossible to state the precise day of publication.

They will be followed by Real Property Cases and Criminal Law Cases.

Some members have complained that the Verulam Reports do not appear with sufficient speed, and they refer to those of the LAW

Times in proof. But it must be remembered that the Law Times reports are avowedly brief notes of cases, as caught by the ear; but the Verulam Reports are carefully prepared, with laborious reference to the briefs, the pleadings, and the cases cited, and are intended to be of permanent and standard value, and therefore demand for their composition a considerable time. Speed is incompatible with perfect accuracy.

Others, again, have complained that the same cases have already appeared in the Law Times. Of course they have, because the Law Times reports every case. But, although the substance of the case is contained in the Law Times, it appears in the Verulam in a more complete form, and carefully fitted for study, for reference, and for citation, by the process above described. The one is by no means a substitute for the other.

The following new members have been enrolled since our last report:—

JUDICIAL SYSTEM IN FRANCE.

Sir,—I beg to forward you an article on the judicial organization in France, and on the competency of our different tribunals, and being the first of a series of articles on this subject, your readers will be enabled to form their own opinion as to the different mode of administering justice in our two countries. Civil interests will alone be considered.

ARTICLE I.

Under the political and administrative aspect, France is divided into 86 departments; under the military aspect, into 21 military divisions; but under the judicial aspect, she contains 27 districts of the Cour Royale, or courts of appeal.

Each district of the Cour Royale comprises a certain number of civil district courts.

And each cognizance of a civil district court comprises several justices of peace (juges de paix), whose civil court is a court of appeal, as the Cour Royale is the court of appeal for the district courts.

Above this hierarchy of justices of peace, of district courts, and of Cours Royales, is the Court of Cassation, unique in France, and having its own special jurisdiction, as indeed has each court, clearly defined.

We shall treat 1st, of the justices of peace, as having direct connection with the conseils des prud'hommes.

2nd. Of the civil district courts, and of the tribunals of commerce, which ought to be viewed together, and of arbiter judges (arbitres juges).

3rd. Of the Cours Royales.

4th. Of the Court of Cassation.

5th. Of the administrative jurisdiction, which comprises the councils of the prefecture, and the council of state; and, lastly, we shall say a few words on the Court of Accounts (Cour des Comptes).

Judicial power forms a part of sovereign authority, which is the highest human power.

It is essentially different and distinct from the executive power, which ought never to interfere with the administration of justice; but, as an element of true justice, it is thus defined in the law of the 1st of October, 1789, Art. 19: "The judicial power can never, in any instance, be exercised either by the King, or by the legislative body; but justice is to be administered in the name of the King by the tribunals established by the law." This article also clearly defines the limits of the legislative and judicial powers.

The Chambers, Houses of Parliament, and the King, concur in the formation of the law; but they ought not to be called upon to apply it. And, with regard to the sovereign's power in the presence of the law, the words of a celebrated magistrate well express it: "A prince, wearing pardon in his face, cannot meet the eye of a culprit on the bench." And, lastly, all these maxims are confirmed by the Charter, Art. 48: "All justice emanates from the King, and is administered in his name by judges nominated and instituted by him."

Art. 49 adds, that "judges nominated by the King are irremovable."

This article applies to judges of the district courts, and to the judges of the Cours Royales, and of the Court of Cassation, who all have the title of Counsellor of his Majesty at the Cour Royale of, &c.

Justices of peace, and administrative judges are not within this article; and the jurisdiction of each court is determined by the law with regard to the nature of the cases to be tried before it, and to the extent of territory in which its jurisdiction is exercised.

OF JUSTICES OF PEACE, OR JUGES DE PAIX.

France contains 2,846 cantons or cognizances of justices of peace, each canton having a justice of peace; and in some parts, in consequence of the extent of the population or of the territory, some cantons contain many cognizances of justices of peace.

In England, the institution of justices of peace, forming in each county the Commission for the King's peace, and which has been the result of the gradual conquest of royal authority over feudal power, dates from the reign of Edward I. and the year 1275. We cannot go so far back; the first mention in the annals of our judicial history of any institution at all analogous to that of the justices of peace, is in a royal ordinance of September 1769, which authorizes bailiwick officers to assemble, three in number, for the purpose of judging in a private audience, and without the ministry of a procureur, cases simply personal which exceeded not 40 livres.(a) The formation of justices of peace is a benefit derived from the Revolution of 1789. Imitating the English institution, the aim of the Constituent Assembly in establishing justices of peace, was to place within the immediate reach of litigants, judges—upright, enlightened, and respectable men—commissioned to settle lawsuits, and to pronounce on unimportant contests.

The law of the 24th of August, 1790, was a new era for France. "We shall no longer see," said the mover of this law, "the roads leading from villages to towns crowded with litigants, going to consult judges whose business it is to perplex cases rather than to decide them." According to this law, the justices of peace were elected by their fellow-citizens, and adjudicated with assessors. Posterior laws have suppressed the assessors, and placed the justices of peace at the King's nomination; they are removable, which is a great defect in our legislation. In case of impediments, their place is supplied by two substitutes from each canton, appointed by the King.

The jurisdiction of the justices of peace remained as it had been determined by the law of 1790, until the law of the 25th of May, 1838, extended it and altered it in the following manner.

Jurisdiction. The attributes of the justices are threefold, judicial, conciliatory, and extra-judicial.

1. Judicial attributes.(b)—According to the law of the 25th May, 1838, which has regulated afresh the jurisdiction of the courts of peace, the justices of peace take cognizance of all personal or moveable cases, without appeal, up to the value of 100 francs, and with appeal up to the value of 200 francs. They decide without appeal up to 100 francs, and with appeal up to 1,500 francs, upon all contests between innkeepers and lodgers or travellers, for expenses or loss and damage of goods deposited; between carriers or watermen and travellers, for delays or loss and damage of goods; between travellers and coach-makers or other workmen, for contracts, wages, or repairs. They also judge upon indemnifications claimed by the tenant or farmer for non-possession, loss, or injury of the property let, arising from the acts of the landlord, when the right to an indemnity is not disputed.

They pronounce, also, without appeal, up to 100 francs, and with appeal up to any value, on cases of payment of rents, notices to quit, expulsions, provided the price of the locality does not exceed 400 francs in Paris and 200 francs elsewhere.

If the rent of the locality is to be paid in corn, the justice of peace estimates it according to the prices of the nearest market.(c)

The justices of peace also take cognizance without appeal up to 100f. and with appeal up to any sum that is claimed, of all cases relating to damages occasioned to the crops and land, either by persons or animals; of the felling of trees; the cleansing of trenches or of canals; watering lands or manufactories, when the right of property or use is not contested; of all local repairs of houses o. farms belonging to the tenant; of all contests between servants and masters, workmen and their employers, tradesmen and their apprentices, without derogating from the laws and rules relating to the jurisdiction of jurymen (prud'hommes); (d) of all contests relating to the payment of nurses, and of all cases of injury or defamation, verbal or written, public or private, committed otherwise than through the medium of the newspapers; of quarrels and blows, provided the parties have not taken proceedings in the criminal courts.

Justices of peace never take cognizance without appeal, but with appeal, of all boundary cases and those relating to limits prescribed by the law for plantations of trees or hedges, or of constructions and works which may annoy a neighbour; of claims for annuities not exceeding 150f. which, according to articles 205—211 of the Code Civil, parents and children mutually owe each other, in cases where either are in indigence; and, lastly, they are sole judges of cases called possessoriæ actionis querela, in which it is only requisite to appreciate a fact, that is, the possession for one year by the plaintiff who complains of having been disturbed in his possession (spoliatus antè omnia restituendus). The real owner in vain shews his deeds of possession, for the justice of peace cannot admit them; the district courts alone are judges of property questions; the justice of peace can only verify the fact that the actual possessor, having had possession for one year, cannot be disturbed; there is a conjecture in his favour; why has the real owner so long abandoned his property? he is to blame, and has not the right to employ violence or coercive measures to regain it. He must now prove his rights before competent judges. It is the distinction made by ancient authors between the petitorium and the possessorium.

This competency of the justices of peace extends to all kinds of immoveables, and not to moveables,—mobilium vilis est et abjecta possessio; moreover, Art. 2279 of our Civil Code states, that with regard to moveables, possession equals right.

When the defendant opposes to the plaintiff a compensation or a claim by way of set-off within the limits of the jurisdiction of the justice of peace, he takes cognizance of it, even though the united demands amount to more than 200f.

When both claims, either in compensation or set-off, come within the jurisdiction of the justice of peace to judge without appeal, he shall pronounce on both without appeal; but if one of the claims is liable to an appeal, the justice of peace shall decide upon all with appeal.

If the claim for indemnification on the set-off claim exceeds the limits of his jurisdiction, the justice of peace can either refrain from deciding on the plaintiff's claim only, or refer all parties to the district court.

But when the claim is only a claim for damages, the justice of peace always takes cognizance of it, whatever be the sum—and thus it ought to be, otherwise, to avoid the jurisdiction of the justice of peace and gain time, it would be sufficient to oppose proceedings by a claim for damages exceeding the limits of his competency.

When several claims made by the same party are united in the same suit, the justice of peace only pronounces with appeal, if their total value exceeds 100f. even though one of the claims be inferior to this sum. He becomes incompetent altogether if the claims united exceed the limits of his jurisdiction.

The provisional execution of judgments shall be ordained in all cases where there are authentic deeds acknowledged, promised, or a preceding condemnation which has not been appealed against.

In all other cases the justice of peace can ordain the provisional execution, independent of appeal, and without bail, when it is an annuity question, or

(a) There was, however, at the Châtelet of Paris (Tribunal of First Instance), an auditor-judge, commissioned to examine cases not exceeding 50 livres, summarily, and without the ministry of procureurs.

(b) I can only give you an analysis of the law of 1838; your readers can consult the text, if needful.

(c) In every locality, after the markets, the price of corn is regularly published.

when the sum does not exceed 300f.; with bail above this sum.

The bail is received in court by the justice of peace. In urgent cases he can ordain the immediate execution of his judgments.

Appeal against the judgments of the justices of peace is not lawful before the lapse of three days after the judgment has been passed, unless there is reason for a provisional execution, or after the lapse of thirty days after the signification of the judgment of the parties domiciled in the canton. Persons residing out of the canton have a further delay.

The following extracts from the Code of Civil Procedure shew the mode of proceeding :—

"Art. 1033.—The day of the signification of the judgment, and that on which it expires, are never reckoned in the delays allowed for adjournments, assignations, summonses, and other deeds signified to the parties or forwarded to their domicile; the delay is increased one day for every third myriameter of distance, and the increase shall be doubled in cases of journeys and returns.

"Art. 73. If the party assigned resides out of continental France, the delay shall be—

"1st. Two months for those residing in Corsica, Elba, or Caprain, in England, or in those states bordering upon France.

"2nd. Four months for those residing in other parts of Europe.

"3rd. Six months for those residing out of Europe, on this side the Cape of Good Hope.

"4th. A year for those residing beyond it.

"Art. 74. When an assignation for a person domiciled out of France is given him in France, the usual delay only shall be allowed, unless the Court sees fit to increase it."

Appeal is not lawful against judgments improperly given with appeal, or against those which, given without appeal, are not called such.

But judgments called without appeal shall be subject to appeal, if they have been given with appeal, either in cases of which the justice of peace could not take cognizance, or in cases within his jurisdiction.

When the justice of peace has declared himself competent, the appeal cannot be lodged until after the final judgment.

The judgment of the justices of peace cannot be attacked before the court of highest appeal, unless they have exceeded their power; such as making rules instead of applying those already existing.

The result of all these dispositions is, that all cases submitted to the justice of peace are irrevocably judged by him, provided they do not exceed the sum fixed for judgments without appeal. The intention of the Legislature has been to abridge trifling suits, and to close as soon as possible all discussions which only stimulate the passions of ignorant litigants.

The bailiffs of the canton are bound to be on duty at the courts held by the justice of peace, but they can neither be present as counsel, nor represent the parties as proxy for them, under a penalty of from 25f. to 50f. inflicted by the justice of peace, without appeal, or even of a temporary suspension of their functions.

Finally, we must notice a last clause inserted in Art. 17 of the Law of 1838 :—

"In all cases, except those where there is peril, or those in which the defendant is domiciled out of the canton, or out of all the cantons of the same town, the justice of peace can forbid the bailiffs sending a summons without having previously, without cost, called the parties before him."

Nearly all the justices of peace have conformed to this clause, and now no judgments are given without a previous attempt to reconcile the parties. The judgments of the justices of peace have accordingly considerably diminished in number—a loss for bailiffs, but a gain for litigants.

A few special laws recognize to the justices of peace the power of deciding on civil contests relative to the application of the tariff, or the quota of duties demanded by the toll received; also on the custom-house duties for importations, in disputed cases.

The purport of the law is always the same; to decide on the spot and quickly on all unimportant contests.

Such are the judicial attributes of the justices of peace.

2. Conciliatory attributes.— The legislator of 1790 (the law of the 24th August), to diminish the number of suits, submits them all to a previous attempt at a reconciliation. (Art. 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure.) In all contests, the parties are obliged, in the commencement, to appear before the justice of peace, who, persuading them to be reconciled, endeavours to point out the means; and if he does not succeed, he advises them to submit their cause to arbitrators selected by themselves. (Art. 60, Law of the 22nd Fumaire, Year 8.)

All hearing is denied the parties until they have accomplished this formality or paid the penalty inflicted on either of them who personally or by proxy has not attended the conciliatory summons of the other. The Articles 49 and the following of the Code of Civil Procedure have specified the cases absolved from conciliatory preliminaries; such as those which require speed, or which cannot admit of negotiations, as where there are minors, &c.

This compelled conciliatory attempt is productive of much good in the country; peasants, too much inclined to go to law, often yield to the advice of the justice of peace. This is one of the noblest missions of the justice of peace.

3. Extra-judicial attributes.—These comprehend the interventions of the justices of peace in matters of civil jurisdiction—non-contentious: they preside over family councils, where it is a question of the interests of minors; they place the seals after deaths and bankruptcies; they draw up deeds of adoption or of emancipation; they receive the oaths of jurymen; they are present at the opening of doors when entrance has been refused to the bailiffs or to the public force; they are, in a word, competent for a number of deeds which require speed, which would be too long to detail, and which are specified in all our different codes.

We will close this article on the justices of peace by a short notice on the Conseils de Prud'hommes. These courts are instituted for the purpose of terminating, by conciliatory means, the trifling dissensions which arise daily either between manufacturers and their workpeople, or between foremen and their companions. They judge, as a tribunal without form, without costs, and without appeal, all dissensions concerning which conciliatory measures have failed. Their jurisdiction is much the same as that of the justices of peace. The judges are elected by manufacturers and the master-workpeople: half are selected among the manufacturers, the other half among the master-workpeople. As they are elected every three years, all those who have distinguished themselves by their integrity can aspire to the title of Prud'homme. (Decree of the 11th June, 1809.) The préfet draws up the list of the electors. There are as yet only a few manufacturing towns provided with Conseis de Prud'hommes; but the Government has the power of establishing them by royal ordinance wherever the want of them is felt; and it is to be regretted that this institution is not more disseminated, for its influence is desirable in the intercourse between masters, foremen, and workpeople.

My next article will be on the Civil District Courts, and will soon be forwarded to you.

I remain, Sir, yours truly,

N. TRITTI,
Avocat à la Cour Royale.

TAWELL'S CASE.

SOME REMARKS ON THE EVIDENCE DEDUCIBLE FROM THE ODOUR OF PRUSSIC ACID IN A DEAD BODY.

By ALFRED TAYLOR, Esq. Lecturer on Med. &c.

(For the Law Times.)

As a general principle, the odour of this poison, which resembles that of bitter almonds, may be detected in the dead body when the post mortem examination is made within two or three days. It has been observed so long as seven, and even eight days after death, in the bodies both of men and animals; but then, on the other hand, there are many well-known conditions which will account for its non-detection, even when the individual has not been dead twenty-four hours. Many persons are wholly unsusceptible of the smell of prussic acid. I have known an individual who had been engaged twenty years in a chemical laboratory, unable to distinguish any odour in the English medicinal prussic acid. Again, none may be perceived if the dose of poison be small, if it be mixed up with other strongly smelling liquids, or if the body have been long exposed, either to the air or rain—for prussic acid is a volatile poison, and in general evaporates rapidly. In order to shew how readily the odour may be concealed by other odours, the following experiment was performed subsequently to the trial of Tawell. A dose of prussic acid, sufficient to kill an adult (i.e. ⅘ of a grain of anhydrous acid), was mixed with about four ounces of London porter. Two professional men, one engaged for the prosecution and the other for the defence in Tawell's case, could not detect any odour of prussic acid in the contents of the bottle. It was then handed to an experienced professor of chemistry of thirty years' standing, and he was unable to detect the poison by the smell. It is essential in the performance of such experiments that two or more bottles should be used, only one of which should contain the poison, and if possible the individuals should not be allowed to have the least suspicion of the object of the experiment. These facts, which are not new, appear to me to shew that the view taken by the learned judge was correct, i.e. that "smell was a proof of the presence of the poison, but the absence of smell was no proof of its absence."

In the course of his speech for the defence, Mr. Kelly refers to the alleged non-detection of an odour in the stomachs of seven persons, who were accidentally killed in Paris, some years since, by an overdose of prussic acid. He pronounces this to be an erroneous statement, and his language would lead to the belief that it occurs in my Manual of Medical Jurisprudence. If I am right in the construction, the learned counsel has himself fallen into an error; since in no part of that work do I refer to the presence or absence of an odour of the poison in these cases.

In another passage relative to the death of a youth from 3½ drachms of prussic acid, he alleges that I led the Crown witness to form a wrong opinion, by saying that there was "no odour in the body," and not stating that it was perceived in the stomach. In reply to this remark, I beg to observe that the quotation referred to was made in order to shew that in death from a very large dose of prussic acid (3½ drachms of a German acid, equal to one ounce of Scheele's) there may be no odour whatever about the body of the deceased, even when it happens to be placed under the most favourable circumstances for its retention. I certainly cannot hold myself responsible for all the inferences which may be drawn by witnesses from the cases reported in the Manual, but if the learned counsel had referred to the original work in which this case occurs (Horn's Archiv fur Medicinische Erfahrung, 1823, b. 2, s. 51), he would have seen that my account is substantially correct. As it is, I can plainly perceive that he has been misled by trusting to a French or English version.

Merzdorff, the reporter of it, expressly says, "there was no smell of bitter almonds about the body." ("De Leiche stank nicht sonderlich, liess aber keinen Geruch von bittern Mandeln vornehmen." (Loc. cit. p. 55.) Further, the case was "remarkable" for the entire absence of the odour of bitter almonds ("der gänglich fehlende Geruch von bittern Mandeln.") (p. 60.) With respect to the alleged presence of an odour in the stomach, which Mr. Kelly thought ought to have been mentioned by me, all I have to say is, that whatever may be met with in the French and English translations of the case, the original does not, in my judgment, warrant the inference drawn by the learned counsel. From Merzdorff's description, I doubt whether the alleged odour in the stomach would have been perceived by one person out of twenty; and altogether his account is so ambiguous, as certainly not to justify an author in making this a prominent part of the case; nor is it such a serious omission as Mr. Kelly endeavoured to make it appear. Merzdorff says of the stomach, there was a sour, sharp smell of "Ittner's prussic acid," but no odour of bitter almonds ("nicht aber den (Geruch) der bittern Mandeln.") (p. 57.) Again, he says, it was perceptible to "a well-practised nose" ("einer sehr geübten Nase"); and lastly, "the distilled liquid of the stomach smelt less of prussic acid than of rancid fat ("Das Destillat roch nur schwach nach Blausäure stärker nach ranzigent Fett). Now I am ready to concede that to one endowed with a very sensitive nose, and who is perfectly well acquainted with the peculiarly sharp sour smell of "Ittner's prussic acid," although mixed up with the smell of rancid fat, the odour might have been perceptible; but whether rightly or wrongly, most medical men judge of the presence of prussic acid on these occasions by the detection of an odour analogous to that of bitter almonds; and if they did not perceive this odour, the majority would be unable to speak with certainty to the presence of the poison; but we have it in Merzdorff's own words, that there was no odour whatever of bitter almonds (the usual characteristic odour of prussic acid) about the body or in the stomach. I must, therefore, regard this as an unfortunate remark on the part of the learned counsel; for he places himself in the position of blaming an author for not coupling with his history of the case an observation which, if not directly contradicted by the original report, is at least so ambiguously stated in it, as perfectly, in my opinion, to justify its omission.

On referring to the French and English versions (the latter derived from the French) of this singular case, I find in them the errors which would account for Mr. Kelly's observations. I have made these remarks, because on a future occasion Merzdorff's case may be again brought forward, and the evidence from the presence or absence of an odour of prussic acid in a dead body may be material. They may likewise serve to shew that the accuracy of the reports of cases, quoted by English authors, should not be tested by comparing them with the translations of those cases in another language.

A COURSE OF LECTURES ON THE LAW OF CONTRACTS,

By Professor Carey.

Delivered at the University College.

LECTURE II.

Parol Contracts — Parties incapable of making Contracts — Duress — Fraud — Intoxication — Agreements in Writing.

Taking the definition given by Blackstone, and altered to our purpose, we find a contract defined to be "an agreement to do, or not to do, a particular thing, made either on sufficient consideration, or with certain prescribed formalities." Contracts executed with these prescribed formalities,—special contracts, as they are termed,—I shall pass over for the present, and confine my observations chiefly to parol contracts. Contracts of this class fall correctly within the definition which Blackstone has applied to contracts in general, namely, "an agreement, on sufficient consideration, to do or not to do a particular thing;" from which definition it will appear that, in treating of contracts, there are three points to be looked at: first, the act of agreement; secondly, the consideration; and thirdly, the thing to be done or forborne; of which three things it will be remembered that two, viz. the agreement, and the thing to be done or forborne, are essential to contracts of every kind. A consideration is essentially requisite to parol contracts only.

First, then, there is in all contracts an agreement, a mutual bargain and convention; and, therefore, there must be at least two contracting parties of sufficient ability to make a contract; which ability the law recognizes in all persons who are not subject to some incapacity, whether natural or legal. The great natural incapacity is a deficiency of understanding; by which is meant, not a mere feebleness of intellect, but a want of sufficient sense to carry on the common business of life. Any degree of weakness of mind short of this, though it may be a sufficient claim to the protection of the law against fraud or imposition, will not of itself affect the validity of a contract. (2 Kent Comm. 452; Treatise of Equity, p. 66, note.) A person labouring under this total incapacity is said to be non compos mentis; a most comprehensive term, which comprehends both idiots and lunatics. Such persons are incapable of binding themselves by contract, whether a commission has issued against them or not; and where a commission has issued, and the party has been thereupon found incompetent, this (as to third persons) is only primâ facie evidence of the fact; but, if it be not contradicted, the contracts of a lunatic are void from the period at which the commission finds the lunacy to have commenced. It was formerly a doctrine of our courts that, when sued upon his contract, the party himself could not set up as a defence that he was incompetent at the time it was alleged to have been made. This, in the language of Littleton and Coke, would be to "stultify and disable himself." (Rep. Co. Litt. 247, a; Beverley's case, 4 Rep. 123.) "In a bill depending in the Court of Requests, between Snow plaintiff, and Beverley the defendant, the matter was that Snow had made a bond to the defendant in 1,000*l.*, and in the said court would be relieved because at the time of the making of the said bond, he was non compos mentis."

It is said in the Treatise on Equity, sec. 47, "The common lawyers endeavoured to set up a maxim of their own, in defiance of all justice and the universal practice of all the civilized nations of the world, for they said that it was a known rule in their law that no man of full age should be admitted in any plea to stultify and disable himself, because when he recovers his memory, he cannot know what he did when he was of non-sane memory; and therefore they concluded he should have no relief from this, even in a court of equity, because it would be a subversion of a principle and ground of law." In modern times, however, this subtlety has been disregarded (as you find in 2 Blackst. 291), and at the present day no engagement, whether by specialty or simple contract, is binding in equity or at law, if entered into by a person who was at the time non compos mentis. (Yates v. Boen, 2 Str. 1104.) A record, indeed, is of so high a nature, that it cannot be contradicted or questioned, as will be seen by the following case. (Mansfield's case, 12 Rep. 123.) "A monstrous and deformed cripple, an idiot, was, by the practice of one Nichols and others, taken out of the custody of his guardian, and carried upon men's shoulders to a place unknown, and there kept in secret until he had acknowledged a fine of his lands before Justice Southcote, in the 9th of Queen Elizabeth. He was afterwards, upon inquisition, found an idiot. The matter was brought before the Court of Wards, and he was sent out of the Court of Wards to be shewn to the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas, and to the jurors; and being brought upon a man's shoulders, Lord Dyer said that the judge who took the fine was never worthy to take another; but notwithstanding this, and although the monstrous deformity and idiocy of the cripple was apparent and visible, yet the fine stood good. In the language of Lord Chief Justice Hobart, in Needler v. The Bishop of Winton (Hobart's Rep. 221), "the law finds them not so disabled, nor admits the averment of such disablement, because it is certified by the invincible and indisputable credit of the judge, that they were perfect and able persons;—that is to say, the law does not say that a fine levied by a lunatic is good; but that if a fine is levied at all, that the law presumes the party to have been competent, and will not admit any evidence of his being otherwise." This doctrine with respect to the validity of a record is still adopted in courts of law. In a late case (Murley v. Sherren, 8 A. & E. 754), E. T. Murley was non compos mentis, and while in that state he conveyed his lands to one Templeman, in fee, by fine. This fine was binding at law. One Greenham was afterwards appointed committee of the estate. He commenced proceedings in equity against Templeman, the purchaser. A compromise was entered into, wherein the rights of E. T. Murley were betrayed, and Templeman, the purchaser, was to retain part of the land, and to convey the rest back, not to the lunatic, but to the committee, Greenham. That is to say, Greenham, instead of protecting the interests of the lunatic, having commenced an action to recover the property, leaves one half of it with the purchaser, and takes the other back for his own purposes. The heir-at-law of the lunatic, relying upon the fraud that had been committed, claimed Greenham's land, and the Court of Queen's Bench said—"Though there may have been fraud, what relief equity may afford you is not for us to say," but the fine conveyed the land to Templeman, and the legal right of Murley, the heir, was thereby put an end to. It is not that Greenham was not guilty of fraud in taking it back again; the Court had nothing to do with that question. The lunatic conveyed the lands by fine to Templeman, the purchaser, and the effect of that fine was, that the lands ceased to be those of the lunatic.

The protection afforded by our courts to persons unable to take care of themselves will not be extended to defeat the claims of creditors who, without practising any imposition on the lunatic, have provided him with things necessary and suitable to his condition in life. (Baxter v. The Earl of Portsmouth, 5 B. C. 170.) "I was of opinion, at the trial," says Chief Justice Abbott, "that the evidence given on the part of the defendant was not sufficient to defeat the plaintiff's action. It was brought to recover their charges for things suited to the state and degree of the defendant, actually ordered and enjoyed by him. At the time when the orders were given and executed Lord Portsmouth was living with his family, and there was no reason to suppose that the plaintiff knew of his insanity. I thought the case very distinguishable from an attempt to enforce a contract not executed, or one made under circumstances which might have induced a reasonable person to suppose the defendant was of unsound mind. The latter would be cases of imposition; and I desired that my judgment might be taken to be that such contracts would bind, although I was not prepared to say that they would not. Upon further consideration I find no reason for thinking that my direction to the jury was erroneous, or that the verdict should be disturbed."

Still, an executory contract will not be binding; that is to say, if a man, being a lunatic, enter into a contract whereby he imposes a duty on himself of doing something—if it were to engage a house, to write a book, or if he were to enter into any undertaking or contract in which a work is to be done by him—no doubt he would not be bound by it; but where a contract is executed, and he has had the benefit of it, and there has been no imposition on him, and the benefit he has had is suitable to his estate, he will be bound to pay.

Children likewise are, for want of understanding, naturally incapable of entering into any agreement; and this incapacity is by our law extended till they have attained the full age of twenty-one. Within that age a minor, or infant, as he is termed, cannot bind himself by any agreement, nor is he liable for any debts he may have contracted, except for such as are necessary for him according to his condition in life and future prospects. (Peters v. Fleming, Hil. T. 1840, 6 M. & W. 42.) But if an infant who has contracted a debt, though it be not for necessaries, after he comes of age expressly promises to pay it, he will be liable on this promise, provided it is made in writing. This provision was introduced by Lord Tenterden (9 & 9 Geo. 4). I am here speaking of debts contracted by an infant wherein he is himself the party who becomes the debtor. This is altogether different from the case where goods are supplied to the infant on the credit of the parent. A father is liable for goods ordered by his son, provided the order was given under the father's authority, but not otherwise. Where this authority is not expressly given, it may be inferred from circumstances: as where goods are supplied to the son with the father's knowledge, or are sent to him at his father's house; such circumstances as these are evidences from which the father's authority may be inferred. There are two cases which proceed on the doctrine that where the father's authority cannot be inferred there can be no claim: Mortimore v. Wright (E.T. 1840, 6 M. & W. 482)—that was a case of a claim for an amount charged for board and lodging and attendance on a son during illness; and also Rolfe v. Abbot (6 Car. & P. 286).

A married woman is at law under a total incapacity. She cannot bind herself at law by any contract or agreement, even though she be living apart from her husband, and having a separate maintenance secured by deed; but where a woman has a separate estate, payment out of it may be enforced in equity; and if a woman marry an alien, and he lives out of the country, or if her husband is civilly dead, or if he is transported, she is in such case treated as a femme sole. So in London, a married woman, a trader, is by custom deemed a femme sole. (See the case of Marshall v. Rutton, 8 T. R. 545.) Till that case, the law was not very decided; there were some conflicting cases before it. "A femme covert cannot bring an action or be impleaded as a feme sole while the relation of marriage subsists, and she and her husband are living in this kingdom, notwithstanding she lives separately from her husband, and has a separate maintenance secured to her by deed." It is a case worth reading with considerable attention, as it is the foundation of most of the cases that have succeeded it. (Bullpen v. Clark, 17 Ves. jun. 366; Walford v. De Vienne, 2 Esp. 554.)

The question frequently arises how far the husband is bound by the contracts of the wife. (Manby v. Scott, 1 Lev. 4, and Siderfin, 109, which is translated in the 2nd volume of Smith's Leading Cases.) The rule is, that marriage does not of itself give a wife any authority to bind her husband; but that he is bound by her contracts where made with his assent. Where she can be deemed an agent of her husband, so far the wife is on the same footing as her children; either the one or the other can bind the head of the family where their acts can be construed to be with his authority. But there is this difference, that the agency of the wife is more easily inferred than the agency of the children. When they are living together, the assent of the husband will be presumed to all contracts made by her for necessaries suitable to his degree and estate. She is, for such purposes, considered as the agent of her husband. A wife can bind her husband only as his agent; but from marriage and cohabitation agency will be presumed. Where the articles supplied are not necessaries, the husband, in the absence of any express assent to the purchase, will not be liable for them. (Montague v. Benedict, 3 B. & C. 631; Seaton v. Benedict, 5 Bing. 28; and the older case of Ellerington v. Parrott, 1 Salk. 118; 2 Lord Raymond, 1006.) And even with respect to such articles as the husband would be otherwise liable for, he may prevent any such liability by giving notice to the tradesmen not to supply goods to his wife. If the husband and wife cease to live together, the circumstances are materially altered. If the husband turns away his wife, or by cruelty or ill-treatment compels her to leave his house, he gives her a credit wherever she goes for reasonable expenses. (Hodges v. Hodges, 1 Esp. 441.) This credit does not depend on any supposed assent on the part of the husband; it is a credit to which the wife is entitled by law. (Boulton v. Prentice, 2 Str. 1214, Selwyn's Nisi Prius, 276.) "Assumpsit for goods sold and delivered to the defendant's wife. On motion for a new trial, it appeared that the defendant and his wife had formerly lodged at plaintiff's house, during which time the defendant had given plaintiff express notice not to trust defendant's wife. Afterwards, defendant and his wife went to lodge at another place, where defendant used his wife ill, after which they separated, and defendant refused to see her again; she desired him to maintain her, and offered to return and cohabit with him, which he refused, and struck her, and declared that if any person trusted her or gave her credit, he would not pay them. She had not any clothes, and was wholly destitute of necessaries. The goods furnished to her by plaintiff were necessaries, and suitable to the condition of the wife." It was held by the Court "that although the prohibition took effect, and continued in force during the cohabitation, yet such prohibition could not, after the cohabitation ceased, either extinguish or lessen the credit to which the wife was by law entitled, after the husband had turned her away, and refused to maintain her; for the husband, by such conduct, gave his wife such a general credit as amounted to a revocation of the prohibition." That is an exception to the general rule that the wife can bind her husband only by reason of his assent.

If the wife runs away from her husband—elopes with an adulterer—or the husband turns her out of doors on account of adultery, she carries no credit with her. (Child v. Hardiman, 2 Str. 875.) Nay, even where the husband has wrongfully turned away his wife, if she afterwards commits adultery, she thereby forfeits all claim to be either received or supported by the husband. (Govier v. Hancock, 6 T. R. 603.) If the husband and wife live separately by mutual consent, the husband is bound to maintain her; but if she has sufficient funds of her own, or if he agrees to make her a sufficient allowance, and pays it, his liability ceases. (Clifford v. Layton, Moody & M. 102; Nurse v. Craig, 2 New T. R. 148.) Where the husband and wife are separated by a divorce a mensâ et thoro, if the Ecclesiastical Court refuses her alimony, this amounts to an adjudication that she has no claim upon her husband, and she has no power to bind him even for necessaries. If alimony is granted, the husband is not liable for her debts, as long as he pays the alimony; but if it is not paid, the power of binding him will be revived. (Hunt v. De Blaquiere, 5 Bingh. 550.)

In order to constitute an agreement, there must be necessarily a consent on the part of the person who thereby makes himself liable, which consent implies the free exercise of the understanding and the will. Constraint by means of violence is called in our law duress; in Latin, durities; of which there are two sorts; first, duress of imprisonment, where a man is actually deprived of his liberty without lawful warrant or authority; and duress per minas, where the hardship is only threatened and impending. You will find duress treated of in 1 Black. 130, and Bacon's Abridg. tit. "Duress." In order to constitute duress per minas, there must be a reasonable and well-grounded fear of such violence and injury as the party cannot receive any sufficient atonement for by pecuniary compensation; such as loss of life or limb; but the fear of battery, or being beaten, though never so well grounded, is no duress; nor is the fear of having one's goods taken away and destroyed; because in these cases, though the threat be performed, a man may have satisfaction by recovering equivalent damages. There are not many recent cases with respect to duress, but there is one with respect to duress of goods in Skeate v. Beale (11 A. & E. 983). One of the defences here was a duress of goods. "The declaration states a distress on lands in the occupation of the defendant, and that the defendant, by writing, in consideration of plaintiff withdrawing the distress, undertook that he would pay the arrears, and in default of his doing so, plaintiff might take steps to recover them; that plaintiff did withdraw the distress, but defendant paid only a part of the arrears."

There is a case of duress in Duncan v. Scott (1 Campb. 100). There Scott, the master of an American ship, was carried to St. Domingo, was there cast into prison, and threatened with having his ship confiscated, and being himself guillotined, if he did not put his name to a bill of exchange. He signed a bill for 3,000*l.*; he afterwards gave orders to the drawee not to pay the bill when presented; he was himself sued upon the bill in England, and it was held he was not liable to the payee. In ascertaining what degree of terror is sufficient to avoid a contract, our courts followed most implicitly the doctrines found in the compilations of Justinian; where the provisions on this subject are so ample, as to lead us to infer that cases of violence and terror were not of unfrequent occurrence in the tribunals of Rome. (Warnkœnig, Institutiones, p. 812: "Porro et qui metu coactus contraxit jure quidem obligatur sed cum nil consensui, tam contrarium est quam vis et metus (quem comprobare contra bonos mores est) exceptione debitor tueri se potest: nec interest utrum a stipulanti, vel ab extraneo metus illatus sit." According to the Roman law, a party who has entered into a contract by compulsion is at law liable to an action on his contract; but it is in his power to defeat the action by setting up the violence as a defence; and it is pretty much the same now under the new rules of pleading in this country. In equity, if a man, by compulsion, enter into an act, though the terror was not sufficient to constitute duress at common law, he will be relieved from the contract. (2 Vern. 497.)

Fraud also makes a contract void, both in equity and at law; whether the object of the fraud is to injure the public, or a third person, or one of the parties. Fraud in general is effected either by actual misrepresentation, or by the concealment of some material fact. In one case, where the purchaser of a picture laboured under a delusion with respect to it which materially influenced his judgment, and the owner of it, being aware of the delusion, did not remove it, but suffered him to purchase it while acting under it, the sale was held void. (Heale v. Gray, 1 Stark. 431.)

If the representation is, in fact, false, but the party believes it to be true, this is no fraud; and the party who makes the false statement is entitled to the benefit of his ignorance. So, if a party who makes a false statement, believing it to be true, is an agent, it has been held that his principal is entitled to the benefit of the agent's ignorance. That has been held in the case of Cornfoot v. Fowke (E. T. 1840; Law Jour. Rep. 297; 6 M. & W. 358). In this case a house was let. The owner of the house knew that there was a nuisance next door: the person employed to let the house did not know that there was a nuisance next door. On discovering the nuisance, the purchaser wished to set aside the bargain, but it was held that he could not. "To an action for taking a ready-furnished house, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff caused and procured defendant to enter into the agreement by means of fraud, covin, and misrepresentation of the plaintiff and others in collusion with him; on which, issue was joined. It appeared at the trial that the plaintiff had employed one C to let the house in question, and the defendant being in treaty with C for taking it, asked him 'if there was any objection to the house?' to which he answered that there was not, but it was afterwards discovered that the adjoining house was a brothel, and on that ground he declined to fulfil the contract."

It was held by all the judges, except Lord Abinger, that if an agent "so authorised should enter into an agreement to let the house of his principal, making it part of the contract that the house was free from any particular nuisance, as, for instance, the immediate neighbourhood of a brothel, it is obvious the principal can only enforce the contract, or recover damages for breach of it, by shewing that he was able and willing to do what his agent had contracted to do, that is, to let to the intended tenant the house free from the particular nuisance."

Lord Abinger was of a different opinion. He thought that the contract ought to be set aside on two grounds: first, that the party was answerable for the representations of the agent; and secondly, that by those representations a party had been led into making a contract which he would not otherwise have made (which is very nearly the ground in the last case that I mentioned). The authority of this case, however, has been very much shaken by other cases that have been tried in the Queen's Bench. (Fuller v. Wilson, E. T. 1842.)

In the case of Fuller v. Wilson, the Court of Queen's Bench expressed an opinion coinciding with the opinion of Lord Abinger. But the cause was taken by writ of error into the Exchequer Chamber, and the judgment of the Court was ultimately given upon a different point.

It was at one time considered as a rule, both at law and in equity, that intoxication did not avoid a contract, unless it were produced by the circumvention of the other party, so as to constitute a fraud on his part. It has been, however, held in Chancery, that the drunkenness of a party is sufficient to set aside an agreement in three cases; first, if some unfair advantage was taken; secondly, if some contrivance was used to draw the party to drink; or thirdly, if the state of intoxication was so extreme as to deprive him of the use of his reason (2 Kent, 451; Cory v. Cory, 1 Ves. 19; Cook v. Clayworth, 18 Ves jun. 12); and now, even at law, a contract will be held void if the party who made it was so drunk that he did not know what he was about, inasmuch as, under such circumstances, he had no capacity to contract. (1 Stark. E. 126; 3 Camp. 33.)

At common law, all simple contracts might be made by word of mouth, or in any other manner by which the intention of the parties could be made known; but in order to prevent the uncertainties attending mere verbal promises, the legislature has thought fit in certain cases that the agreement, or a note or memorandum thereof, should be in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith, or his agent. Without these formalities, a contract or undertaking cannot be enforced.

These contracts relate chiefly to

An agreement respecting real property.

An agreement not to be performed in a year.

An agreement in consideration of marriage; and Promises to pay money, the payment of which without such recognition or promise would not be enjoined.

An agreement is not completed until the assent of both parties has been given. An offer made by one and not accepted by the other, is not binding on the person by whom it is made, and he is at liberty to retract the offer at any time before it is accepted, and this right is mutual; for, until both parties are agreed, either has a right to be off. When the offer is made by letter, and is within a reasonable time accepted by letter, this acceptance is deemed simultaneous with the offer, and the two communications, taken together, constitute an agreement such as the Court of Chancery will exact, and for the breach of which damages may be recovered in a court of law. (Kennedy v. Lee, 7 Merivale, 441; Adams v. Lindsell, 1 B. & A. 686.)

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

The Law Review, No II.

We resume this work. The article on Legal Education abounds in matter that deserves the most anxious consideration of the Profession.

The writer recommends the establishment of a college or colleges for legal education. The following are his SUGGESTIONS FOR A LAW UNIVERSITY.

1. We have already a great facility prepared for us in regard to the constitution of this University by the ancient establishment of the Inns of Court. The harmonious and cordial co-operation of these venerable societies must be an indispensable condition of this new work. Upon a perfect equality these four societies must be admitted to concur in regulating the whole affairs of the University; and for this purpose no arrangement appears more desirable than to make the standing council, the executive body, consist in part of the four Treasurers of these societies, who are the heads of these bodies, yearly succeeding to office by rotation. But there ought also to be a more permanent portion of the executive body; and for this purpose it seems fit that the four Inns should choose two, irremovable except by the majority of the Inns, and that the judges should name a President, to hold his office for a year, but to be indefinitely re-eligible. The whole executive council would thus consist of seven members, and its rules and regulations should have the force of laws, and bind the University in all respects.

The delivery of lectures would be a part of the scheme, and for providing funds recourse must be had to the revenues of the different societies, and as these are administered by the benchers of each, the council would demand, and the benchers grant, such supplies as the services to be performed might require. For building, at least at first, no expense need be incurred. Lincoln's Inn Hall would suffice as soon as the Chancery sittings were removed to the new building; and if any inconvenience should be found from the conflict of hours, the other Inns could easily furnish accommodation. But it is extremely desirable that the whole course should be conducted in the same place; and this may well be arranged by the different classes meeting, one before the sitting of the courts, one after their rising and before dinner, and two in the evening. We shall presently see that four classes a day would be sufficient, and for each an hour and a half should be allowed, to admit of examinations and exercises.

For the salaries of the Professors, a yearly sum should be allotted, to be distributed among the four societies, and to be granted permanently by the benchers of each. But a due regard must be had to the necessity of making the professors depend upon the fees of their students for a considerable proportion of their emoluments. This is necessary in order to encourage active exertion. A salary of three or four hundred a year to each professor would not be too great; and the funds of the societies could well afford it.

2. The choice of the professors should be vested in the council, and each should hold his office subject to removal, provided that five out of seven, including the three more permanent members of the council, agreed to displace. The professors should have one of their number in rotation to exercise the functions of their chief, or dean, and who should in that capacity be bound to attend all meetings of the council as an assessor, whensoever he should be required, either at his own desire, or at the desire of the council.

It would be necessary to have three chairs or classes and advisable to have four. There must be one of common law, one of equity, one of conveyancing, by means of which last the common-law professor would be enabled to pass more lightly over the law respecting real property. But it would be most desirable to add a fourth, of general and comparative jurisprudence, and of civil law and the law of nations. A course of legal education cannot be regarded as perfect which leaves out these subjects. We have great doubts if equity can alone furnish out a class; while common law would be too heavy, including as it does criminal law and actions, were it not relieved by the conveyancing class. But perhaps the equity professor might teach the matters required for practising in the House of Commons' committees, and even the practice in courts of appeal; or he might undertake bankruptcy and insolvency.

It is well worth considering, whether subsidiary instructions might not also be given in special pleading and in practice, separately from common law. These subjects lie within a narrow compass, and could be treated of either by the common-law professor, or by a pleader under his superintendence.

There is no doubt that the University must be thrown open to all practitioners, to barristers as well as students, to attornies and their clerks as well as to barristers, to civilians and proctors as well as common-law lawyers or common-law students. Any exclusion indeed would be not only invidious but impossible.

The only question is, whether any share in the government of the University should be given to attornies and solicitors. As a good understanding between the different branches of the profession is in an eminent degree desirable, being greatly for the benefit of each, there seems no harm in allowing an eighth member to be added to the council, the head of one of the Inns in Chancery, taken in rotation, or one yearly elected by the three heads of these Inns. This would be agreeable to that branch of the profession, and would be also of great use in the conduct of the University's affairs.

A question may arise, if this University ought to grant degrees of bachelor of laws. It is not very material. But one thing seems clear: a certificate of two years' attendance at different classes being given by the professors respectively, and also a testimonial of good conduct, ought to have the effect of saving the party from two of the five years required by three of the societies(a) previous to admission as a barrister. At present the degree of master of arts at Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin, wholly unattended with a certificate of ability, and without any regard to legal education at all, saves these two years at all the Inns of Court. Yet the being a Scottish barrister has no such effect. There is in this a great inconsistency, which the benchers might in each Inn easily remove, and the certificate above proposed appears to be the proper course.

How far certificates of study should be made necessary to being admitted barristers is scarcely a question. Either such certificates or actual examination seems to be indispensable, else the establishment of a University would be a mere form. Perhaps the best course would be, considering the intimate connection between the proposed institution and the four societies, to leave the regulation of this important and delicate matter to the deliberations of the council. Such are our opinions upon this subject; all which is respectfully submitted to the bench, the bar, and the public.

We must add this very interesting

MEMOIR OF THE LATE RIGHT HON. SIR JOHN BAYLEY, BART.

Amongst the zealous and deserving servants of the public, the late Sir J. Bayley must be considered as holding a distinguished place. Having been raised to the Bench at a then unusually early period of life, he continued his useful and honourable labours for upwards of twenty-five years: nor were they at last interrupted by any wish for retirement or love of ease, but by the pressure (not so much of age as) of infirmities, which rendered that retirement inevitable.

About the time of his appointment, a most objectionable practice had prevailed of selecting for judges men who ought rather to have been receiving the reward of past services, than entering upon the performance of them. The late Mr. J. Chambre and Mr. B. Wood, though most eminent for their legal attainments and knowledge, were called to the exercise of their most weighty and responsible duties after the age of sixty. Mr. J. Burrough was appointed at a much later period of life, and the Lord Chief Baron Alexander, when seventy years old,—and, moreover, after having been removed from practice in any court for not less than twelve years. In truth, an opinion seemed to have grown up that the proper time for bringing men into the public service was, when individuals began to entertain suspicions of decline, and, for that cause, to entrust their business to younger hands. The case of Sir J. Bayley, as has been already observed, and will appear, when we come, in order, to notice the precise date of his elevation, was an exception to this absurd and vicious rule,—the more obviously absurd, when it is recollected that what Cicero says of an orator is true of a judge—the duties require the possession "laterum et virium."

Sir J. Bayley was of a highly respectable family upon the confines of the counties of Huntingdon and Northampton—Bayley of Elton; his mother (a Kennett) being descended, in a direct line, from Kennett, Bishop of Peterborough. John was the second son: and his position, therefore, pointed him out for a life of employment. His original destination was the Church, and he was placed upon the foundation at Eton, in the hope of being drafted off to King's College, Cambridge. In this hope, however, he failed, and the disappointment extended to after life, not merely from his preference to the Church, but from a belief which he entertained, that his advancement would have been greater in the profession of his choice, than in that which he was driven to pursue.

Upon his being superannuated (as it is called) at Eton, he was sent at once to the law, and commenced his career by entering, or, as the phrase is, having the run of the office of Mr. Lyon, an attorney, for a year. He then entered at Gray's Inn, and was two years in the office of Mr. Lamb, a special pleader, who went the Northern Circuit for many years, and was the friend, and nearly the contemporary of Chambre and Wood. He then, according to the prevalent usage, commenced practice on his own account with considerable success. In Easter Term, 1793, he was called to the Bar with such indications of advancement, that, in Trinity Term, 1799, he, together with Mr. Serjeant Lens, took the degree of the Coif. His business then consisted chiefly of legal arguments —business which, although not of the most showy, or, as it is called, leading description, is, nevertheless, best calculated to improve the lawyer; and the manner in which he acquitted himself attracted the notice of those whom it concerned; for, in May, 1808 (then in his forty-fifth year), he was appointed a judge of the King's Bench, in which he remained till November, 1830, when he was removed to the Court of Exchequer, and, at the end of Hilary Term, 1834, he resigned—having completed the unusually long period of twenty-six years, within three months, of judicial service. Having been created a Privy Councillor and a Baronet, he died in October, 1841, and was succeeded in the title by his eldest son, Sir John Bayley, the present baronet.

The industry which distinguished Sir J. Bayley at the bar did not forsake him when he was raised to the bench. Amidst his various occupations as a judge, he never failed (as had long been his habit) to abstract and index every reported case. We mention this chiefly as a proof of his labour and pains-taking. It has been said, however, that this "repertory of easy reference" was found of much use, especially in the latter part of the time of Lord Ellenborough. For himself, although when composing judgments (in which, it is understood, he had a large share) he might wish to know where every thing was to be found on the subject, it was a common remark that he did best when he trusted most to himself; this was certainly most true when he was sitting at Nisi Prius. With respect to his conduct towards his brethren on the bench, it appeared always of that useful and unpretending kind, which exhibits an anxiety to forward the general business of the court, without any affectation of shining or display. As to his deportment, generally, towards the whole Profession, and the opinion entertained of him, all comment is superfluous when we bear in mind the regret with which his departure from the King's Bench to the Exchequer was attended, and the sincere expression of admiration of his many most valuable qualities then conveyed to him; than which it is impossible to conceive a more authentic and honourable testimonial.

In points of practice, a very necessary, though not the most attractive part of legal lore and labours, Sir J. Bayley was absolutely unequalled. The clearness and certainty with which he disposed of questions of this sort was so great that people were half persuaded to believe that there must be something of system and principle in it. The late Mr. B. Bolland, when at the bar, used to observe, that no man living ever pretended to venture a guess, when "a trial had been lost," except Bayley.

As a judge presiding at Nisi Prius, Sir J. Bayley had many qualities of great importance and value. His knowledge of all the details of business belonging to both branches of the Profession (thanks, perhaps, to the first part of his legal education) was remarkably extensive and accurate. His apprehension of the evidence, as it was given, was very clear, and, until his infirmities began to appear, his notes (rapidly taken) full and satisfactory; though, for some cause or other, he chose a little duodecimo volume, in which nobody but himself could have written at all. In one particular, requiring no ordinary grasp and comprehension of mind, he was never surpassed: written documents, generally, including deeds of any length and complexity, were explained by him, and their peculiar bearings pointed out to the jury in a manner the most luminous and intelligible. For this cause, or, perhaps from his high estimate of the value of written evidence, he always seemed to feel, and often expressed great satisfaction, when the parties had fixed themselves by indelible black and white.

In his management of parol testimony he was not always equally successful—and that, not from any want of apprehension or sagacity, but owing to the goodness of his own disposition, and his too favourable opinion of human nature. Fully sensible of the most pernicious tendency of perjury (as, indeed, who is not?) and the heinousness of the offence, he was, and, probably, for that reason, somewhat sceptical as to the frequency of its existence, which, from sad experience, we know to be too certain. When contradictions were staring each other in the face, he would sometimes torture his faculties in an attempt to reconcile them; and, in so doing, would have recourse to suppositions sufficiently arbitrary and far-fetched, when the simple solution, that one or both of the contending parties were "bearing false witness" would have been nearer the truth.

In the conduct of criminal business, Sir J. Bayley was above all praise. The suaviter in modo was never put in practice more uniformly or successfully. If he had studied (as perhaps he had) the wise and dignified remarks of Don Quixote to the supposed governor of Barataria, when about to enter upon his office, ever so attentively, he could not have acquitted himself better. The unhappy culprit could not but feel that he was treated, not only with fairness, but indulgence. The story, a thousand times repeated, and as often disbelieved, that the stolen property was found in a ditch by the highway, or in a footpath over a field, was listened to without any symptoms being betrayed of that entire incredulity with which the narrative was attended. The result, as to conviction and penal example, was, of course, precisely the same, whilst the effect produced upon those who were witnesses of such demeanour, was to increase and fix their attachment to the laws of their country. Sir J. Bayley, though of a tender and kindly nature, did not shrink, when the occasion required it, from the performance of that stern and awful duty which necessity imposed upon him: it has been said, however, that he would sometimes retire to his chamber, there, by prayer and supplication, to bring himself to a state of due humiliation, when about to exercise the tremendous power entrusted to him over the life of a fellow-creature.

We have adverted to the beneficial effect which the judicial conduct of Sir J. Bayley was calculated to produce. We consider it, however, as an instance only (though a favourable one undoubtedly) of what is continually going on, in a greater or less degree, from the same cause. In no respect does the working of the constitution appear in so favourable and attractive a shape as in the administration of justice, and especially that part of it which, at certain intervals, circulates throughout the country. In other respects the great body of the people do not see much to approve of or admire. Certain apartments in Downing-street, and even the occupants of them, of whatever party (for with that we do not meddle) excite little interest or attachment. The periodic time of the tax-gatherer has no charms; and even the pomp and parade with which Majesty is occasionally exhibited, dazzle but for an hour, leaving, perhaps, some sore and half-angry feeling occasioned by the inequality of human condition, which accident and not merit has produced. The very immunities and privileges, which, by those who reflect justly, are recognised as the indicants and accompaniments of good government, are in their nature negative; the absence of vexation or oppression. Men who have been long in the enjoyment of this habitual freedom, no more think of inquiring into the causes of it, than they do of examining the component parts of the air they breathe; they soon fall into the lazy and inconsiderate enjoyment of undisturbed possession.

(a) In the Middle Temple, we believe that three years are now sufficient, provided the person to be admitted is twenty-three years of age.

But with the administration of justice it is otherwise. Though recurring at stated and not distant periods, there is enough of novelty to create an immediate though temporary interest, and to excite attention; and if the agents employed on these occasions are enabled to produce a favourable opinion of their conduct throughout the country, they are at the same time conferring a lasting benefit upon the government which they represent in one most important particular. There were persons who affirmed at the time that the acquittal of Tooke and Hardy saved this country from revolution. We do not say that the circuits of the judges create an attachment to the constitution of their country, but, assuredly, they increase it. We are not indiscriminate panegyrists of the judges, nor do we mean to insinuate, that they all deserve the encomiums bestowed upon Sir J. Bayley. In natural abilities in legal and other acquirements so necessary,—in manner, temper, and demeanour they must differ;—how should it be otherwise? But they have one common and prevailing recommendation; one never-failing passport to the respect and esteem of the country,—a firm belief of, and confidence in their fairness and impartiality, and that, if any be committed, they are errors of inadvertence and not of design.

If these observations upon the general estimation of the judges and their services be well founded, a slight—to say no more—with which the whole body was recently treated, must occasion some surprise, if not regret. We allude to the rank conferred upon the two additional Vice-Chancellors, and in these remarks we are, of course, to be understood as intending nothing uncourteous to the very eminent and respectable individuals who were appointed, and who could have no concern in the transaction. But the office!—an office which, until tried, could have no peculiar claim to distinction, but possibly might earn it, —an office of somewhat doubtful expediency and precarious existence,—an office with no prejudice in its favour, but, on the contrary, connected with the most unpopular of all our civil institutions! Unceremoniously to lift the new possessors of this office of yesterday over the heads of the old established magistracy, "the judges of the land," their seniors in standing,—the judges entrusted with the administration of the common law, the favourite of the people of England,—the judges, who, by virtue of the queen's commission, with which they are sent out, actually take precedence of every subject of the realm, does seem to have been a step which, unless called for by some inevitable necessity, was inconsiderate and improper.

We cannot conclude this article without making some remarks, addressed especially to those who are entering upon the profession of the law. The career of Sir J. Bayley must, of course, be considered as successful. It is true that he probably felt a certain degree of mortification when Lord Tenterden, then a junior judge of the King's Bench (by a precedent, without reference to him, of a very questionable tendency) was raised over him, to the Chief Justiceship of that Court; and some also, perhaps in a less degree and certainly with less reason, when Lord Lyndhurst was created Lord Chief Baron, he (Sir J. Bayley) then being the senior judge of the Exchequer. Yet his was a case of success obtained by industry and perseverance, in his instance not tardily rewarded; we say by industry, for he was not distinguished by any marked superiority of powers of speech, which, other things being equal or nearly so, must necessarily lead (and what wonder?) to reputation and ascendancy. There was in him nothing like distressing superiority to depress and discourage, but every thing to encourage hope and animate exertion. "Go and do likewise," may well be said, without any violence to probability, to every young man of fair abilities and resolute application. Instances there are, undoubtedly—unfortunate instances of failure; most of the cases, however, we suspect, admitting of some particular explanation and solution. As a general rule we affirm, as the result of much observation, that a fair share of attention and attainment does, in the law, with reference to other professions and employments, produce a reasonable return and compensation. Be it, however, that success is uncertain and the pursuit difficult! what is there excellent of which the same thing may not be said?—what science or art worth knowing that can easily be acquired?—what pursuit, in short, by which men can make "sui memores alios," except upon the condition attached to it by the philosophical poet, "merendo!" Let not our youthful readers deceive themselves. there is no royal road to distinction. Superiority cannot be begged or borrowed; it must be earned. And if men have been found of that "clear spirit" which can "scorn delights, and live laborious days," with no expectation of present honour or advantage, but fed by the reversionary hope of a splendid immortality;—how much more may exertion be expected, when the prize to be contended for is not dimly seen in obscure, because distant, perspective, but is set directly before the aspirant, and, as it were, within his grasp.

PURCHASE OF THE MANCHESTER MANORIAL RIGHTS BY THE CORPORATION.—The corporation of this town have completed negotiations with Sir Oswald Mosley, Bart. for the purchase of the manorial rights of the town, which are estimated to be worth 218,7[illegible]. The average proceeds for the last few years have been 9,[illegible]l. 1[illegible]s. 9d. arising from tolls, properties, &c. The council after mature deliberation, have agreed to pay Sir Oswald Mosley the sum of 200,000l. for the whole of his manorial rights and properties, and to mortgage them for the interest of the amount, which is to be paid at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum. They have also agreed to pay off the principal by instalments of not less than 4,000l. and of not more than 6,000l per annum. By this arrangement it is calculated that the tolls, chief rents, &c. will realize 1,000l. a year more than the sum required to pay the interest. How far these anticipations may be realized is very doubtful. It is worthy of remark, however, that in the year 1808 the proceeds of the Manchester manorial rights were 2,800l. whilst in 1844 they amounted to upwards of 10,000l.

A Very improvable FREEHOLD ESTATE and desirable INVESTMENT will be offered for SALE by PUBLIC AUCTION, at the Lion Hotel, in the town of Builth, in the county of Brecon, on Monday, the 14th day of October, 1844, at Three o'clock in the afternoon, subject to conditions, and either together or in lots, unless disposed of in the mean time by private contract; comprising 1,100 acres, divided into compact Farms, situate in the parish of Llangamarch, in the said county, near the celebrated mineral springs "Llanwrtid Wells," midway between the towns of Builth and Llandovery, and distant from the county town of Brecon 12 miles.

Descriptive and other particulars may be had on application to Messrs. ROGERS and GREEN, Solicitors, Kington, Herefordshire, at whose offices a map of the property may be seen.

Sales by Auction.

SUSSEX.—VALUABLE FREEHOLD ESTATES in Cowfold, Shermanbury, and Shipley.—For SALE by PUBLIC AUCTION, by PLUMER and SON, at the King's Head Hotel, Horsham, on Wednesday, the 9th October, 1844, at one o'clock.

Lot 1. The GRATWICK ESTATE, in Cowfold and Shermanbury, comprises a substantial house, contiguous to the road from Brighton through Horsham to London, and 250 acres of good arable, meadow, and wood land, and well-arranged agricultural buildings. The situation of the estate is most eligible, lying on an eminence, and commanding an extensive view, bounded by the chain of the Sussex Hills. The house is easily capable of considerable enlargement, and the site is well worthy of a more important residence. In the neighbourhood are several newly-erected gentlemen's seats.

The estate lies near the East and West Sussex Junction Road, thirteen miles from the coast, about eight from Hayward's-heath and Hassock's-gate stations on the London and Brighton Railway. It is famed for the production and rearing of game, and lies midway between the kennels of the celebrated Horsham, and Crawley and Findon fox-hounds.

A coach to London from Brighton passes the estate.

Lot 2. PONDTAIL FARM, in Shipley, consists of about 160 acres of excellent freehold arable and meadow land, well stocked with thriving young oak trees, for the growth of which the soil is particularly congenial. Also a farm-house, with barns, stabling, and other buildings.

Printed particulars, with a map of Gratwick, may be had ten days before the sale, on the premises, at the principal inns in the neighbouring towns, of Mr. Hide, Auctioneer, Worthing; Messrs. Palmer, France, and Palmer, Solicitors, 24, Bedford-row, London; Messrs. Coppard and Rawlinson, Solicitors, and of the Auctioneers, Horsham.

TO CAPITALISTS.—Valuable MANOR in Cheshire for SALE, nearly adjacent to the flourishing town of Birkenhead.—To be SOLD by AUCTION, by Messrs. T. WINSTANLEY and SONS, at the Clarendon Rooms, South John-street, Liverpool, on Tuesday, the 15th day of October, 1844, at One o'clock in the Afternoon, subject to such conditions as will be then produced, all that valuable FREEHOLD ESTATE, comprising the Manor and entire township of Noctorum, situate in the hundred of Wirrall, and county of Chester, and containing 326 acres of land in statute measure or thereabouts, with a modern-built residence, capital farm buildings, and labourers' cottages attached.

This eligible Property affords an opportunity for speculation and investment rarely to be met with. The Estate is at present occupied by a farm tenant, and the land is in a high state of cultivation. From its locality, however, it is admirably calculated for building purposes; and to meet the increasing demand in the neighbourhood of Birkenhead for land of that description, the proprietor has been induced to offer it to public competition.

The township of Noctorum lies about three miles to the west of the important town of Birkenhead, but at the nearest point it is within a mile of its boundary, from whence several new streets have been already laid out, and are now forming towards this estate. The distance from the house at Noctorum to the shore of the river Mersey is about two miles and a half, and from the sea it is about three miles distant.

A great part of the Estate is situate on an eminence, sloping into one of the most picturesque vales in the county of Chester, and commanding the most extensive and pleasing views of the romantic scenery of North Wales. It is therefore peculiarly suitable for the erection of villa residences. All the materials for building and draining purposes are to be had upon the property itself. There are several quarries of stone, abundance of superior clay for brick making, and also excellent beds of sand. The Estate is plentifully supplied, too, with water of the purest quality, which is obtained at about thirteen yards from the surface.

Another peculiar feature in this township, which must considerably enhance its value, is, that it is free from the burthen both of Poor and Highway Rates.

Mr. George Jackson, the occupier, will shew the Estate on application, and plans and particulars may be had from him, from Messrs. WINSTANLEY and SONS, the Auctioneers, or from NICHOLSON and SONS, Solicitors, Warrington.

EDWARD PRICE and Co. beg respectfully to request that all parties wishing to purchase their COMPOSITE CANDLES will ask in the shops simply for "PRICE'S PATENT CANDLES." Since these have attracted public attention, many Imitators have made candles, and called them by the name "Composite," used by Edward Price and Co.; but the process by which the real Composite Candles are made, being a patent one; and E. P. and Co. granting no licenses, none of these imitation candles are at all the same as the real ones. The chief properties of these latter are their burning, without snuffing, more brilliantly than the best wax, and their affording so large an amount of light, that they are cheaper, taking this into account, than the commonest tallow candles, one of them giving the light of two ordinary moulds. They may be had of most of the respectable Dealers throughout the Kingdom, and are supplied to the trade wholesale by EDWARD PRICE and Co. Belmont, Vauxhall; and by PALMER and Co., Sutton-street, Clerkenwell.

Sales by Auction.

TO CAPITALISTS.—Valuable MANOR in Cheshire for SALE, nearly adjacent to the flourishing town of Birkenhead.—To be SOLD by AUCTION, by Messrs. T. WINSTANLEY and SONS, at the Clarendon Rooms, South John-street, Liverpool, on Tuesday, the 15th day of October, 1844, at One o'clock in the Afternoon, subject to such conditions as will be then produced, all that valuable FREEHOLD ESTATE, comprising the Manor and entire township of Noctorum, situate in the hundred of Wirrall, and county of Chester, and containing 326 acres of land in statute measure or thereabouts, with a modern-built residence, capital farm buildings, and labourers' cottages attached.

This eligible Property affords an opportunity for speculation and investment rarely to be met with. The Estate is at present occupied by a farm tenant, and the land is in a high state of cultivation. From its locality, however, it is admirably calculated for building purposes; and to meet the increasing demand in the neighbourhood of Birkenhead for land of that description, the proprietor has been induced to offer it to public competition.

The township of Noctorum lies about three miles to the west of the important town of Birkenhead, but at the nearest point it is within a mile of its boundary, from whence several new streets have been already laid out, and are now forming towards this estate. The distance from the house at Noctorum to the shore of the river Mersey is about two miles and a half, and from the sea it is about three miles distant.

A great part of the Estate is situate on an eminence, sloping into one of the most picturesque vales in the county of Chester, and commanding the most extensive and pleasing views of the romantic scenery of North Wales. It is therefore peculiarly suitable for the erection of villa residences. All the materials for building and draining purposes are to be had upon the property itself. There are several quarries of stone, abundance of superior clay for brick making, and also excellent beds of sand. The Estate is plentifully supplied, too, with water of the purest quality, which is obtained at about thirteen yards from the surface.

Another peculiar feature in this township, which must considerably enhance its value, is, that it is free from the burthen both of Poor and Highway Rates.

Mr. George Jackson, the occupier, will shew the Estate on application, and plans and particulars may be had from him, from Messrs. WINSTANLEY and SONS, the Auctioneers, or from NICHOLSON and SONS, Solicitors, Warrington.

To be Sold.

WORCESTERSHIRE.—Valuable FREEHOLD ESTATE (tithe-free).—To be SOLD by PRIVATE CONTRACT, the two desirable and compact Estates, called the GREATER PODEN ESTATE and the LESS PODEN ESTATE, presenting a most eligible opportunity for Investment. The Estate of Greater Poden comprises 288 acres, partly arable and partly meadow pasture, together with a substantial farm-house and the usual outbuildings and appurtenances, all in good order. Less Poden comprises 132 acres meadow pasture, with a good farm-house and outbuildings. The whole property is in good condition, and at present let to responsible tenants, at very low rents. It is situated six miles from Evesham, and between two and three miles from Campden, in Gloucestershire.

Applications to be made to Messrs. SANDYS and PEARSON, 5, Serjeants'-inn, Fleet-st. or to Messrs. WILKINS and KENDALL, Solicitors, Bourton-on-the-Water, Gloucestershire, at whose offices plans of the Estate may be seen.

LOSS OF TEETH.

Mr. CLARKE still continues to supply the loss of teeth, from one to a complete set, upon his beautiful system of self-adhesion, which has procured him such universal approbation in some thousands of cases, and recommended by numerous physicians and surgeons, as being the most ingenious system of supplying artificial teeth hitherto invented. They are so contrived as to adapt themselves over the most tender gums or remaining stumps, without causing the least pain, rendering the operation of extraction quite unnecessary. They are so fixed as to fasten any loose teeth, by forming a new gum, where the gums have shrunk, from the use of mercury or other causes, without the aid of any wire or springs, and above all, are firmer in the mouth, and fixed with that attention to nature as to defy detection by the closest observer. He also begs to invite those not liking to undergo any painful operation, as practised by most members of the profession, to inspect his painless, yet effective, system, where numerous sets and partial sets, in all stages of progress, may be seen; and in order that his system may be within the reach of the most economical, he will continue the same moderate charges.

Mr. CLARKE, Surgeon-Dentist, at home from Ten till Five. No. 6, Thayer-street, Manchester-square.

THE LAW REVIEW, and QUARTERLY JOURNAL of BRITISH and FOREIGN JURISPRUDENCE.

The great attention which, for the last fifteen years, has deservedly been given in this country to Law Reform has led to many important measures, and it must be admitted that the Legislature is now sufficiently alive to the defects of the present system. Public men of all parties agree in promoting the improvement of the Law, and in every recent Session of Parliament, Acts have been passed making various alterations. Much, however, doubtless remains to be done; but it is of the utmost consequence that this present strong feeling in favour of Law Amendment should be carried into the right direction, and that all measures having for their design any change in the Law should be submitted to the strictest examination.

One of the main objects of "THE LAW REVIEW" is to facilitate the discussion of all suggestions and reforms of this nature, to promote those which appear to be beneficial, and to oppose those which are considered to have an opposite tendency. In endeavouring to give effect to these views, all questions of party politics will be avoided.

The present seems to be also a proper time for establishing a work which shall not only furnish to the Profession a full and accurate account of the great alterations which have recently been made in the Law, but facilitate their adoption in practice. Each Number will contain articles of this nature.

It is also the intention every quarter to give a compendious account of all the Leading Cases which have been reported in the preceding three months.

Memoirs or notices of all eminent Lawyers, who have in recent times adorned the Bench or the Bar, will be given.

Reviews of all important Legal Publications form an essential part of the work. Parliamentary Papers and Reports of Committees on the subject of the Law will be abstracted.

Attention will be paid to Foreign and Comparative Jurisprudence when the limited space of the Review admits of articles of this nature.

So much as to the plan and objects of the present publication it has been thought necessary to give; but it will be the wish and intention of its Proprietors to add to, rather than to diminish, the present list of its contents.

The Numbers will be regularly published in November, February, May, and August in every year. Price 5s.

Advertisements must be sent by 4th November for No. I.

The First Number will appear early in November.

"It was necessary that a new digest of the Laws should be made, that something more should be done than to publish a work, many parts of which were obsolete, and to encumber it with notes, which must be almost as voluminous as the text itself. It was then with much satisfaction that we saw it formally announced that Mr. Serjeant Stephen had undertaken the labour. With his undoubted talents and attainments, and in short, possessing as he did qualities that in every respect fitted him for the task, we augured well of his performance, and certainly, so far as his work has yet proceeded, the First and Second Volumes being now complete, he has executed it in an able and masterly manner."—Times.

NECROLOGY.

MELANCHOLY DEATH OF A BARRISTER AT DUBLIN.—A very afflicting occurrence recently took place in the neighbourhood of Finglass, a village about three miles on the north side of this city. Mr. John Walsh, barrister, after concluding his business in the Insolvent Court, walked out in the direction of Finglass, taking with him two dogs. Adjacent to Finglass there is a large quarry hole, filled with water to the depth, it is said, of thirty feet in some parts, and in which, it is thought, Mr. Walsh sent the dogs to swim. Be that, however, as it may, the lifeless body of the unfortunate gentleman was discovered in the water, about five o'clock, by a policeman. It is thought that while he was walking on the edge of the quarry a portion of the earth gave way beneath his feet, and he was precipitated into the water. Mr. Walsh, ten or twelve years ago, had been an active member and a frequent speaker at the Trades Political Union. At the election for Dublin, in 1835, he was the proposer of Mr. O'Connell. Subsequently he went to the bar, and devoted himself with diligence to the business of his profession. He has left a wife and young children.

A TREATISE upon the LAW, PRIVILEGES, PROCEEDINGS, and USAGE of PARLIAMENT. By THOMAS ERSKINE MAY, Esq. Barrister-at-law, Assistant Librarian of the House of Commons.

This Treatise is divided into three books:

I. Constitution, Powers and Privileges of Parliament.

II. Practice and Proceedings in Parliament: including the several Forms of Procedure in the Conduct of Public Business in both Houses, Meeting and Sitting of Parliament, Questions, Amendments, Debate and Divisions, Committees of the whole House and Select Committees, Witnesses, Addresses to the Crown, Forms of Communication between the two Houses, the Passing of Public Bills, Petitions, Accounts and Papers, Supply and Taxation, Trial of Controverted Elections, Impeachment, &c.

III. The Manner of Passing Private Bills: shewing the Practice in both Houses according to the Standing Orders and the most recent Precedents.

"In spite of its uninviting title page this is essentially a popular work, and one that will be prized by every gentleman who reads a newspaper or dabbles in politics and Parliamentary Debates. Without the aid and enlightenment of some such treatise as Mr. May's, the proceedings of both Houses, and the bearing and effects of the innumerable mystical motions, and still more mysterious amendments which puzzle the breakfast-table and the club-room would be utterly unintelligible; but after a perusal of this very lucid and valuable volume, they will be found 'plain as the way to the parish church.'

"Mr. May is one of the librarians to the House of Commons, and his book has been written, not only with commanding advantages, and (to others inaccessible) facilities, but, as he himself apprises us in his preface, the work was undertaken with the encouragement of the Speaker, and incalculably improved by his valuable suggestions.

"On its abstruse points we shall touch but lightly; they are clearly and conveniently digested under their distinct heads—the Powers of Parliament, its Practice upon Public Matters; and lastly, its Proceedings in the passing of PRIVATE BILLS. With regard to the latter important branch we have seen nothing so useful and so comprehensively clear as Mr. May's chapters on this subject, and this is perhaps ascribable to his adoption of an entirely novel arrangement. He follows a Bill through each of its stages, from its entrance at the House of Commons till its exit at the Throne, and thus at every step and stage, from the table of the House to the Committee room, he applies and arranges and makes intelligible, the otherwise complex and embarrassing 'standing orders' of the Lords and Commons, about which every country solicitor and every shareholder in a railroad hears so much and comprehends so little.

"But the chapters which, above all, we would recommend to every country gentleman and in short to every man likely to act as chairman of a public assembly, are those concerning 'questions and amendments,' and all those puzzling perplexities about the precedence of such motions, and the order in which Parliament takes the vote, all of which will be found treated with a skill and precision that will render any one who reads them qualified to act so as to merit the thanks of the meeting 'for his very proper and dignified conduct in the chair.'

"Mr. May deserves infinite credit not only for the learning, but the labour which he has bestowed upon this compact and comprehensive work. It is the first successful attempt to reduce into order, in one systematic treatise, the chaos of Parliamentary Precedents, and we can but repeat that, to the lawyer or the country gentleman, the student of constitutional history or of newspaper debates, it will be found to each and all most interesting and most valuable. We may likewise add another class, to whom we should say it is indispensable—we mean the members themselves of both Houses of Parliament, to whom it will prove a hand-book of reference and vade mecum of practice."—Times, Oct. 15.

THE PATENT COMPOSITE CANDLES. These Candles burn without snuffing more brilliantly than the best Wax, and are cheaper in proportion to the light given than the commonest Tallow Candle. The Patentees respectfully beg all purchasers to ask in the shops simply for "PRICE'S PATENT CANDLES," as many imitators have adopted the term "Composite." They are sold by most of the respectable dealers throughout the kingdom and are supplied wholesale to the trade by EDWARD PRICE and Co. Belmont, Vauxhall, and by PALMER and Co. Sutton street, Clerkenwell.

TEAS at WHOLESALE PRICES.—This arrangement continues to give universal satisfaction, it enables the private family to purchase this very necessary article at the lowest wholesale prices. The scale is established on the ready money principle, and will be found a commencing saving to large consumers. It may be well to observe, that we have no plate glass or other expensive decorations for which the public are usually taxed. The entrance to our Warehouse is a passage, the second house on the right from Cheapside.—Goods delivered to all parts of town daily.

TO FAMILIES IN THE COUNTRY.

In consequence of the facility of railroad conveyance, we have made arrangements with the principal carrying establishments to deliver all our parcels, free of expense, to any part of the kingdom. By our list of prices it will be seen we can supply good Common Tea at 3s. to 3s. 4d. Breakfast Souchong, for general use, at 3s. 8d. Pekoe Souchong, at 4s. and an superior kind at 4s. 4d. which will be found all a family would require. It is expected all orders will be accompanied by a remittance or Post office order, or, if a reference be given, the amount can be remitted on a receipt of goods.

AGENCY.

In consequence of repeated solicitations, we have been induced to appoint one Agent and one only in every town in the kingdom, for the Sale of our Teas, which, for the convenience of retailing will be done up in leaden packages from one ounce to six pounds. Applications from respectable parties where no agent is already appointed to be made to MANSELL and CO. 2, Bucklersbury, Cheapside.

TO CALICO PRINTERS and OTHERS. TO BE SOLD by PRIVATE CONTRACT, the leasehold interest for an unexpired term of sixty three years, commencing from the 1st May 1834, of and in all those compact and desirable Print Works known by the name of the Spring Water Print Works, situate at Whitefield, in the Township of Pilkington, in the county of Lancaster, now in the occupation of Messrs. Alfred Thomas and Co., with the dwelling-house, cottages, outhouses, erections, and buildings, and the several fields or closes of land occupied therewith, containing altogether 1a. 1r. 8p. statute measure, or thereabouts. The purchaser will have the option of taking at a valuation the valuable steam-engine, machinery, utensils, copper rollers, drugs and drysalteries now on the premises.

The present opportunity is such as rarely occurs for any one intending to embark in the printing trade, the works in question being well known in the trade to possess every advantage, they are capable of turning off 2,000 pieces per week, there is a never-failing supply of pure spring and soft water in the dryest seasons, and the Works are within six miles of Manchester.

For further particulars apply to Messrs. Alfred Thomas and Co. at the Works, and at No. 35, Mosley street, Manchester; Thomas Critchley, esq. 63, Mosley-street, Manchester; Mr. Ash, at Messrs. Jones, Loyds, and Co. Manchester; to Mr. William Broome, Accountant, St. James's-square, Manchester; or Messrs. Barlow and Aston, Solicitors, 1, Townhall-buildings, Manchester.

ECONOMY OF ARTIFICIAL LIGHT.

"Report of the fourteenth meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, Monday, September 30. Section G. Mechanical Science. On the Economy of Artificial Light for Preserving Sight. By Mr. J. Hawkins."

"Few were aware," he said, "of the injury inflicted on the sight by too much, or too little light, and by a sudden transition from gloom to light. He had tried several experiments with a view to procure a light of a medium description. He commenced with two common candles, alternately snuffing and leaving them unsnuffed, and measuring the intensity of the light. The result of this experiment was, that he found that the candle well snuffed gave eight times the light of that which was unsnuffed. He then proceeded to a process of weighing, and found that one pound of the snuffed candles gave as much light as nine pounds of the unsnuffed candles."

Mr. Hawkins further found that a pound of candles, to burn (like Price's Patent Candles) without snuffing, gave the same light as four pounds snuffed in the usual way, say every ten minutes, and the same as eleven pounds unsnuffed altogether. After alluding to further experiments with Candles, and also with Oils, he concluded by recommending the Self-Snuffing Candles in preference to Oil Lamps.

Price's Patent Candles have for some time past been advertised as more economical than common tallow ones, because, not requiring to be snuffed, they give so much more light. The Patentees now publish the above extract as a remarkable confirmation of the truth of their assertions. Those who still persist in burning tallow moulds, or dips, in the idea that candles at sixpence per pound are necessarily cheaper than those at a shilling per pound, may now learn how much real economy there is in such a course. Four pounds of the snuffed candles giving, as above shewn, the same light as one pound of the self snuffing ones, those who burn tallow candles at sixpence per pound are doing the same thing as if they paid two shillings per pound for Price's Patent Candles, for they pay four sixpences for that quantity of light which one pound of these candles will give. They suffer, moreover, the bad smell, dirt, and annoyance arising from the use of the snuffers every ten minutes, and the injury to the eyesight stated above, to follow the sudden transition from gloom to light when the candles are snuffed.

Price's Patent Candles are sold by respectable dealers in most parts of the kingdom, but care must be taken to insist on being supplied with the real ones, as many imitations are made at low prices for the shopkeepers, which, on account of the greater profit, some of them endeavour, and with too frequent success, to palm upon the public as "just the same as the Patent Candles." The trade may obtain them wholesale from Edward Price and Co Belmont, Vauxhall or from Palmer and Co Sutton street, Clerkenwell.—From the Athenaum of Saturday, 19th October, 1844.

PARISH CLERKS.—By an Act of the last session (7 & 8 Vict c. 59), persons in holy orders can be appointed to the office of church clerk, chapel clerk, or parish clerk, and may be required to act as assistant curates whilst holding the offices mentioned.

TO CALICO PRINTERS and OTHERS.

TO BE SOLD by PRIVATE CONTRACT, the leasehold interest for an unexpired term of sixty-three years, commencing from the 1st May, 1834, of and in all those compact and desirable Print Works known by the name of the Spring Water Print Works, situate at Whitefield, in the Township of Pilkington, in the county of Lancaster, now in the occupation of Messrs. Alfred Thomas and Co., with the dwelling-house, cottages, outhouses, erections and buildings, and the several fields or closes of land occupied therewith, containing altogether 38a. 3r. 8p. statute measure, or thereabouts. The purchaser will have the option of taking at a valuation the valuable steam-engine, machinery, utensils, copper rollers, drugs, and drysalteries now on the premises.

The present opportunity is such as rarely occurs for any one intending to embark in the printing trade, the works in question being well known in the trade to possess every advantage; they are capable of turning off 2,000 pieces per week, there is a never-failing supply of pure spring and soft water in the dryest seasons, and the works are within six miles of Manchester.

For further particulars apply to Messrs. Alfred Thomas and Co. at the Works, and at No. 35, Mosley street, Manchester; Thomas Critchley, esq. 65, Mosley-street, Manchester; Mr. Ash, at Messrs. PRICE'S PATENT CANDLES are retailed by most of the respectable Dealers throughout the Kingdom, at one shilling per lb. at which price they are cheaper, taking into account the quantity of light given, than the commonest Tallow Dips. They are beautifully white, and burn without snuffing more brilliantly than the finest wax.

The Trade may obtain them wholesale from EDWARD PRICE and Co. Belmont, Vauxhall; or from PALMER and Co. Sutton-street, Clerkenwell.

MR. CLARKE'S ENAMELLED SUCCEDANEUM, for stopping decayed Teeth, is far superior to any thing ever before used, as it is placed in the tooth without any pressure or pain, and becomes as hard as the enamel, immediately after application, and remains firm in the tooth for life, rendering extraction unnecessary, and renders them again useful for mastication. Prepared only by Mr. Clarke, Surgeon Dentist.

LOSS OF TEETH

Mr. CLARKE still continues to supply the loss of teeth, from one to a complete set, upon his beautiful system of self-adhesion, which has procured him such universal approbation in some thousands of cases, and recommended by numerous physicians and surgeons, as being the most ingenious system of supplying artificial teeth hitherto invented. They are so contrived as to adapt themselves over the most tender gums or remaining stumps, without causing the least pain, rendering the operation of extraction quite unnecessary. They are so fixed as to fasten any loose teeth, by forming a new gum, where the gums have shrunk, from the use of mercury or other causes, without the aid of any wire or springs, and above all, are firmer in the mouth, and fixed with that attention to nature as to defy detection by the closest observer. He also begs to invite those not liking to undergo any painful operation, as practised by most members of the profession, to inspect his painless, yet effective, system, where numerous sets and partial sets, in all stages of progress, may be seen; and in order that his system may be within the reach of the most economical, he will continue the same moderate charges.

Mr. CLARKE, Surgeon-Dentist, at home from Ten till Five. No. 6, Thayer-street, Manchester-square.

THE PARIS BAR AND THE PRESIDENT.—The dispute between the Paris Bar and M. Seguier, the first president of the Cour Royale, after having been left smouldering during the vacation, has at length been put an end to. On the 4th inst. the Court met for the winter session, upon which occasion it is usual for the Attorney-General to make a speech to the Court, to which a reply is made by the President. Upon this occasion it was arranged that a conciliatory allusion should be made by the Procureur-General Hébert to the unfortunate differences which had arisen between the Bench and the Bar, the great inconveniences to which it might lead; and the learned gentleman accordingly did so, and concluded his speech by hoping that all parties would shew a conciliatory spirit, and give each other mutual assistance in the difficult duties falling to the lot of each of them. The President Seguier said a few words in reply, in which he expressed his great respect for the Bar, and the pleasure it gave him that they should again meet in unison, and determined, as magistrates and counsel, to labour in their several vocations for the service of the King and the good of the people. The barristers then retired to their private place of meeting, and, after some discussion, it was at length determined unanimously that the reparation offered was sufficient, and that henceforth the advocates should plead as usual in the Cour Royale; and thus has ended a quarrel which for some months has created a great deal of talk among our neighbours, but put unfortunate suitors to great inconvenience and loss, from the delay it caused in the dispensation of justice.

Dublin, Nov. 2.

OPENING OF NOVEMBER TERM.

Very different was the scene presented in the Queen's Bench this day from that which had been witnessed at the opening of the last November Term. Then the monster prosecution was impending, the Crown lawyers were preparing to open the campaign, the country was to be astounded with the "awful conspiracy," and the Crown agents were managing the jury-lists.

What a change has since occurred :- the judgment against the state prisoners reversed, the Crown prosecutors, foiled and defeated, now keep aloof from public observation in the hall; and Mr. O'Connell, triumphing over his prosecutors, is hunting with his beagles in the Kerry mountains.

As I anticipated, there was no change whatever to-day amongst the judges. The rumours on this subject were entirely unfounded.

The Term was opened about one o'clock, with the usual formalities. There were not many mere spectators who usually attend on similar occasions.

The Lord Chancellor held a bar levee this morning at his house in Stephen's-green, which was attended by all the Judges, the Attorney and Solicitor General, and the leading members of the Bar

COURT OF CHANCERY.

His Lordship took his seat on the bench, and the following gentlemen were called to the bar, having been previously sworn in before Judge Perrin, in the Queen's Bench :-

Ponsonby Moore, esq. eldest son of the Rev. Charles Moore, of Monasterevan, in the county of Kildare, clerk.

*Andrew Russell Stritch, esq. only son of Thomas Queely Stritch, late of Townmullen, in the county of Clare, esq. deceased.

John William Edden, esq. only son of William Edden, esq. of Nelson place, in the city of Cork, esq.

*Francis Cahill, esq. only son of Francis Cahill, late of Lower Bridge-street, in the city of Dublin, esq.

Jonathan Darby, esq. eldest son of the Rev. Christopher Darby, of Priory, Stoneyford, in the county of Kilkenny, clerk.

William Neilson Hancock, esq. second son of William John Hancock, of Balbriggan, esq. in the county of Dublin.

Edward Ledwith, esq. eldest son of Edward Ledwith, of Ledwiths-town, esq. in the county of Longford.

*John Pigot, esq. eldest son of the Right Hon. D. Pigot, of Merrion-square, in the city of Dublin, Q.C.

*Magrah Cahill, esq. youngest son of Cornelius Cahill, late of Rathlesty, in the county of Tipperary, esq. deceased.

Henry Thomas Cusack, esq. eldest son of James William Cusack, of Kildare-street, in the city of Dublin, esq. M.D.

Frederick Bowles, esq. eldest son of Charles Froby Bowles, of Clontarf, in the county of Dublin, late captain in her Majesty's 26th regiment of foot.

Thomas Henry Barton, esq. eldest son of Dunbar Barton, of Fitzwilliam-square, in the city of Dublin, esq.

NEW QUEEN'S COUNSEL.—The following gentlemen were called to the Inner Bar :—

Isaac Butt, esq.; A. Edward Gayer, esq.; Henry George Hughes, esq.; Boyle Keller, esq.; John George, esq.; George Battersby, LL.D; Matthew Baker, esq. Joseph Radcliffe, esq. (Judge of the Consistorial Court

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Mr. Justice Perrin took his seat on the bench about half-past twelve o'clock, and the gentlemen about to be called to the Bar took the usual oaths before him.

His lordship intimated to one of the gentlemen whose name appeared in the list (Mr. Long, of Pembroke-street), that although he was then sworn, he was not to be called until Wednesday next, and added, that on that day the benchers would consider a memorial sent in by him.

Christopher Nelson Duffe, esq. was sworn into the office of Clerk of the Rules, in the room of Patrick Costello, esq. retired on full salary, pursuant to the late Act 7 & 8 Vict.

Wm. Chr. Knox, esq. was sworn in Assistant-Clerk of the Rules, under the same Act.

Mr. Justice Perrin congratulated both gentlemen, in highly complimentary terms, on their appointment.

Dublin, Nov. 6.

RUMOURED CHANGES ON THE BENCH.

It is likely that important changes will, before the lapse of many weeks, perhaps days, take place on the Irish bench. The absence of Chief Justice Pennefather, and his continued illness, have given rise to a rumour that his retirement will cause a vacancy in the Queen's Bench, which in all probability will be filled by the Right Hon. T. B. C. Smith, our distinguished Attorney-General. It is likewise currently rumoured that Mr. Justice Burton, who is long since entitled to retire "upon full pay," will make room for a successor, and that Mr. Solicitor-General Greene (who is convalescent, but still in a delicate state of health) will be afforded an opportunity to accept the office. There are various other rumours and speculations afloat, but the serious indisposition of the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench has, I believe, in a great measure, caused importance to be attached to any of them.

* Those marked thus (*) are Roman Catholics.

NEW QUEEN'S COUNSEL.

At the sitting of the Court of Chancery this morning, Mr. Joseph Napier and Mr. Richard Nunn, assistant-barrister for the county of Tyrone, were called to the inner bar. Mr. Napier was called to the bar in Easter Term, 1831, and Mr. Nunn, in Easter, 1808.

JUSTICES' POCKET MANUAL; or, Guide to the ordinary Duties of a Justice of the Peace; with considerable additions and improvements, and an Appendix of Forms.

By SAMUEL STONE, Solicitor, Clerk to the Justices, and Town Clerk for the Borough of Leicester.

This edition contains, in addition to a classified arrangement of the various other subjects which constitute the business of Courts of Petty Session, a copious analysis of the late Acts respecting Orders in Bastardy, Masters and Workmen in the Woollen and other Hosiery Manufactures, Mines, Theatres, Parish Constables, Poundbreach, and the Jurisdiction of the Quarter Sessions, distinguishing all the offences affected by the latter Statute. This information will be useful not only to Magistrates and their Clerks, but also to CLERKS OF THE PEACE. The Table "Periodical Business for Justices" comprises all the business requiring attention at stated periods of the year.

Under the title "Practice" is given a full outline of the various stages of the proceedings before Justices from the application for a Summons or Warrant to the final adjudication, with the Law applicable thereto.

Opinions of the Press.

"Calculated to be of much service, by way of ready reference, and as a guide to the whole summary jurisdiction. We have heard it extremely well spoken of by magistrates and professional men. We do not hesitate to recommend it warmly."—The Justice of the Peace.

"In this new edition the author has adopted many improvements and additions, correcting it to the law as since altered in so many of the subjects treated of. The arrangement is admirable. We heartily commend it to magistrates, their clerks, and the attorneys who practise in their courts."—Law Times.

"In publishing this manual, the author has supplied a common want in every justice-room. He has furnished a concise, and from close observation, we may add, accurate summary of the different laws to be administered in petty sessions, and of the mode in which the cases are to be dealt with."—Morning Chronicle.

"This work contains a most excellent and practical summary of all the usual cases which come before a justice of the peace."—Gateshead Observer.

"We can hardly conceive a much more useful book for magistrates and their clerks. The author seems to have performed his task in an admirable manner."—Worcestershire Chronicle.

Also, by the same Author,

This Society has been established upwards of thirty-four years; ad just demands upon its funds have been promptly and liberally settled, nearly two millions and a half have been thus paid away on expired policies, and to meet the existing engagements of the Institution, it possesses funds amounting to upwards of a million and three-quarters, almost wholly invested on real and Government securities.

The Rates of Premium are below those of most other Offices, and, under the age of 45, not less so than ten per cent.—a benefit in itself equivalent to an annual bonus; whilst periodical additions are also made to the sums assured upon all policies for the whole duration of life, in proportion to the amount of premium paid, the full advantage of Life Assurance is thus enjoyed by the members of this Institution.

The subjoined List of some of the existing Policies of the Society exhibits the aggregate amount of Bonus assigned to each of those Policies, including that declared at the General Meeting held on the 9th of September, 1842.

DEAR SIR,—Having sought the advice of a first-rate surgeon for a slight case of hernia, and being led to adopt a Common Truss, which gave me no relief, I feel bound to acknowledge that I consider it one of the greatest events of my life when I got out of that truss into your Patent; and whilst I continue to feel so little annoyance, it is a matter of perfect indifference to me if all mankind are made acquainted with it. Yours truly,

ROBERT MEDCALF.

TO CALICO PRINTERS and OTHERS.

TO BE SOLD by PRIVATE CONTRACT, the leasehold interest for an unexpired term of sixty-three years, commencing from the 1st May, 1841, of and in all those compact and desirable Print Works known by the name of the Spring Water Print Works, situate at Whitefield, in the Township of Pilkington, in the county of Lancaster, now in the occupation of Messrs. Alfred Thomas and Co., with the dwelling-house, cottages, outhouses, erections and buildings, and the several fields or closes of land occupied therewith, containing altogether 38a. 3r. 8p. statute measure, or thereabouts. The purchaser will have the option of taking at a valuation the valuable steam-engine, machinery, utensils, copper rollers, drugs, and drysalteries now on the premises.

The present opportunity is such as rarely occurs for any one intending to embark in the printing trade, the works in question being well known in the trade to possess every advantage; they are capable of turning off 2,000 pieces per week, there is a never-failing supply of pure spring and soft water in the dryest seasons, and the works are within six miles of Manchester.

For further particulars apply to Messrs. Alfred Thomas and Co. at the Works and at No. 35, Mosley street, Manchester; Thomas Crutchley, esq. 65, Mosley-street, Manchester, Mr. Ash at Messrs. Jones, Loyds, and Co. Manchester; to Mr. William Broome, Accountant, St James's-square Manchester, or Messrs. Barlow and Aston, Solicitors, 1, Townhall-buildings, Manchester.

FIFTY POUNDS REWARD.—The hard substance obtained by pressure from the crude Cocoa-Nut Oil is an essential ingredient in the PATENT COMPOSITE CANDLES, and as EDWARD PRICE and CO. hold the Patents for this process, and grant no licenses under them, it follows, either that the imitation Composite Candles are entirely different from the patent ones, or, that the imitators are infringing the patents. The first is generally the case, but to protect themselves against the possibility of the other, EDWARD PRICE and CO. hereby engage to pay a reward of Fifty Pounds to any workman or other person who may give such information respecting parties pressing Cocoa-Nut Oil as shall lead to their conviction. The name of the informant will be kept strictly secret, and he need not take a prominent part in the proceedings, as all that E. P. and Co. require, is the first clue to the discovery of the infringers, which they will then follow up for themselves. This advertisement is being published in every newspaper of any circulation in the United Kingdom.

The Candles are now so well known to the public, that it is hardly necessary to state here that they burn more brilliantly than the best wax, and give so large an amount of light, as to be cheaper, taking this into account, than the commonest tallow candles. They may be had of most of the respectable dealers throughout the kingdom; but purchasers must insist on being supplied with "PRICE'S PATENT CANDLES," otherwise they are liable to be deceived with some of the imitations, all called, like the real ones, "Composite." Those parties really in the trade, who do not yet keep them for sale, are informed that they can purchase of the Patentees, or of Palmer and Co. Sutton-street, Clerkenwell, any quantity, large or small, at the wholesale price, and that allowances are made in an increasing ratio to parties taking to the amount of 50*l.* 100*l.* 150*l.* or 200*l.* at a time, and a very large allowance indeed to parties taking so large a quantity as to enable them to become wholesale agents for an entire district.

NECROLOGY.

MR. SERJEANT ANDREWS.

On Wednesday morning this learned serjeant breathed his last at his residence at Hampstead-hill. The account of the attempt at self-destruction appeared on Monday. The melancholy depression of spirits produced by long study in the legal profession, is the only cause assignable for the rash act. The learned gentleman was married, and has left a widow and two young children to deplore his untimely end.

Although he has not yet positively concluded the arrangements, it is his present intention to open the commission for Yorkshire on Thursday, the 28th instant.—Yorkshire Gazette.

ATTORNEYS' AND SOLICITORS' ADMISSIONS.—We are informed that upwards of 200 solicitors were sworn in the first day of term, before the Master of the Rolls. Terms for commutation of the tithes have been agreed on, and the land-tax is redeemed. JUSTICES' POCKET MANUAL; or, Guide to the ordinary Duties of a Justice of the Peace; with considerable additions and improvements, and an Appendix of Forms.
By SAMUEL STONE, Solicitor,
Clerk to the Justices, and Town Clerk for the Borough of Leicester.

This edition contains, in addition to a classified arrangement of the various other subjects which constitute the business of Courts of Petty Session, a copious analysis of the late Acts respecting Orders in Bastardy, Masters and Workmen in the Woollen and other Hosiery Manufactures, Mines, Theatres, Parish Constables, Poundbreach, and the Jurisdiction of the Quarter Sessions, distinguishing all the offences affected by the latter Statute. This information will be useful not only to Magistrates and their Clerks, but also to CLERKS OF THE PEACE. The Table of "Periodical Business for Town Clerks" has been prepared for the use of those who hold the office of TOWN CLERK in conjunction with that of Clerk to the Justices. The Table "Periodical Business for Justices" comprises all the business requiring attention at stated periods of the year.
Under the title "Practice" is given a full outline of the various stages of the proceedings before Justices from the application for a Summons or Warrant to the final adjudication, with the Law applicable thereto.

Periodical Sales of Reversions, Advowsons, Life Interest, Life Policies, Shares in Public Undertakings, &c.: established in 1803.

MESSRS. SHUTTLEWORTH and SONS respectfully inform the public that the classification of this species of property having proved to be extremely advantageous and economical to venders, and equally satisfactory and convenient to purchasers, the PERIODICAL SALES of REVERSIONARY INTERESTS, policies of insurances, tontines, debentures, advowsons, next presentations, all securities dependent upon human life, shares in docks, canals, mines, railways, and all public undertakings, will be continued through the present year (1844) as follows:—Friday, December 6.—28, Poultry, Jan. 1.

BURGHCLERE, Hants.—WM. AYLWIN has received instructions from the Executors of the late T. Major, esq. to submit for SALE by PUBLIC AUCTION (unless an acceptable offer be made for the same by private contract), on Thursday, the 28th of November, 1844, at Three o'clock, at the Pelican Inn, Speenhamland, a very desirable ESTATE, in the above parish, Copyhold of Inheritance, consisting of a licensed Beer-house, called the "Queen Adelaide," with about two acres of Arable and Meadow Land adjoining, and Seven Cottages, with large productive gardens, all well tenanted, with extensive common rights.
For particulars and conditions, and to treat for the property, apply to Messrs. MATTHEWS and ASTLEY, Solicitors, Hungerford; or to Mr. WM. AYLWIN, Land Surveyor and Auctioneer, Market-place, Newbury, Berks.

To be Sold.

MONTGOMERYSHIRE, on the borders of Shropshire.—To be SOLD, by PRIVATE CONTRACT, the MANORS of LEIGHTON and TEMPSTER, otherwise Tiertreff, the handsome modern mansion-house called Leighton-hall, now in hand, and 2,800 acres of good land surrounding it, of which 150 acres are in woods and plantations, and the remainder divided into convenient farms and tenements, and let to responsible yearly tenants at moderate rents; the whole being freehold of inheritance, except one small tenement, held under a lease for years, of which thirty-five were unexpired at Lady-day last. Terms for commutation of the tithes have been agreed on, and the land-tax is redeemed. This most desirable property lies nearly in a ring fence, is well stocked with game and fish, and is bounded on one side by the river Severn, which separates it from the Earl of Powis's demesnes adjoining Powis Castle. The estate is distant one to three miles from Welsh Pool, and nineteen miles from Shrewsbury, and the roads about it are excellent. A mail passes within a mile of the house, and leaves letters from all parts of England every morning and returns in the afternoon. For particulars and to treat for the purchase apply to Mr. Salt, solicitor, Shrewsbury.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FORMS OF CONVEYANCE AND MORTGAGE.

(In LAW TIMES of Aug. 31.)

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In reference to Mr. Church's letter of last week, I would beg to submit to the Profession at large that there can be no objection to, or doubt upon, the forms in question, on the ground that the word "valid" is there used in place of the word "effectual." The statute does not prescribe that, in referring thereto, the express title shall be set out, it merely requires that the deed "be expressed to be made in pursuance of this Act;" and, therefore, any terms or form of reference would suffice, provided an intention be thereby manifested of taking the benefit of the Act, which is certainly the case here, unless the courts are to "intend nonsense." The words, "in pursuance of the statute for dispensing with a lease for a year" (as there is no other English Act specifically for that purpose), would doubtless be equally effective; but the shortest and best mode, in my estimation, is, to make the reference literally, thus: "in pursuance of the Act 4 and 5 Victoria, cap. 21."

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Nov. 18, 1844. G. AUSTIN.

CERTIFICATE DUTY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I wish particularly to draw the attention of yourself and your numerous readers to the petition of the Lincolnshire Law Society for a Repeal of the Attorney's Certificate Duty (inserted in your paper of the 9th of November last, p. 105), and I would earnestly recommend all solicitors and law societies at once to adopt similar petitions; to co-operate with other societies, and by united effort endeavour to obtain a total or partial repeal of this most oppressive, unjust, and unfair tax.

Let every attorney and solicitor do what he can by petitioning and otherwise against this piece of injustice, and when the whole Profession makes a stir against it some modification or total repeal will be the result. Only let the Profession make a demand of their rights and shew their wrongs, I am confident that the former will be yielded to them and the latter removed.

Petition! Petition! Petition!

I am Sir, yours, &c.

WM. PHILLIPS.

75, Petergate, York, Nov. 20, 1844.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—My friend, Mr. Taylor (Secretary to the Law Society) has sent me your last number, in which there appears a circular letter of mine to the respectable solicitors here, and some remarks of your own upon it.

Be assured, if it were left to myself, I should have treated it with that "coolness" which you think I possess in so eminent a degree; but as it has raised the indignation of my professional friends, who think I ought to notice it, I shall do so shortly.

You ask—"Is he an Attorney, or a Sham Lawyer, or what?" That question might have been answered by yourself had you looked at the Law List.

You say I am unknown to you even by name; that is to say, I am not a subscriber to your periodical. Had you inquired of the Law Society, or of any respectable solicitor in Manchester, you would have found few better known, and, I trust, more respected.

But you think it may amuse your readers. I would advise you in future to leave amusing articles to Punch, for, be assured, you will fail. They appear not in your way.

I must beg of you to send down to the Law Society (Messrs. Rowley and Taylor) the envelope containing my circular, or if it were given to you personally, send the party's name.

I will now only add that I regret your remarks more for the sake of the public than for myself, inasmuch as you destroy that moral effect which your widely circulated paper might produce if you confined yourself to the attacking of really petty-fogging practitioners and their nefarious practices; but they should be well-authenticated cases.

I presume you will feel it but justice to publish this letter, and, perhaps, you will not object to publish the name of your informant.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant.

S. TUFFLEY HARDING.

Manchester, Nov. 18, 1844.

[Of course we publish Mr. Harding's defence, and leave it to our readers to say, upon re-perusal of his letter in our columns of last week, whether it was not one that required explanation, to say the least of it.

Equally of course we do not give the name of the gentleman by whom it was forwarded to us. It is not our practice so to do.

But we may add that the letter bears no date of the town, but only of the street; and supposing the writer's address to be in London, we turned to the Law List, and finding no such name here, we set down Mr. HARDING as one of the sham lawyers with whom the metropolis abounds. Hence the query, which, had we known, or had the letter shewn, that he was resident in Manchester, would not have been put, because the Law List would have answered it.

It will be unnecessary to assure our readers that it is not for their amusement, or for our own, that we have exposed professional malpractices, but as a most solemn duty, for the purpose of purifying the Profession.

Still the question returns, is Mr. HARDING'S circular strictly correct? What say the experienced? —Editor LAW TIMES.]

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"Z." submits the following query on the subject of "CREDITORS' DEEDS OF ASSIGNMENT:"—

Some professional men have lately adopted the practice of introducing into deeds of assignment for the benefit of creditors, a clause to the following effect:—

"That it shall be lawful for the said creditors or any of them, by note or memorandum in writing under their respective hands, to authorize any other person to execute these presents in their names and on their behalf; and to specify in the schedule hereunder written the amount of the debts due to such creditors respectively; and that such execution and specification shall be as binding and effectual as if the same were done under a formal power of attorney from such creditors."

The above mode, if it can be safely acted on, affords great facilities for obtaining the execution of deeds of assignment by creditors who reside at a distance; and I shall be obliged if some one of your correspondents will say how far the execution of a deed by an agent acting under a mere memorandum (not under seal, and unstamped) is such an execution as would be binding and effectual upon the creditor, and release the assignor and his estate from future liability or risk.

"LANCASTRIENSIS" comments on the fees to "Clerks to the Peace:"—

That most crying evil, the burthen imposed on misdemeanants in the exaction from them of heavy fees, notwithstanding their acquittal, has been so often and so ably commented upon in the pages of your journal, that perhaps little remains to be said now upon the subject. Every right-thinking person must be thoroughly convinced of the injustice of it, and before another session of Parliament closes most heartily do I join with you in the hope expressed in your last paper, "that some efficient measures will be adopted to remove this most monstrous stain upon the administration of justice." In the meantime I may furnish another of the many instances where this most objectionable practice has occurred, and has borne with great hardship on the individual who has been its victim. A poor fellow was indicted at the last quarter sessions for Lancashire (which county has not as yet yielded to the general impulse and abolished this exaction by its officers) for obtaining money under false pretences. There was not a shadow of a "pretence" for the charge; in fact, as the sequel proved, it was nothing short of a wilful and malicious prosecution. The jury at once acquitted him, and yet he was saddled with the payment of 1*l*. 5*s*. 8*d*. fees before he could be "legally" discharged.

The poor man had not a farthing to pay the fees with—indeed, had it not been for the extreme kindness of a few friends who felt confident of his innocence, he would not have been in the fortunate position to be defended by counsel.

In order, therefore, to procure his release, his friends had not only to bear the expense of feeing counsel on his behalf, but had to submit to their generosity being further taxed by the payment of the clerk of the peace's bill.

"X." addresses to us the following not uncalled-for suggestion:—

I was much pleased at seeing the observation made by Sir G. Stephen, at the late meeting of the "Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association," as to the absolute necessity of fair and honourable practice by practitioners themselves. There is one practice which ought to be at once given up, and which is a stain on the Profession, namely, that of wantonly appearing and driving to trial an innocent plaintiff, perhaps a honest and hard-working tradesman, who is compelled to call in the aid of the law to recover his just claim.

Discrimination by the public as to respectability or non-respectability is out of the question, the whole Profession shares the odium.

It has been suggested that in every case of the above description, where the presiding judge shall certify that upon the trial there was no real defence, the defendant's attorney should be made to pay the plaintiff his debt and costs, provided the defendant fails to do so.

TO CAPITALISTS.—Valuable and extensive property at Pendleton, near Manchester.—To be SOLD by AUCTION, by Messrs. CAPES and SMITH, at the Law Society's Rooms, No. 4, Norfolk-street, in Manchester, on Wednesday, the 18th day of December next, at three o'clock in the afternoon, subject to such conditions as will be then produced.

The inheritance in fee simple of and in SEVERAL CLOSES or PIECES of LAND, part of an estate called BRINDLEHEATH, situate at Pendleton, near Manchester, containing 11,250 square yards of land, or thereabouts, and TWENTY-TWO SEVERAL MESSUAGES and Cottages standing thereon, all which premises are now respectively occupied by Messrs. Wright Turner, Ralph Hobson, Blinkhorn and Bradshaws, John Greenwood, and others, and produce at low rentals an income of 280*l.*

And the several YEARLY RENTS of 29*l.* 14s., 24*l.* 1s. 1d., and 4*l.* 1s. 11d. respectively reserved and made payable out of adjoining lands and buildings, formerly other parts of the Brindleheath Estate.

The lands unbuilt upon are now, and have been for many years, occupied as a Market-garden, Nursery, and Pasture-ground. They may be eligibly laid out in building-plots, and are well calculated for manufacturing purposes, as they lie up to the Manchester and Bolton Railway and Canal. It has been ascertained there is Coal under the Estate, which, including that under the lands sold off upon chief rent, would belong to a purchaser. The property is about two miles from the Manchester Exchange, and within one mile of the township of Salford; the access thereto from both those towns is free from toll, and the whole is only subject to a nominal rent of 2*l.*

Further particulars and plans of the Estate may be had on application to Mr. WILLIAM BROOME, Accountant, 3, St. James's-square, or Mr. JAMES PARRY, Solicitor, 23, King-street, Manchester.

Terms for commutation of the tithes have been agreed on, and the land-tax is redeemed. This most desirable property lies nearly in a ring fence, is well stocked with game and fish, and is bounded on one side by the river Severn, which separates it from the Earl of Powis's demesnes adjoining Powis Castle. To Readers and Correspondents.

A WELL-WISHER.—Thanks for the hint, but a verbatim report of all the cases would occupy twenty volumes a year at the least. It is necessary to curtail the arguments of counsel. All useful objects are obtained by our plan of reporting verbatim the written, and therefore, deliberate opinions of the judges. This is the really valuable portion of a Law Report. All the rest is only suggestion, not authority.

R. T.—The Reports in the Law Journal are always cited when used by counsel.

ZETA'S suggestions are impracticable. He would starve out the Bar.

W. J. W. (Wells) is right. The paragraph should not have appeared in that place. It was so set by the Printer without the knowledge of the Editor.

A SUBSCRIBER.—The difficulties in the way of rightly spelling names which are only caught by the ear in court are almost insuperable.

A QUARTER SESSIONS ATTORNEY does not meet the merits of the case.

W. C. (Newcastle).—It is a rule never to interfere with the Reporter of the Court. in his sole discretion it rests what cases he shall report, and the manner of doing it. If the Reporter did not take the case, we cannot procure it. If he did, it will appear in due course.

W.—Decidedly that of Mr. Stone, the Attorney. Davidson's Concise Forms appear to be good, but on such a matter we should be averse to advise, as we could not possibly give them the necessary scrutiny.

EBOR will see that his hint has been taken.

H. C. H.—Byles, without doubt.

Y. Z. will be made early use of.

H. B.—We have asked the Reporter. he does not know of its being reported. He deemed it of no public interest

ENQUIRER.—It is unnecessary to insert his query. The word "extend" implies an addition to the present meaning of the word.

MR. J. SMITH will, of course, take no notice of bills of costs from persons he never employed.

A jury assembled in Bath to assess damages for false imprisonment under the game laws, when the following examination of a witness by Mr. Ludlow took place:—Mr. Ludlow: Do you know Mr. Chivers? Witness: Ees, zur, I knaw him very well; I zeed 'un doun at Gloucester 'sizes, where you were counsel against 'un.—Mr. Ludlow: Indeed, I didn't recollect that; you have a better memory than I have. Witness: Noa, zur, I don't think I hae; I wish I'd haulf as good. Mr. Ludlow: Did you ever see any law books in Mr. Chivers's room? Witness: Noa, zur. Mr. Ludlow: But there must have been some: people couldn't do without books, you know. Witness: Noa, zur, they couldn't, sure enough; parsons couldn't preach without a book, and you lawyers couldn't bother people so, if you hadn't books to go by.

TRIAL BY JURY.—Not a hundred miles from Peterborough, at a late quarter sessions held in an ancient town-hall, it is said that a remarkable circumstance occurred. On the trial of a prisoner charged with robbing his master of various articles, the business had proceeded so far as to leave the matter in the hands of the jury; and that body not being able to come to a satisfactory determination whether the prisoner was guilty or not, and being locked up, the foreman proposed, in order to shorten the question, that the poker from the fireplace should be placed exactly upright, and that if it fell to the right the prisoner was guilty, and if it fell to the left he was not guilty! The poker so placed fell to the right, and the poor prisoner obtained three months' imprisonment in consequence.—Lincoln Mercury.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS,

THE LAW OF DISTRESS FOR RENT, on Property not the Tenant's, considered and condemned; including a Report of the recent case, Joule v. Jackson, with Remarks thereon, &c.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PRESS GENERALLY:—

"The author argues strongly against the present state of the law. Some very valuable information is afforded on the law of distress, and we recommend the work to the perusal of all parties."—Liverpool Mercury.

"The author's observations are just and forcible; the arguments are well sustained, and must lead to a conviction that the law ought to be amended."—Chester Courant.

"The existing law is minutely analyzed, and its impolicy, as well as its injustice, freely exposed. The whole subject demands the serious attention of the Legislature."—Bolton Chronicle.

"This little work appears to us to be a very able disquisition on a subject in which the public is deeply interested.... The subject is dwelt upon with great power and energy, and the law shewn to be unjust and oppressive."—Stockport Advertiser.

"This volume will be found very useful not only to brewers and others suffering from the last interpretation of the law, but to the legal profession."—Preston Chronicle.

"This is an able dissertation on the law of distress; and the object of the author is to effect an alteration in regard to property taken in distress, not belonging to the tenant. He treats of the origin and nature of the remedy by distress at common law; the law of agistment, as connected with distress for rent; and then of chattels which may or may not be distrained. The author discusses, with considerable acumen, the several cases on the subject, particularly Fowkes v. Joyce (3 Lev. 260); Francis v. Wyatt (1 W. Blac. 483, 3 Burr. 1498); Muspratt v. Gregory (1 M. & W. 633, 3 M. & W. 677); and Adams v. Grane (1 C. & M 380). The larger portion of the book is devoted, however, to the recent case of Joule v. Jackson, tried at the Liverpool Summer Assizes in 1846, before Mr. Baron Rolfe. Of this a full report is given, and the case was afterwards argued in Banc, as reported 7 Mee. & Wel."—Legal Observer.

TO SOLICITORS, MAGISTRATES, TOWN-CLERKS, AND CLERKS OF THE PEACE.

This day is published, price 8s. the Third Edition of the JUSTICES' POCKET MANUAL; or, Guide to the ordinary Duties of a Justice of the Peace; with considerable additions and improvements, and an Appendix of Forms.

By SAMUEL STONE, Solicitor,
Clerk to the Justices, and Town Clerk for the Borough of Leicester.

This edition contains, in addition to a classified arrangement of the various other subjects which constitute the business of Courts of Petty Session, a copious analysis of the late Acts respecting Orders in Bastardy, Masters and Workmen in the Woollen and other Hosiery Manufactures, Mines, Theatres, Parish Constables, Poundbreach, and the Jurisdiction of the Quarter Sessions, distinguishing all the offences affected by the latter Statute. This information will be useful not only to Magistrates and their Clerks, but also to CLERKS OF THE PEACE. The Table of "Periodical Business for Town Clerk" has been prepared for the use of those who hold the office of TOWN CLERK in conjunction with that of Clerk to the Justices. The Table "Periodical Business for Justices" comprises all the business requiring attention at stated periods of the year.

Under the title "Practice" is given a full outline of the various stages of the proceedings before Justices from the application for a Summons or Warrant to the final adjudication, with the Law applicable thereto.

Opinions of the Press.

"Calculated to be of much service, by way of ready reference, and as a guide to the whole summary jurisdiction. We have heard it extremely well spoken of by magistrates and professional men. We do not hesitate to recommend it warmly." The Justice of the Peace.

"In this new edition the author has adopted many improvements and additions, correcting it to the law as since altered in so many of the subjects treated of. The arrangement is admirable. We heartily commend it to magistrates, their clerks, and the attorneys who practise in their courts."—Law Times.

"In publishing this manual, the author has supplied a common want in every justice room. He has furnished a concise, and from close observation, we may add, accurate summary of the different laws to be administered in petty sessions, and of the mode in which the cases are to be dealt with." Morning Chronicle.

"This work contains a most excellent and practical summary of all the minute cases which come before a justice of the peace." Gateshead Observer.

"We can hardly conceive a much more useful book for magistrates and their clerks. The author seems to have performed his task in an admirable manner."—Worcestershire Chronicle.

Also, by the same Author,

THE JUSTICES' HAND-BOOK, containing Precedents of Four Hundred Informations under Summary Convictions. Price 5s.

"The author's attempt is successful, and he has supplied what has long been a desideratum."—Law Times

A PRISON SCENE.—The following laughable dialogue occurred on Friday the 29th ult., in the Jersey Prison. Sir John De Veulle and Mr. Bisson presented themselves as visiting magistrates at the door of Mr. Wilson's room about half-past ten o'clock. Mr. Wilson was not up. A knock at his door being heard, Mr. Wilson called out, in his loudest tones, "Who's there?" Answer—"Sir John De Veulle." Mr. Wilson—"Come in?" Sir J. De Veulle (Mr. Bisson remaining a little in the rear)—"I wish to know, Mr. Wilson, whether you have any complaint to make?" Mr. Wilson—"Five hundred. In the first place, where are your prison rules?—they ought to be posted up in every prisoner's room; but before I talk to you, take off your hat." Sir J. De Veulle—"Really, Mr. Wilson,——" Mr. Wilson—"Take off your hat!" Sir J. De Veulle—"I moved my hat when I came in." Mr. Wilson—"Take off your hat, Sir; I'm bareheaded! How dare you enter a gentleman's room with your hat on?" Sir J. De Veulle—"Oh, if that is all you have to say, I shall leave you." Mr. Wilson—Then take yourself off." This unceremonious rejection of the bailiff's kind offices, tendered to the man he had imprisoned, must have somewhat startled and annoyed that functionary—more especially if, as we believe, he intended to renew the offers fruitlessly made through Mr. Hammond.—Jersey Gazette.

To Readers and Correspondents

G. H. K.—A useful Law Dictionary, to be published in parts, is one of the projected works of the Verulam Society.

A SUBSCRIBER (Manchester) has made some mistake. The Index to the 3rd volume consists of ten pages, the Statutes are separately indexed, and every subject is elaborately treated in like manner in the General Index.

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.—The pressure of strictly legal matters upon our columns compelled the omission of those tables.

W. MELLAND.—The complaint is sent to the reporter. The price of the volume is, we believe, 5s.

J. C. W. (Beccles).—This communication is not admissible, for reasons that must be obvious to the writer.

F. L. B. (Llanelly).—The work named is the most complete, but the most costly. There are cheaper books on the same subject, as Archbold's, Deacon's, and Stone's. We should pause before we so expended 6l.

E. F. (Norwich).—Our strict rule is to notice no malpractices that are not brought before the public by advertisement, in courts of justice, &c. Therefore while we thank our correspondent for his attention, we must decline to insert his communication.

F. F. D.—We prefer to wait the final result of the correspondence. If then it shall appear to be likely to interest our readers, it shall be used.

ERRATA. In the list of members to the Verulam Society, published in No. 86 for "Heane, Henry, Newport Pagnell" read "Heane, Henry, Newport, Salop."

In the list of gentlemen called to the Bar, given in the same number, for "Wire, Edward, esq." read "Wise, Edward, esq."

THE PUBLISHER begs to state, in reply to repeated applications, that he will readily accommodate the Subscribers to the LAW TIMES by procuring for them and inclosing in the parcels he may have occasion to transmit to them, any Books, Law Forms, or other Publications they may desire to receive from London. They may also, if they please, avail themselves of the transmission of their Volumes of the LAW TIMES for binding, to inclose any other books for the binder.

NECROLOGY.

THE HON. ROBERT OTWAY CAVE.

We have to announce the demise of the Hon. Robert Otway Cave, M.P. for Tipperary, who expired after a short illness on Friday se'nnight, at Bath, where the hon. gentleman had repaired with Mrs. Otway Cave for the benefit of his health. The deceased was eldest and only surviving son of the late Mr. Henry Otway, brother of Admiral Sir Robert Otway, Bart. K.C.B. and Sarah (now Baroness Braye), only daughter of Sir Thomas Cave, Bart. whose grandmother was eventually heiress of the first Lord Braye. He was consequently heir apparent to the barony of Braye. The hon. deceased married, Oct. 19, 1833, Miss Sophia Burdett, eldest daughter of the late Sir Francis Burdett, Bart. by whom, however, we hear he does not leave any issue. He was returned for Leicester, in 1826, by a considerable majority over Mr. William Evans and Lord Denman, and in 1830 was elected for Hastings. In 1835 he was elected, in conjunction with the Right Hon. Richard Lalor Shiel, for the county of Tipperary, and has continued to represent that Irish county up to the present time. In 1818 he took the name of "Cave" in addition to that of Otway, by royal sign manual. As we have above stated, he was heir apparent to the barony of Braye, a title which had been in abeyance since 1557 until 1839, when the barony was called out in favour of the present Baroness Braye, mother of the deceased. The hon. member was, in his political principles, a zealous and attentive supporter of what are termed "Liberal" opinions. By his death a vacancy of course occurs in the parliamentary representation of the county of Tipperary; but it is of little moment in a party view, as the popular candidate is certain to be returned without opposition by the Conservatives. We understand that on Friday evening an express was received by Miss Burdett Coutts from Bath, which conveyed the most unfavourable intelligence regarding the hon. member's health, and, in consequence, that lady left by the mail train that evening to join her sister at Bath; but, on her arrival, the hon. gentleman had expired. Miss Coutts remains with her sister at Bath to condole with her on the severe domestic bereavement she has experienced.

Sales by Auction.

TO CAPITALISTS.—Valuable and extensive property at Pendleton, near Manchester.—To be SOLD by AUCTION, by Messrs. CAPES and SMITH, at the Law Society's Rooms, No. 4, Norfolk-street, in Manchester, on Wednesday, the 18th day of December next, at three o'clock in the afternoon, subject to such conditions as will be then produced.

The inheritance in fee simple of and in SEVERAL CLOSES or PIECES of LAND, part of an estate called BRINDLEHEATH, situate at Pendleton, near Manchester, containing 41,250 square yards of land, or thereabouts, and TWENTY-TWO SEVERAL MESSUAGES and Cottages standing thereon, all which premises are now respectively occupied by Messrs. Wright Turner, Ralph Hobson, Blinkhour and Bradshaws, John Greenwood, and others, and produce at low rentals an income of 280*l*.

And the several YEARLY RENTS of 296*l*. 14s., 24*l*. 1s. 1d., and 3*l*. 13s. 11d. respectively reserved and made payable out of adjoining lands and buildings, formerly other parts of the Brindleheath Estate.

The lands unbuilt upon are now, and have been for many years, occupied as a Market-garden, Nursery and Pasture-ground. They may be eligibly laid out in building-plots, and are well calculated for manufacturing purposes, as they lie up to the Manchester and Bolton Railway and Canal. It has been ascertained there is Coal under the Estate, which, including that under the lands sold off upon chief rent, would belong to a purchaser. The property is about two miles from the Manchester Exchange, and within one mile of the township of Salford; the access thereto from both those towns is free from toll, and the whole is only subject to a nominal rent of 2*l*.

Further particulars and plans of the Estate may be had on application to Mr. WILLIAM BROOME, Accountant, 3, St James's-square, or Mr. JAMES PARRY, Solicitor, 23, King-street, Manchester.

TO SOLICITORS, MAGISTRATES, TOWN-CLERKS, AND CLERKS OF THE PEACE.

This day is published, price 8s. the Third Edition of the JUSTICES' POCKET MANUAL; or, Guide to the ordinary Duties of a Justice of the Peace; with considerable additions and improvements, and an Appendix of Forms.

By SAMUEL STONE, Solicitor,
Clerk to the Justices, and Town Clerk for the Borough of Leicester.

This edition contains, in addition to a classified arrangement of the various other subjects which constitute the business of Courts of Petty Session, a copious analysis of the late Acts respecting Orders in Bastardy, Masters and Workmen in the Woollen and other Hosiery Manufactures, Mines, Theatres, Parish Constables, Poundbreach, and the Jurisdiction of the Quarter Sessions, distinguishing all the offences affected by the latter Statute. This information will be useful not only to Magistrates and their Clerks, but also to CLERKS OF THE PEACE. The Table of "Periodical Business for Town Clerks" has been prepared for the use of those who hold the office of TOWN CLERK in conjunction with that of Clerk to the Justices. The Table "Periodical Business for Justices" comprises all the business requiring attention at stated periods of the year.

Under the title "Practice" is given a full outline of the various stages of the proceedings before Justices from the application for a Summons or Warrant to the final adjudication, with the Law applicable thereto.

Opinions of the Press.

"Calculated to be of much service, by way of ready reference, and as a guide to the whole summary jurisdiction. We have heard it extremely well spoken of by magistrates and professional men. We do not hesitate to recommend it warmly."—The Justice of the Peace.

"In this new edition the author has adopted many improvements and additions, correcting it to the law as since altered in so many of the subjects treated of. The arrangement is admirable. We heartily commend it to magistrates, their clerks, and the attorneys who practise in their courts."—Law Times.

"In publishing this manual, the author has supplied a common want in every justice-room. He has furnished a concise, and from close observation, we may add, accurate summary of the different laws to be administered in petty sessions, and of the mode in which the cases are to be dealt with."—Morning Chronicle.

"This work contains a most excellent and practical summary of all the usual cases which come before a justice of the peace."—Gateshead Observer.

"We can hardly conceive a much more useful book for magistrates and their clerks. The author seems to have performed his task in an admirable manner."—Worcestershire Chronicle.

MR. CLARKE'S ENAMELLED SUCCEDANEUM, for stopping decayed Teeth, is far superior to any thing ever before used, as it is placed in the tooth without any pressure or pain, and becomes as hard as the enamel, immediately after application, and remains firm in the tooth for life, rendering extraction unnecessary, and renders them again useful for mastication. Prepared only by Mr. Clarke, Surgeon Dentist.

LOSS OF TEETH.

Mr. CLARKE still continues to supply the loss of teeth, from one to a complete set, upon his beautiful system of self-adhesion, which has procured him such universal approbation in some thousands of cases, and recommended by numerous physicians and surgeons, as being the most ingenious system of supplying artificial teeth hitherto invented. They are so contrived as to adapt themselves over the most tender gums or remaining stumps, without causing the least pain, rendering the operation of extraction quite unnecessary. They are so fixed as to fasten any loose teeth, by forming a new gum, where the gums have shrunk, from the use of mercury or other causes, without the aid of any wire or springs, and above all, are firmer in the mouth, and fixed with that attention to nature as to defy detection by the closest observer. He also begs to invite those not liking to undergo any painful operation, as practised by most members of the profession, to inspect his painless, yet effective, system, where numerous sets and partial sets, in all stages of progress, may be seen; and in order that his system may be within the reach of the most economical, he will continue the same moderate charges.

Mr CLARKE, Surgeon-Dentist, at home from Ten till Five. No. 6, Thayer-street, Manchester-square.

TO SOLICITORS, MAGISTRATES, TOWN-CLERKS, AND CLERKS OF THE PEACE.

This day is published, price 8s. the Third Edition of the JUSTICES' POCKET MANUAL; or, Guide to the ordinary Duties of a Justice of the Peace; with considerable additions and improvements, and an Appendix of Forms.

By SAMUEL STONE, Solicitor,
Clerk to the Justices, and Town Clerk for the Borough of Leicester.

This edition contains, in addition to a classified arrangement of the various other subjects which constitute the business of Courts of Petty Session, a copious analysis of the late Acts respecting Orders in Bastardy, Masters and Workmen in the Woollen and other Hosiery Manufactures, Mines, Theatres, Parish Constables, Poundbreach, and the Jurisdiction of the Quarter Sessions, distinguishing all the offences affected by the latter Statute. This information will be useful not only to Magistrates and their Clerks, but also to CLERKS OF THE PEACE. The Table of "Periodical Business for Town Clerks" has been prepared for the use of those who hold the office of TOWN CLERK in conjunction with that of Clerk to the Justices. The Table "Periodical Business for Justices" comprises all the business requiring attention at stated periods of the year.

Under the title "Practice" is given a full outline of the various stages of the proceedings before Justices from the application for a Summons or Warrant to the final adjudication, with the Law applicable thereto.

Opinions of the Press.

"Calculated to be of much service, by way of ready reference, and as a guide to the whole summary jurisdiction. We have heard it extremely well spoken of by magistrates and professional men. We do not hesitate to recommend it warmly."—The Justice of the Peace.

"In this new edition the author has adopted many improvements and additions, correcting it to the law as since altered in so many of the subjects treated of. The arrangement is admirable. We heartily commend it to magistrates, their clerks, and the attorneys who practise in their courts."—Law Times.

"In publishing this manual, the author has supplied a common want in every justice-room. He has furnished a concise, and from close observation, we may add, accurate summary of the different laws to be administered in petty sessions, and of the mode in which the cases are to be dealt with."—Morning Chronicle.

"This work contains a most excellent and practical summary of all the usual cases which come before a justice of the peace."—Gateshead Observer.

"We can hardly conceive a much more useful book for magistrates and their clerks. The author seems to have performed his task in an admirable manner."—Worcestershire Chronicle.

Also, by the same Author,

THE JUSTICES' HAND-BOOK, containing Precedents of Four Hundred Informations under Summary Convictions. Price 5s.

"The author's attempt is successful, and he has supplied what has long been a desideratum."—Law Times.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

LEA and PERRINS' WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE.

Prepared from a Recipe of a Nobleman in the County.

"One of the most piquant inventions of this luxurious and epicurean age is Lea and Perrins' Worcestershire Sauce, adapted to Fish, Flesh, Fowl, and Soup; giving a zest far superior to the long-established favourites, more wholesome and of less cost."—Naval and Military Gaz., April 8, 1843.

Copy of a testimonial from Capt. Hosken.

"Great Western Steam-ship, June 6, 1844.

"The cabin of the Great Western has been regularly supplied with Lea and Perrins' Worcestershire Sauce, which is adapted for every variety of dish; from turtle to beef, from salmon to steaks—to all of which it gives a famous relish. I have great pleasure in recommending this excellent sauce to captains and passengers for its capital flavour, and as the best accompaniment of its kind, for a voyage.

(Signed) "JAMES HOSKEN."

Sold, Wholesale by the Proprietors, Messrs. LEA and PERRINS, Worcester; Messrs. BARCLAY and SONS, Farringdon-street, and the principal Oil and Italian Warehousemen, London; and Retail, by the usual venders of Sauces.

T. TAYLOR'S Celebrated GINGER WINE. Recommended by the Faculty for Spasms, Flatulency, &c. &c. as well as being a most delicious drink when diluted with spring water. Town and country dealers, finding the decided preference given to T. TAYLOR'S GINGER WINE, are too commonly induced (by a slight advantage in price) to substitute an article of inferior quality. Families may protect themselves from such imposition by observing that the genuine cannot be sold under 18s. per dozen, and that the cork of every bottle is branded with his name and address, and covered with a patent metallic capsule, embossed with an emblem of the British Lion, and the inscription,—T. TAYLOR, 38, Brooke-street, Holborn-bars.

This Society has been established upwards of thirty-four years; all just demands upon its funds have been promptly and liberally settled; nearly two millions and a half have been thus paid away on expired policies; and to meet the existing engagements of the Institution, it possesses funds amounting to upwards of a million and three-quarters, almost wholly invested on real and Government securities.

The Rates of Premium are BELOW those of most other Offices, and, under the age of 45, not less so than ten per cent.—a benefit in itself equivalent to an annual bonus; whilst periodical additions are also made to the sums assured upon all policies for the whole duration of life, in proportion to the amount of premium paid; the full advantage of Life Assurance is thus enjoyed by the members of this Institution.

The subjoined List of some of the existing Policies of the Society exhibits the aggregate amount of Bonus assigned to each of those Policies, including that declared at the General Meeting held on the 9th of September, 1842.

TO PREVENT ALL FUTURE QUESTIONS AS TO THE VALIDITY OF POLICIES, this Company are prohibited by their deed of constitution from disputing any claim, unless they take upon themselves to prove that the policy upon which the claim arises was obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation.

The Company are further bound to give effect to every policy, although the debt for which it may have been originally procured, or at any time held, may have been paid off before the claim arises.

And that the value of policies may not be lessened or destroyed by parties going beyond the limits usually prescribed, the Company grant, upon payment of a small extra premium, general or whole world leave, which subsists during the currency of the policy.

By these means the policies of the London, Edinburgh, and Dublin Life Company have come to be considered as forming securities more complete and more easily negotiable than any other similar documents.

Assurances are granted either with or without participation in profits, and the utmost facility is given in regard to the payment of the premiums, by the assured having the option of payment by a progressive ascending scale, or according to the half premium system, continued for seven years.

COMMISSION.—The Solicitor who transacts a Policy with this Company, is considered as the Agent during its whole currency, and receives commission upon all future premiums, by whomsoever they may be paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"W. S. J." (Somerset) has transmitted the following practical question, and will be obliged by information from those who have knowledge on the subject:—

As your columns are open to the Profession for general communication and information, I will beg to trespass thereon with a view of eliciting some information that may be of service to the Profession.

Before the Act of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, to an action of assumpsit either in one of the superior courts of law at Westminster or in a county court, a defendant was enabled to give payment in evidence under the general issue. The Act empowered "the judges of the superior courts of common law at Westminster" to make by rule or order "such alterations in the mode of pleading in the said courts" as to them might seem expedient, which rules, orders, &c. should be "binding and obligatory on the said courts, and all other courts of common law."

In Hilary Term, 4 Wm. 4, the judges made rules for pleading, and amongst them it was ordered that in all actions of assumpsit, except on Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes, the plea of non-assumpsit should operate only as a denial in fact of the express contract or promise alleged, or of the matter of fact from which the contract or promise alleged might be implied by law. Ex. gra. In an action of indebitatus assumpsit for goods sold and delivered the plea of non-assumpsit was to operate as a denial of the sale and delivery in point of fact. And that in every species of assumpsit all matters of confession and avoidance, including not only those by way of discharge, but those which shewed the transaction to be either void or voidable in point of law on the ground of fraud or otherwise, should be pleaded specially, ex. gra. infancy, coverture, release, payment, &c. And by rule of Trinity Term, 1 Vict. it was ordered that payment should not, in any case, be allowed to be given in evidence in reduction of damages or debt, but should be pleaded in bar.

It has been said that these rules and orders are binding upon the county courts, and that they, as courts of common law, ought to adopt the mode of pleading laid down, and that unless such mode of pleading were adopted, a defendant in indebitatus assumpsit having paid the money claimed, could not give in evidence the payment in discharge of the action under the plea of the general issue.

On the other hand, it has been contended, that the county court is not bound by the rules and orders of the judges, notwithstanding the words in the Act of Parliament, "all other courts of common law;" and that the county court is not a court of common law.

I shall therefore be glad to hear from some of your well-informed readers, whether the county courts generally, or whether any of them, have adopted as their guide the rules of the judges; and also, whether in fact these courts are or are not courts of common law, and as such bound by the rules and orders I have quoted.

"ORIGO" offers the following suggestions as to the CERTIFICATE DUTY:—

I am sure your able observations on the above subject in last Saturday's LAW TIMES cannot but convince the most sceptical of the injustice as well as inutility of the certificate duty.

But it is equally certain that unless a plan is adopted, little or nothing besides perhaps a few local and straggling efforts will be attempted; and as all depends, in cases such as this, upon unanimity of sentiment and purpose, such efforts might be productive of more harm than good. Conclusions unfavourable to the petitioners might be drawn from the silence of the mass of the Profession. It is true we have a very large army in the field, and all that is wanted is a leader and a uniform plan of operation.

The only practicable course appears to me to be, immediately to start a subscription (through the medium of your office) for the purpose of defraying the necessary expenses attendant upon preparing petitions of adequate dimensions, to include the great majority at least of the Profession, and of employing canvassers for the various towns. Or it would be better if this expense could be saved by persuading the Law Societies, from their own resources, to canvass a certain district, assigning to each one of such extent, that the aggregate would comprehend the whole Profession. I merely throw out the hint for your mature consideration.

"AN OLD SUBSCRIBER," Manchester, referring to some remarks on Local Courts which have appeared in our columns, makes the following comment:—

Having so frequently noticed in the LAW TIMES an attack upon the Local Courts for the recovery of small debts, I have been induced to trouble you with a few remarks. When first I noticed the suggestions thrown out by you I concluded some unfortunate correspondent had urged you to take up the cause, but concluded the fallacy of the argument would prove itself, without any interference; but finding you still persist in your attack, I must naturally conclude that your correspondent has not troubled himself to make any inquiry or given the matter due consideration. He appears to imagine that a creditor would be much relieved by having a power of recovering his debts at a quarter sessions. If there happened to be a quarter sessions held in every place where a Local Court for the recovery of debts exists, his argument might have had a little more weight; but I fancy he is not aware that almost all the Local Courts for the recovery of small debts are at a very great distance from any sessions, and the courts are held much more frequently, thereby affording a more speedy recovery of the debts: some are forty or fifty miles from the place where the sessions are held for the county, and fourteen or fifteen miles from the sessions held in any adjoining county. Pray, what would be the expense of plaintiff and defendant alone travelling with their witnesses to the sessions? Why, I should not exaggerate if I said five times the amount of the costs altogether now charged in the Local Courts. Besides, why should we be sent to the sessions to recover our debts, or why should the sessions alone have jurisdiction? We might just as well be sent back to the county courts and try as we formerly did. The intention of the Legislature in passing the several Bills for the recovery of small debts is that a creditor may recover his debt at a trifling cost and without loss of time to himself and debtor, and this object the Local Courts have effected, and which, as far as I can learn, has given general satisfaction. But perhaps your correspondent, on reading these remarks, will explain more fully the benefits he may imagine will result from his suggestions.

A Correspondent signing himself "A. C." thus alludes to the drawing up of wills by unprofessional persons:—

With reference to the subject broached by your correspondent "H. M. G." in your last week's paper, I would observe that the preparing of wills by by unqualified persons would appear to be almost a matter of course in this neighbourhood. It was but last week an individual produced to me one of these unprofessionally made wills, to endeavour to obtain my opinion on it, or, as he said, to be informed if it was "all right." This of itself would scarcely have attracted my notice, had there been no particular circumstance to have done so. But what struck me was, the appearance the document had of being one of a numerous class. It was a printed form filled up, like a common bond, or apprenticeship indenture, garnished at the top with the Royal arms, and couched in language burlesquing the solemn; its composition assumed to be technical, but both technically and grammatically was all stuff. Of course I recommended that the production should be referred back to the gentleman who made it for revision. This gentleman, by the bye, did not appear to have thought favourably of the New Act, for he had sealed the will, and got it attested by three witnesses. I also believe it to be quite common for unqualified persons to prove wills, and would suggest that no attorney should do business with any Proctor known to act for a "sham lawyer."

"J. E. H. G." Stratford-on-Avon, proposes a novel, and more curious than practicable, plan for a tax in lieu of the attorneys' and solicitors' certificate duty:—

The attorneys' and solicitors' certificate duty, as it now stands, is undoubtedly a very partial and unfair tax, and demands the serious attention of the Legislature and the Profession.

The young practitioner, just struggling into professional existence, is compelled to bear (except for the first three years) as heavy a burden as the veteran who has become stout and strong in "the needful," by a prosperous professional career of a number of years. To the latter the impost of 8*l.* or 12*l.* per annum is a mere trifle, "a cypher in the great account;" but to the former it is a devouring and relentless monster, swallowing up a large portion of his hard-earned profits.

It perhaps cannot, I submit, be expected that the Government will altogether abandon the tax upon lawyers, but it probably might be induced to remodel and place it upon a more equitable footing than it stands at the present.

I take it that a true and healthy system of taxation ought always to be founded upon the equalization principle, under which every one in the state should bear the burden according to his means, and no more; and upon this principle let every attorney and solicitor pay for the business that he actually does, and not, as at present, a fixed duty, whether he has the business or not. No reasonable man could object to this; because the more business a man has the better is he enabled to pay a tax upon it.

The penny postage system of Mr. Rowland Hill has been found to answer well; I would, therefore, borrow its principle, and suggest that in lieu of the present annual certificate duty, a tax something similar to the following should be imposed upon the business documents of every attorney and solicitor in England and Wales, viz.:—

	s.	d.
Upon every letter written by an attorney or solicitor, or his clerk, in the due course of professional business	0	1
Upon every agreement, cognovit, judge's order, and the like, where the subject-matter thereof shall not exceed in value 20*l.* .	0	1
Upon all others	0	2
Upon every deed, bond, warrant of attorney, and all other documents of a like nature, where the subject-matter thereof shall not exceed in value 100*l.*	2	6
Exceeding 100*l.* and not 200*l.* . .	4	0
" 200*l.* " 500*l.* . .	7	6
500*l.* and upwards . .	10	0
Upon every abstract, or extract of title-deeds, wills, and other muniments of title, for every entire quantity of 504 words . . .	0	1
Upon all attested copies, for every entire quantity of 720 words	0	1
Upon every will, for every entire quantity of 720 words	0	2
Upon every bill filed and answer put in, in the High Court of Chancery, for every entire quantity of 720 words	0	6
Upon every writ, summons, declaration, notice, or plea, or other proceedings, in any of the courts of law in England and Wales, where the debt or damages indorsed or set forth shall not exceed 20*l.*	0	1
Upon all others	0	2
Upon all other documents and writings whatsoever, prepared by attorneys and solicitors in the bonâ fide and legitimate course of their business, for every entire quantity of 720 words	0	1

From the foregoing should be exempted—

All letters between country attorneys and solicitors and their London agents, and their respective clerks; and between members of a firm and their clerks.

Likewise, drafts of all descriptions, except those for the perusal of attorneys and solicitors other than those who prepared them, agents of course excepted.

For the more readily shewing by what attorney, &c. the documents liable to the duty were prepared, every such attorney or solicitor should sign his name, or the name of his firm, upon some conspicuous part of the instrument prepared, under the words "Prepared by me," adding the day of the month and the date of the year.

The stamps to be used should be neat, and similar to those now used upon the post-office envelopes; they should bear the word "certificate," and the price, and be impressed by Government upon parchment and paper of the description usually used by the Profession for the various purposes to which they would be applicable. This stamped paper, &c. should be sold at all stamp-offices, and by any other person taking out a license for that purpose.

I would make it imperative upon every attorney and solicitor to use these stamps, under a fine for every offence, to be enforced before any magistrate, with a power of appeal; and in case of default in payment of the fine within a limited period, suspension from professional duties for such time as any judge of the superior courts should think proper, not exceeding a certain time.

The plan may, perhaps, be objected to on the ground that attorneys would charge this extra stamp-duty, in some shape or other, to their clients, and London agents upon their country agencies. In the first of these instances, this cannot occur any more than it does now, because, by the general taxation which is imposed upon all professional bills, no more than a certain sum can be charged to the client; and in the latter case the objection may be obviated by extending a like taxation to agency accounts. This protection might be further extended by imposing a fine upon all attorneys, solicitors, and agents who by their bills charge more to their clients than would be allowed to them upon taxation.

Of course the foregoing is nothing more than a rough sketch of a system for an equal taxation, which I have no doubt would work well.

A correspondent sends the following reply to A. P.'s question (supra, p. 202):—

There are three parties interested:—1st, the vendors; 2nd, the heir-at-law; and 3rd, the executors of A B. The vendors must prepare the abstract of title, which must be unexceptionable, unless otherwise expressed in the agreement for sale made during the life of A B. The solicitor to the heir-at-law—the quasi purchaser—has a right to peruse the abstract and prepare the conveyance as in all common cases, and I consider the solicitors to the executors of A B entitled to peruse both the abstract and the direct conveyance to be satisfied that the title is good (without which the executors would be acting wrong if they paid the purchase-money out of the assets of A B), and to be further satisfied that the direct conveyance contains nothing improper.

THIS Office is provided with Tables specially calculated, by which it can ASSURE DISEASED LIVES on EQUITABLE TERMS.

MEMBERS OF CONSUMPTIVE FAMILIES ASSURED at Equitable Rates.

INCREASED ANNUITIES GRANTED on UNSOUND LIVES, the amount varying with the particular disease.

HEALTHY LIVES are Assured at LOWER RATES than at most other Offices.

Owing to the prevalence of disease, more than two-thirds of the population are not assurable in other offices (see Prospectus, &c.), and it is ascertained that in several of the leading assurance societies in London, 23 per cent., or more than one in five of the applicants, although ostensibly good lives, are rejected on medical examination.

Solicitors being much connected with life assurance, have experienced this difficulty to a considerable extent from the delay, and often permanent obstacles, occurring in loan and other money transactions on behalf of their clients; the legal profession has consequently freely patronized this society, as it affords facilities not hitherto available in assurance transactions.

The success that has attended the office during the FIRST THREE YEARS is highly satisfactory, and there is every reason to believe that, as its peculiar features and principles become more known and better understood, it will command an unusual amount of public patronage.

About THREE-FOURTHS of the POLICIES already issued by the society are on DISEASED LIVES, and a majority of these had been previously rejected by other offices, shewing the necessity which existed for an assurance society on the plan in question.

Medical referees are appointed in almost every town of any extent, no difficulty will therefore be experienced in procuring the examination of parties residing in the country, on whom proposals for assurance are made.

Prospectuses, and every other information, will be forwarded on application.

TO PREVENT ALL FUTURE QUESTIONS AS TO THE VALIDITY OF POLICIES, this Company are prohibited by their deed of constitution from disputing any claim, unless they take upon themselves to prove that the policy upon which the claim arises was obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation.

The Company are further bound to give effect to every policy, although the debt for which it may have been originally procured, or at any time held, may have been paid off before the claim arises.

And that the value of policies may not be lessened or destroyed by parties going beyond the limits usually prescribed, the Company grant, upon payment of a small extra premium, general or whole world leave, which subsists during the currency of the policy.

By these means the policies of the London, Edinburgh, and Dublin Life Company have come to be considered as forming securities more complete and more easily negotiable than any other similar documents.

Assurances are granted either with or without participation in profits, and the utmost facility is given in regard to the payment of the premiums, by the assured having the option of payment by a progressive ascending scale, or according to the half premium system, continued for seven years.

COMMISSION.—The Solicitor who transacts a Policy with this Company, is considered as the Agent during its whole currency, and receives commission upon all future premiums, by whomsoever they may be paid.

NEW RULES OF PLEADING—COUNTY COURT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The question propounded by "W. S. J." as to whether the County Courts are bound by the rules Hilary Term, 4 Wm. 4, and Trinity Term, 1 Vict. is justly stated to be one of importance to the Profession.

As the rules in question are to be "obligatory on all Courts of Common Law," the first question proposed is, whether the County Court is such. This may be answered, without the shadow of a doubt, in the affirmative. Upon this all the writers on the jurisdiction and practice of this Court agree. Anderson says in so many words that the County Court is a Court of Common Law. And Sweet, in his Treatise, p. 1, says:—"At the division of the kingdom into shires or counties by King Alfred, he instituted the Court called the County Court." This being allowed as historically and traditionally true, answers the question of itself (the Court being, without doubt, conversant with common law causes), for it is well known that all things are of common law origin which derive their existence from a custom or a statute of a date prior to the commencement of the reign of Richard I.; for all other things are before time of legal memory, and therefore customary, or appertaining to the common law. These authors are also confirmed by the general writers upon the laws and constitution of England, for Blackstone and Stephen both concur in ranging these courts under the head "Courts of Common Law." Upon principle I therefore think that the County Courts are bound by the Rules of Pleading framed in pursuance of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42. The only point upon which any doubt can be entertained is, whether this conclusion will apply to actions of "trespasses for goods," because as to these the County Courts are exempted from the jurisdiction of the superior courts by the Statute of Gloucester, 6 Edw. 1, c. 8; but even as to this, quære whether that statute is not pro tanto constructively repealed by the late Act?

As to the practice, I can only speak to that of the Salop County Court; but in that court only a month or two ago there was an instance of a plea of nil debet having been pleaded in an action of debt, in a case in which I was personally concerned; it will be remembered that this plea was abolished by R. G. H. 4 Wm. 4, and application was then made to the county clerk to sign judgment for want of a plea, regarding it as a nullity, on the authority of several cases; and this application was granted, under circumstances which I think sufficiently tested the practice, at least so far as that court was concerned.

Your obedient servant,

Shrewsbury, Dec. 24, 1844. ORIGO.

RIGHT OF ATTORNEYS TO PLEAD AT QUARTER SESSIONS.

"Important to Attorneys.—At the recent quarter sessions at Lichfield, the chairman was requested by one of the counsel present to give his decision upon a question raised at the previous sessions as to the right of attorneys to plead in the presence of barristers, when the honourable gentleman stated that he had consulted Lord Denman upon the matter, and he had decided that attorneys should be allowed to plead either for prosecution or for prisoners; barristers should be allowed pre-audience, but not exclusive audience."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The above paragraph appeared in a not very prominent part of your Journal of last week, but the alleged decision of the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench on the point mooted is one of very considerable consequence, and I am induced, therefore, to draw attention to it, inasmuch as it appears to me that the assumed privilege of barristers to exclusive audience at quarter sessions has been not unfrequently pushed to an extreme which seems quite uncalled for, and of which the following instance occurred at the Essex adjourned Quarter Sessions, held in this town on the 26th of November last.

Charlotte Chappell was indicted for obtaining, &c. by false pretences, certain articles of drapery, the property of James Bentall.

Ryland appeared for the prosecution.

On the woman being placed in the dock,

Hawkins, for the defence, applied to the Court, that a silver watch, and 8*l*. in money, found in the possession of the prisoner (who had been living with another man, apart from her husband), should be given up to her for the purposes of her defence.

Durrant (attorney) said he was requested by the prisoner's husband to state, that the watch was his property; it had been taken away from him by the prisoner, and he objected to it being delivered up to her. He (the husband) was in court to claim it.

The CHAIRMAN.—You must apply through counsel.

Durrant.—The poor man has none, and cannot have; he has no means of feeing counsel. The watch may not be worth 15s.; but being wretchedly poor, it is an object to my client to have it returned to him. I am an attorney, and I submit—

Ryland.—This is very irregular. You have no business to address the Court. It is an attempt to invade our privilege, and I trust, Sir, you (the Chairman) will put a stop to it.

The CHAIRMAN then said he could not hear Mr. Durrant's application; upon which,

Durrant said, that as the attention of the Court was now drawn to the matter—which the poor man could not have effected himself—he should state his own case. Durrant then called the claimant (a decrepid old man) into the witness-box, when the chairman made a note of his statement, and he ultimately, with the sanction of counsel for the prosecution, got back his property.

I believe the course pursued by Mr. Ryland was not entirely concurred in by all the members of the Bar present; on the contrary, an opinion prevailed with some that since I did not appear for prosecution or defence, but was merely calling the attention of the Court to the fact, that the watch claimed by the prisoner was not her property, I might be considered amicus curiæ; but all agreed that no attorney had a right to plead there. I maintained that I had a right, as an attorney, to state what I did for my client, and that my proceeding was not irregular. Now, if Lord Denman's decision be correctly reported, not only was my view correct, but I had a right to do more than I attempted, viz. if I pleased, to plead either for prosecution or defence.

Previous to the Act 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 114, intituled, "An Act for enabling persons indicted for felony to make their Defence by Counsel or Attorney," the case of Collier v. Hicks (2 Barn. & Adol. 663), was the leading case on the rights of attorneys to act as advocates, but that Act presents the whole matter in quite another aspect, and no doubt it is on that statute that Lord Denman has arrived at the conclusion he is reported to have communicated to the chairman of the Lichfield Quarter Sessions.

As my excellent and experienced friend Mr. Last, of Hadleigh, remarked in a letter which some time since appeared in your columns, a great portion of the business transacted at quarter sessions by counsel could be equally well performed by any solicitor of ordinary ability. Attorneys, however, do not wish unnecessarily to trench on the fees of counsel, and in proper cases will advise clients to avail themselves of their assistance; but it is important we should distinctly know what our rights are, and be in a position to vindicate them by authority when denied, and whenever the interests of a client—as in the instance I have cited—require us to assert them.

The right in question is one which it may be incumbent on the attorney sometimes to exercise; and on the occurrence of such an occasion I shall certainly not hesitate to do so.

Trusting this letter may be the means of attracting the attention of your very numerous and influential readers,—I am yours, truly,

GEORGE JOHN DURRANT.

Chelmsford, Dec. 24, 1844.

INDENTURES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In the supplement to Vol. IX. of Jarman and Bythewood's Conveyancing, by Sweet, containing the statute of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, with observations and forms, the editor commences the latter with "A deed made, &c." and proceeds, "Now these presents witness," &c. and adds this note:—"Indenting being rendered an immaterial circumstance, the description of deeds as indentures will probably fall into disuse." I suppose that this will be the case, but I submit to Mr. Sweet and the Profession at large whether the words "This deed," and "Now this deed witnesseth," would not be preferable, as being more precise and more simple. My name would add no weight to this suggestion—Valeat quantum valet—so I remain, Sir,

Yours respectfully,

A CONVEYANCER.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"AN ATTORNEY" (Dorchester) addresses to us the following on GOWNS, SHAM LAWYERS, and the CERTIFICATE TAX.

I have carefully read the many opinions which have from time to time appeared in your valuable paper pro and con. as to the revival of our ancient and respectable practice of wearing gowns, and in my humble judgment those in favour of the revival far outweigh those against it. Your correspondent "D," in the LAW TIMES of the week before last, appears to attribute great inconvenience to attorneys wearing gowns while transacting other business in the towns where the assizes and sessions are held, besides at the courts. I do not, however, recollect it has ever been suggested that we should wear gowns when not actually engaged in court, so that any attorney having other business, and thinking his gown an incumbrance, could easily divest himself thereof at his quarters.

I would take this opportunity of stating a plan which I think would in some measure assist in preventing the practice of that disreputable race "Sham Attorneys" at the assizes and sessions, and at the same time much facilitate our egress and regress to and from the courts, viz.—

That the under-sheriff of each county be empowered, upon application either at or before the assizes or sessions, to issue cards to some such effect as the following:—

DORSET EPIPHANY SESSIONS, 1845.
Admit A B (or C D, clerk to A B),
Gentleman, Attorney-at-Law.
(Signed) E F, Undersheriff.

Such cards to be given to attorneys only (at a small fee, sufficient to pay for printing in blank, &c.), most of whom would, as a matter of course, be personally known to the under-sheriff. By the officers of the court being instructed to clear the way at all times for gentlemen producing these cards, and to let none other into the attorneys' seats, all the inconvenience in that respect would be removed.

In case an authorized clerk should at any time attend in lieu of the principal, a letter from the latter to the under-sheriff would of course procure a card for such clerk's admission. Sham attorneys would thereby have a difficulty in obtaining access to counsel; and if the latter would but refuse to take briefs from any person not known to them to be an attorney, or the authorized clerk of an attorney, without the production of such card, the nefarious practices of the tribe would in time be so far put an end to.

The Profession, I am sure, cannot but feel much obliged to you for your well-timed remarks in your last and previous week's paper as to the odious certificate tax; and I trust it will be the means of inducing them to get up meetings, to be held in the various county towns, at the ensuing Epiphany Sessions if possible, or at all events at the next Spring Assizes, to petition for a repeal of the same.

SALE OF ESTATES IN PERTHSHIRE.—The estates belonging to the late Lord Lynedoch have been disposed of by his trustees. They consisted of Balgowan, the original family property, and Lynedoch, a purchase of the late lord, of which the portion along the banks of the Almond was entailed as well as Balgowan, and that betwixt the manor estate and the Tay was unentailed. The latter division, we understand, was sold by the trustees to Robert Graham, esq. of Redgorten, for the sum of 75,000*l.*; the remainder of the Lynedoch estate has been purchased by James Simpson, esq. formerly of Bellwood, and for many years a merchant in Manchester, at the price of 135,000*l.* Balgowan has become the property of William Thomson, esq. lately from China, son of John Thomson, esq. of the Royal Bank, at the price of 43,000*l.* These two last-mentioned sales of the entailed property have taken place in consequence of some deficiency or informality in the deed.—Perthshire Courier.

TO PREVENT ALL FUTURE QUESTIONS AS TO THE VALIDITY OF POLICIES, this Company are prohibited by their deed of constitution from disputing any claim, unless they take upon themselves to prove that the policy upon which the claim arises was obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation.

The Company are further bound to give effect to every policy, although the debt for which it may have been originally procured, or at any time held, may have been paid off before the claim arises.

And that the value of policies may not be lessened or destroyed by parties going beyond the limits usually prescribed, the Company grant, upon payment of a small extra premium, general or whole world leave, which subsists during the currency of the policy.

By these means the policies of the London, Edinburgh, and Dublin Life Company have come to be considered as forming securities more complete and more easily negotiable than any other similar documents.

Assurances are granted either with or without participation in profits, and the utmost facility is given in regard to the payment of the premiums, by the assured having the option of payment by a progressive ascending scale, or according to the half premium system, continued for seven years.

COMMISSION.—The Solicitor who transacts a Policy with this Company, is considered as the Agent during its whole currency, and receives commission upon all future premiums, by whomsoever they may be paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ATTORNEYS' CERTIFICATE DUTY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—To shew you that I for one have been long alive to the hardship under which our Profession alone has had to labour, I take the liberty of forwarding you a copy of an address I printed and circulated amongst the members of the West Riding Law Society in 1842.

I regret to say it produced no effect. I never as much as even heard the subject mentioned by them. There was no petition, I believe, nor any effort made by them in a body.

I confess such apathy has not raised my opinion of such societies, which hitherto have generally neglected our interests, and for this cause I have refrained from becoming a member of that or any other society. I do not forward this letter with a view of publication, but merely to shew you have subscribers who have long agreed in the opinions published by you last week.

I have myself for above twenty years paid the tax; I have witnessed new impositions upon us, and observed other more clamorous parties relieved, whilst we have continued passive sufferers.

Trusting your energy and influence will rouse the body of the Profession,

I am yours, &c.

Halifax, Dec. 19, 1844. H. F. HOLROYD.

[The following is a copy of this address. It is equally applicable at this moment; therefore we transcribe it at length.—ED. LAW T.]

TO THE PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF THE WEST-RIDING LAW SOCIETY.

GENTLEMEN,—Constituting as you do a highly influential and important part of the legal Profession of this Riding, and the only organized body of Attorneys and Solicitors to whom the other members of the Profession resident in this district can look for guidance and interference in matters from time to time affecting their interests, I feel that the moment has now arrived when your valuable counsel and assistance may fairly be required, and I trust you will receive this address from a brother practitioner with the deserts the subject alone merits.

Your Society has, I believe, been in existence more than 20 years, and during that time I can bear witness to services performed by you in upholding the respectability of the practice of the Profession, in several instances where otherwise it would have suffered; I regret, however, to remark that I have also observed too much apathy and indifference in your body during the last ten years, whilst several Bills have passed the Legislature and become laws, whereby the interests of the interests of the Profession have been assailed, and in several instances materially injured. Amongst others, permit me to mention Lord Brougham's Act (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56), whereby the general body of the Profession were deprived of the privilege of acting as Commissioners of Bankrupt, to the exclusive advantage of barristers and a very few solicitors, selected by reason of their influence or interest in high quarters. Also the loss which we have felt by the passing of the Act 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, authorizing the trial of causes for debts under 20*l.* before the sheriff. Again, the injury suffered by the Profession generally in consequence of the passing of the Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), thereby giving the appointment of Commissioners for taking the examinations of married women to a select few of the solicitors. Again, the loss which we have sustained in consequence of the passing of the several Acts for establishing Courts of Request in this Riding, thereby permitting the recovery of debts amounting to 15*l.* without even the assistance of an attorney. And again, the detraction from our profits by the abolition of all leases for a year in the transfer and conveyance of freehold lands, made law by the statute 4 Vict. c. 21.

I admit these "reforms" may not have materially affected the elite of the Profession, and those who have been provided for by clerkships and commissionerships, but they have unquestionably greatly injured a most active and meritorious part of it.

During the progress of these measures the just and equitable consideration of compensation to us for all these losses was in no way pressed upon the Legislature, and which you are aware could only be done with effect by a body of gentlemen like yourselves, with the concurrence of the other members of the profession. Individuals I know have complained and remonstrated, but with no effect, and I think it surely is now the interest of all to join in obtaining relief in some way.

Permit me to remind you that amidst all these changes we have hitherto cheerfully paid our annual Certificate Duty of 8*l.* a tax imposed on no other profession.

We are now about to undergo a new imposition of great weight; we are to have our incomes—our daily exertions—taxed at the rate of 3*l.* per cent. per annum, in addition to the payment of our present Annual Duty, and the public are protected from any increase in our charges by the laws which provide for the taxation of our bills. We shall also be expected to support ourselves in practice with equal liberality and respectability; and feeling convinced that the profession generally cannot do so without some relief, I most urgently call on you to consider our position.

The Premier, by the imposition of the Income-tax, will have a surplus income, and to this we shall largely contribute; he has already proposed to remit several oppressive taxes, and I venture to think that the attorneys and solicitors are now fairly entitled to call for a remission of their annual certificate duty—at the least—a small compensation only for the losses they have already suffered by the measures already passed for the benefit of the public.

The members of the present Parliament are many of them greatly indebted to the exertions of the Profession for their seats; and I feel convinced that the members for the Riding, under the guidance of a committee of the most influential members of the Profession in the Riding would give every attention to our claims.

May I therefore earnestly call on you, Gentlemen, at this important crisis, without delay to interfere in our behalf, by promoting a general meeting of the attorneys and solicitors of the Riding at an early date, to take active measures for immediately applying for a remission of the duty on our certificates, and such other relief as may be thought best under existing circumstances.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen,
Your most obedient servant,
A West-Riding Solicitor.

VETERANS OF THE LAW.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—On the 16th of November there appeared in the 124th page of your valuable journal a letter of Mr. Thomas Edye, of Clement's-inn, whereby he claimed on behalf of his father, Mr. Edmund Edye, of Montgomery, the honour of being the father of the Profession, he being in the 88th year of his age, and having been admitted in Michaelmas Term, 1779. I knew that Mr. Peter Batson, of Sherborne, if living, was a great deal older, and I therefore wrote to Mr. George Warry, who had been for many years a partner with Mr. Batson, for particulars, and he kindly sent me an answer, a copy of which I transmit; but I must premise that I have since received a message from Mr. Warry, signifying that he was prevented from sending me the promised information for the present by Mr. Batson being seized with a fit of the gout, since which I have received no further communication on the subject, so I will not delay putting in the claim of Mr. Batson any longer, but remain, Sir,

Yours faithfully,
J. P.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Batson is still alive and hearty; he was 97 last birthday. He says he will look out for his articles and admission, and let me see them in a day or two. He was admitted an attorney, he believes, upwards of seventy years ago. He ceased to take out his certificate some six or seven years since. I will afford you further information and particulars in a few days.

I am yours, &c.
Sherborne, Nov. 21, 1844. Geo. Warry.

POOR LAW COMMISSION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—Allow me to call your attention to the Extracts of Cases, from the Poor Law Circular, inserted in the Law Times; this practice on the part of the Poor Law Commissioners being, in my humble opinion, a direct infringement of the rights of the Profession.

I am not aware on whom the commissioners impose the duty of answering these cases; nor can I suppose the party to be either a barrister or an attorney; for, independently of many of the answers being lame and faulty, no professional man of honourable intentions would thus dole out the law to village lawyers (many of whom don't forget to charge for their nostrums) and private individuals.

If you will take the trouble of referring to last week's paper, you will find five out of the seven cases are from reverend sirs, and individuals with whom the commissioners ought not officially to hold any communication, and that the commissioners have no more to do with those cases than the Pope of Rome.

Is not such a practice equally worthy of your reprehension as the many you have already exposed?

If not, it is clearly useless to publish Reports; for where is the practitioner so foolish as to purchase them when he has not the chance of a client? Neither can it be expected he should be called upon, whilst the law can thus be had from Somerset-house merely by writing for it.—I am, Sir, your very obedient servant, Wm. Weston.

Leicester, Dec. 31, 1844.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—It is, I believe, generally admitted, and indeed cannot be denied, that our practice of omitting to take a written retainer on instructions to bring or defend actions or suits is both against authority and duty, alike injurious to ourselves and our clients. I need but refer to the observations of Lord Tenterden, in Owen v. Ord. I have often been impressed with the risks on the one hand an honourable member of the profession runs, and on the other have noted the artful pluckings to which the confiding victims of the unprincipled are subject, from this unwise and careless custom—evils so easily prevented by taking an express written authority on every occasion, as a rigid rule and matter of course, such indeed as the law requires and implies.

My attention has been lately directed to the subject by a case or two reported in your columns, which exhibit not only the evil consequences of such neglect, but have elicited the judge's reprehension: for instance, Trevanion v. Trevanion, p. 211, of your current vol. Allow me then to direct your attention to a pernicious practice, so perversely persisted in, and to submit the subject, through your pages, for the consideration of the Law Institution, or the Legal Association; suggesting the promulgation of a regulation confirming a rule so salutary, and yet so universally broken;—a copy transmitted to each member of the profession, with the sanction and recommendation of either or both of those influential bodies, would, if it did not command at once a general assent, at least tend to restore the good old rule, founded on justice and principle, and supported by prudence and expediency.

Permit me at the same, in reference to our abominable poll-tax, which you have lately so zealously taken in hand, to hazard a further suggestion, which is, that a form of petition for its immediate repeal might be most advantageously sent (say by the Legal Association) to some leading practitioner in every town in England, with a request that he would solicit the signatures of the other members, his fellow townsmen. I am persuaded few would refuse either to procure or attach the required names; and our voice, as that of one man, might be thus with facility and distinctness conveyed to the dull tympanum of a Government that seems to presume on the patience of attorneys as inexhaustible, and to view us, I fear, much in the light of a certain fowl prolific of golden eggs.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
Alfred H. Browne.

By Mr. ELGOOD, at the Mart.

Two residences, one of which is distinguished as Raby House, situated in the New Finchly-road, with front and back gardens walled round, and two carriage entrances with drive, occupying a plot of ground 85 feet by 240 feet, let on a running lease at a rent of 170*l.* per annum; held for 99 years from Michaelmas, 1838, at a ground rent of 30*l.* 1s. 6d. per annum; also a detached residence, known as Wellesley House, let at 205*l.* per annum, held as above, sold subject to an existing mortgage for 3000*l.* at 5 per cent. to continue for seven years from May 31, 1842—1310 gs.

The villa residence, No. 9, on the west side of the Finchley-road, St. John's Wood, held for a term of 91½ years from Lady-day, 1843, at a ground-rent of 23*l.* per annum—1420 gs.

The house and premises, No. 11, Finchley-road, held for the same term as the preceding lot at 23*l.* 5s. per annum—1440 gs.

A Gothic villa residence, No. 20, on the east side of the Finchley-road, St. John's Wood, held for a term of 99 years from Michaelmas, 1838, at a ground rent of 35*l.* per annum—1200 gs.

The late Duke d'Angoulême.—The will of his Royal Highness Louis Antoine, Comte de Marnes, heretofore Dauphin of France, has just been proved in Doctor's Commons by Jean François, one of the executors, a power of proving hereafter being reserved for the Duke de Blacas and G. Isidore de Montbel, the other executors. The personal property is sworn under 250,000*l.* The deceased begs of his wife forgiveness for any involuntary wrongs he may have done her, and desires to be buried wherever he may die in the simplest manner, and leaves 25,000 francs for masses to be said for the repose of his soul. He also leaves 25,000 francs to the poor. The various other legacies amount to about 22,000 francs; and he then bequeaths the whole of his property (with the exception of these legacies) to his wife, and at her death directs that two-thirds shall go to his nephew, and the remainder to his niece. He directs that in the event of a new restoration his wife should "look to those who had been always kind to him." The will, which is dated in 1840, is short, and certainly a very singular document.—Britannia.

The New Police Courts.—This morning the new police-courts, at Stones-end, Blackman-street, Borough, and Kennington-lane, Lambeth, will be opened for public business. The old court, Union-hall, the business of which is transferred to the former, with the magistrates, Messrs. Traill and Cottingham, and all the officers attached thereto, was closed on Saturday evening, when all the official books and documents were removed to the Southwark Police-court. Lambeth street Police-court was also closed on the same evening, and the magistrates of that court will, for the future, transact the usual business at Lambeth Police-court, Kennington-lane.

T. TAYLOR'S Celebrated GINGER WINE. Recommended by the Faculty for Spasms, Flatulency, &c. &c. as well as being a most delicious drink when diluted with spring water. Town and country dealers, finding the decided preference given to T. TAYLOR'S GINGER WINE, are too commonly induced (by a slight advantage in price) to substitute an article of inferior quality. Families may protect themselves from such imposition by observing that the genuine cannot be sold under 18s. per dozen, and that the cork of every bottle is branded with his name and address, and covered with a patent metallic capsule, embossed with an emblem of the British Lion, and the inscription,—T. TAYLOR, 38, Brooke-street, Holborn-bars.

THIS Office is provided with Tables specially calculated, by which it can ASSURE DISEASED LIVES on EQUITABLE TERMS.

MEMBERS OF CONSUMPTIVE FAMILIES ASSURED at Equitable Rates.

INCREASED ANNUITIES GRANTED on UNSOUND LIVES, the amount varying with the particular disease.

HEALTHY LIVES are Assured at LOWER RATES than at most other Offices.

Owing to the prevalence of disease, more than two-thirds of the population are not assurable in other offices (see Prospectus, &c.), and it is ascertained that in several of the leading assurance societies in London, 23 per cent., or more than one in five of the applicants, although ostensibly good lives, are rejected on medical examination.

Solicitors being much connected with life assurance, have experienced this difficulty to a considerable extent from the delay, and often permanent obstacles, occurring in loan and other money transactions on behalf of their clients; the legal profession has consequently freely patronized this society, as it affords facilities not hitherto available in assurance transactions.

The success that has attended the office during the FIRST THREE YEARS is highly satisfactory, and there is every reason to believe that, as its peculiar features and principles become more known and better understood, it will command an unusual amount of public patronage.

About THREE-FOURTHS of the POLICIES already issued by the society are on DISEASED LIVES, and a majority of these had been previously rejected by other offices, shewing the necessity which existed for an assurance society on the plan in question.

Medical referees are appointed in almost every town of any extent, no difficulty will therefore be experienced in procuring the examination of parties residing in the country, on whom proposals for assurance are made.

Prospectuses, and every other information, will be forwarded on application.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ATTORNEYS AT QUARTER SESSIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—You having on several occasions rendered effectual service in supporting the rights and respectability of the Profession, I am induced to mention a case which occurred yesterday at the general Quarter Session of the Peace for the city of Norwich, held before Mr. Recorder Jeremy. An attorney appeared to defend on behalf of a prisoner; the counsel for the prosecution objected to his being heard, other counsel, not engaged, being present in court. The attorney on behalf of the prisoner referred to the judgment alleged to have been lately given by Lord Chief Justice Denman, referred to in your reports, and the Act of 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c, 114, entitled "An Act for enabling Persons indicted of Felony to make their defence by Counsel or Attorney." The learned recorder decided that he could not recognize your publication as any authority, and that the Act of Parliament merely gave permission to an attorney to defend in the absence of counsel. The Profession will be obliged by your informing them, under the circumstances, the course that ought to be adopted, as it is a question of importance to the Profession.

I am, Sir, yours very obediently,

Norwich, January 1, 1845. A SUBSCRIBER.

[Our article of last week is all the light we can throw upon this question. It is strange that if such a remark was made by the chairman of the Lichfield Sessions, no attorney can authenticate it to us.—ED. LAW T.]

INDENTURES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Since I wrote to you last week, I have seen the supplement to Mr. Weston's Precedents in Conveyancing, which is just published, and has the date of 1845 upon it. I see that he uses the words that I recommended, viz. "This deed," and "Now this deed witnesseth." As uniformity is desirable, I hope that these words will be universally adopted.

I am yours, &c.

A CONVEYANCER.

AFFIDAVITS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Great differences exist in the amount charged by solicitors for preparing affidavits for the proof of debts in bankruptcy, and forwarding them to the solicitor to the fiat; and as uniformity of charges in all cases is very desirable, perhaps some of your subscribers will favour the Profession with their views as to what should be the charges in the business referred to.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

A SUBSCRIBER FROM THE COMMENCEMENT.

APPEALS AGAINST ORDERS IN BASTARDY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The first appeal against the New Orders in Bastardy at the Quarter Sessions for the East Riding of Yorkshire, was heard last week at the Epiphany Sessions, and as the result is of much importance, I think it may be useful to some of your numerous readers to know the particulars.

The 2nd section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, enables a justice of the peace, on the application of the mother of a bastard child, to issue his summons against the person alleged to be the father. By the 3rd section the justices in petty sessions are to hear the evidence of such woman, and such other evidence as she shall produce, and if the evidence of the mother be corroborated in some material particulars by other testimony, to the satisfaction of the said justices, they may adjudge the man to be the putative father of the child, and proceed to make an order upon him for its maintenance, &c. And by the 4th section, if within twenty-four hours after adjudication and making of any order on the putative father, he shall give notice of appeal to the mother, and enter into recognizances as therein mentioned for payment of costs, it shall be lawful for such putative father to appeal to the general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden after the period of fourteen days next after the making of such order for the county, &c. where the petty sessions may have been held, and the justices shall thereupon hear and determine such appeal, and shall order such costs to be paid by either party as to them may seem fit.

On the appeal being called, the counsel for the respondent (the mother) opened his case and put her into the witness-box; it was then objected by the appellant's counsel, that she could not give evidence, inasmuch as the Act directed the notice of appeal to be given to the mother, and she was in fact the respondent, and a party interested in the appeal. That the 2nd section directed the justices in petty sessions to hear the evidence of the mother, but the 4th section was altogether silent as to her evidence, and did not expressly empower the justices to hear the evidence; and that the latter part of the 4th section empowered the justices to order costs to be paid by either party, thereby clearly recognizing the mother and the putative father as the parties in the appeal.

After a lengthened argument, the Court decided that the evidence of the mother could not be received, and quashed the order.

I understand that Mr. Archbold, who was counsel in the appeal, is of opinion that the decision is right, and that the very point is noticed in a work of his on the Poor Laws, now in the press.

You will perceive that the decision (if correct) renders that portion of the Act relative to orders in bastardy a perfect nullity, and it is only one of the many blunders it contains.

I am Sir, yours, &c.

Beverley, Jan. 2, 1845. WM. F. CLARK.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

Y. Z. complains of a practice which it is not surprising newspapers should adopt, when it is sanctioned by the avowed editors of a legal publication.

As the columns of your invaluable paper have lately been successfully made use of as the medium of exposing infringements on the privileges of the legal profession, of which I happen to be a member, I think a few lines from you noticing the custom frequently exercised by the editors of different newspapers of answering legal questions and points raised by their correspondents, and thereby (if I may be allowed to use so strong an expression) defrauding some solicitor of his fee for advice on the point in question, might be of some service to the profession. I need only call your attention, in corroboration of what I have stated, to the Britannia weekly paper of the 28th Dec., in which, under the head of "Correspondents," three several answers on strictly legal points are given to as many correspondents. I trust you may deem this subject worth your notice.

"D. S." (Norwich) thus alludes to a question that arises on the Transfer of Property Act:—

I believe some misapprehension is prevalent amongst even well-informed members of the Profession, who may not have read attentively the Act recently passed to simplify the transfer of Property, with reference to the period of time at which the Act will be practically and generally operative.

It is to commence and take effect from the 31st day of December, 1844; but one of its most important and I think its most practically useful clause, declaring the receipts of trustees to be in all cases (where not expressly negatived) effectual discharges for trust moneys, it is submitted will not come into universal nor even general operation for many years to come; inasmuch as the 13th section declares that (except so far as regards contingent remainders) the Act shall not extend to any estate, right, or interest created before the 1st day of January, 1845; so that the powers of trustees to give effectual discharges in all cases where the deed or will creating the trust was executed anterior to the 1st of January inst. will remain unaffected by the Act. Whether this was the intention of those who prepared it, or who intrusted others to prepare it for them, may be, perhaps, a question.

"A SUBSCRIBER" suggests the following amendment of the Law of Debtor and Creditor:—

Since the passing of my Lord Brougham's Act, debtors for sums under 20*l*. and without property, snap their fingers at their creditors, and both before and since that Act those with property very frequently make an assignment, and creditors must either abandon their execution, or incur the risk of contesting the validity of the assignment. I would therefore suggest that the law should be altered so as to give an execution-creditor the same rights to the goods in the "order and disposition" of his debtor, as assignees have under a bankruptcy. I think this alteration would operate as a salutary check upon fraudulent assignments.

"E. L." submits the following practical query to our experienced readers:—

I shall feel obliged by your allowing me to ask some of the Profession the following question through the medium of your valuable journal.

A was articled to B for a period of five years, and continued to serve him under those articles for four years and a half, when they were given up to him at his request. After a lapse of some years, A was assigned by B to C for the residue of the five years, and entered into a covenant to serve C.

Is A (having served the whole term) entitled to apply for his admission, or ought the latter deed (instead of being an assignment) to have been in the form of fresh articles without the joining of A?

"A CORRESPONDENT," a Magistrate's Clerk, who accompanies the letter with his name and address, has sent us a very alarming statement of errors in Mr. LUMLEY'S Bastardy Forms, published by Shaw and Sons. As the matter is one of serious moment to the Profession, we insert the portion of the letter which sets forth the errors.

At the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace just held for the West Riding of Yorkshire, every bastardy order appealed against has been upset, and all in Mr. Lumley's form!!

The following objections (inter alia) were taken, viz.:—

That the order omits to set out—

1. That the petty sessions is held within a petty sessional division.

2. That at the time of making the application, the mother is residing within a petty sessional division.

3. That the mother made the application at a place within a petty sessional division.

4. That the magistrates making the order are stated to be usually acting, instead of then usually acting within a petty sessional division.

5. That the putative father hath been served with a summons within forty days, instead of alleging the summons to have been served six days at the least before the day of hearing.

6. That the mode of stating the evidence laid before the justices as the ground-work for the order is informal, uncertain, and insufficient.

About 600 bastardy orders have been granted in this Riding, none of which are now available.

No magistrate can safely issue a distress-warrant or a warrant of commitment against a putative father for disobeying a bastardy order. For if an action of trespass or a false imprisonment were brought against the magistrate, his only justification would be the order, which is defective on the face of it.

Parliament alone can find an adequate remedy, by directing that every order hitherto made shall be valid, notwithstanding any defects in point of form, unless such order shall have been appealed against and quashed upon the merits.

The following Bonuses have been assigned to all Policies, of at least three years' standing, effected for the whole duration of life:—

FIRST DIVISION, in 1832.

From 18s. to 2*l*. 12s. per cent. per annum on the sums assured, varying with the age, being equivalent, on the average, to 26½ per cent. on the premiums paid.

SECOND DIVISION, in 1839.

From upwards of 1*l*. to upwards of 3*l*. per cent. per annum on the sums assured, or, on the average, 33 per cent. on the premiums paid for the preceding seven years.

2. Premiums may be paid in a limited number of annual sums, instead of by annual payments for the whole of life, the Policy continuing to participate in profits after the payment of such premiums has ceased.

3. The Assurance or Premium Fund is not subject to any charge for Interest to Proprietors.

4. Permission to pass to Continental Ports between Brest and the Elbe inclusive.

5. Parties (including Officers of the Army, Navy, East India Company, and Merchant Service) may be assured to reside in or proceed to all parts of the World, at Premiums calculated on real data.

6. Claims to be paid within three months.

7. The Assured may dispose of their Policies to the Company.

8. No charge but for Policy Stamps.

The Prospectus, Tables of Rates, &c. to be had at the Office in London, or of the Company's Agents.

Premiums are received yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly, or upon an increasing or decreasing scale.

Two-thirds of the profits are added septennially to the policies of those insured for life; one-third is added to the guarantee fund for securing payment of the policies of all insurers.

Those who are insured to the amount of 500*l*. and upwards for the whole term of life are admitted to vote at the half-yearly general meetings of the proprietors.

CHEAP SELF-SNUFFING CANDLES.

PRICE'S PATENT CANDLES, which burn without snuffing, like the finest wax, are now retailed throughout the country, at or under One Shilling per lb. But care must be taken to prevent any imitations being passed off as the Patent Candles; this attempt being made, and with too frequent success, by some Dealers, on account of the greater profit upon the imitations. The Trade may obtain them wholesale from EDWARD PRICE and Co. Belmont, Vauxhall; and PALMER and Co. Sutton-street, Clerkenwell.

1. Credit until death, with privilege of payment at any time previously, for one half of the premiums for the first five years, upon assurances for the whole of Life,—a plan peculiarly advantageous for securing Loans.
2. In Loan transactions the lender secured against the risk of the borrower going out of Europe.
3. Sums assured to become payable AT GIVEN AGES OR DEATH, if previous.
4. Policies indefeasible; fraud alone, not error, vitiating them; and in case the renewal premium remain unpaid, the Assurance may be revived at any time within SIX MONTHS, upon satisfactory proof of health, and payment of a trifling fine.
5. Officers in the Army and Navy, and persons residing abroad, or proceeding to any part of the world, assured at low rates.

THIS Office is provided with Tables specially calculated, by which it can ASSURE DISEASED LIVES on EQUITABLE TERMS.

MEMBERS OF CONSUMPTIVE FAMILIES ASSURED at Equitable Rates.

INCREASED ANNUITIES GRANTED on UNSOUND LIVES, the amount varying with the particular disease.

HEALTHY LIVES are Assured at LOWER RATES than at most other Offices.

Owing to the prevalence of disease, more than two-thirds of the population are not assurable in other offices (see Prospectus, &c.), and it is ascertained that in several of the leading assurance societies in London, 23 per cent., or more than one in five of the applicants, although ostensibly good lives, are rejected on medical examination.

Solicitors being much connected with life assurance, have experienced this difficulty to a considerable extent from the delay, and often permanent obstacles, occurring in loan and other money transactions on behalf of their clients; the legal profession has consequently freely patronized this society, as it affords facilities not hitherto available in assurance transactions.

The success that has attended the office during the FIRST THREE YEARS is highly satisfactory, and there is every reason to believe that, as its peculiar features and principles become more known and better understood, it will command an unusual amount of public patronage.

About THREE-FOURTHS of the POLICIES already issued by the society are on DISEASED LIVES, and a majority of these had been previously rejected by other offices, shewing the necessity which existed for an assurance society on the plan in question.

Medical referees are appointed in almost every town of any extent, no difficulty will therefore be experienced in procuring the examination of parties residing in the country, on whom proposals for assurance are made.

Prospectuses, and every other information, will be forwarded on application.

TO PREVENT ALL FUTURE QUESTIONS AS TO THE VALIDITY OF POLICIES, this Company are prohibited by their deed of constitution from disputing any claim, unless they take upon themselves to prove that the policy upon which the claim arises was obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation.

The Company are further bound to give effect to every policy, although the debt for which it may have been originally procured, or at any time held, may have been paid off before the claim arises.

And that the value of policies may not be lessened or destroyed by parties going beyond the limits usually prescribed, the Company grant, upon payment of a small extra premium, general or whole world leave, which subsists during the currency of the policy.

By these means the policies of the London, Edinburgh, and Dublin Life Company have come to be considered as forming securities more complete and more easily negotiable than any other similar documents.

Assurances are granted either with or without participation in profits, and the utmost facility is given in regard to the payment of the premiums, by the assured having the option of payment by a progressive ascending scale, or according to the half premium system, continued for seven years.

COMMISSION.—The Solicitor who transacts a Policy with this Company, is considered as the Agent during its whole currency, and receives commission upon all future premiums, by whomsoever they may be paid.

SALE OF A CHURCH LIVING.—On Tuesday the perpetual advowson, with the next presentation to the living, of Trimley St. Martin, in the county of Suffolk, was disposed of by public competition, at the Auction Mart. The large and small tithes had been commuted at the sum of 500*l.* per annum. The outgoings amounted to about 45*l.* a year, but which were compensated by the glebe, consisting of about twenty-one acres. The population, wholly agricultural, consisted of about 500 persons, and the parish comprised 1,200 acres; while the incumbent was in his 86th year. The auctioneer stated the value of it to be 7,000*l.* The first sum offered was 4,000*l.*, and it was knocked down, after a spirited competition, for 5,950*l.*—Globe.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.—Mr. Wallace, the member for Greenock, has the following notice of motion on the order book of the House of Commons for the session appointed to commence on the 4th proximo. To move at the commencement of the next session of Parliament as follows:—"That with a view to avoid in future the anomalies and inconveniences which have sprung out of the sale of papers under the order of this House, and restore to it the independent and valuable privileges which formerly were possessed, as well as the respectability which the House of Lords has not forfeited by a sale of the papers printed under its orders, no sale of papers printed under the order of this House shall take place hereafter." The hon. member procured a return in the course of last session on the same subject, from which it appears, that besides the information afforded to the public by the publication of the papers printed by order of the House, the net profit to the public by the sale of printed Parliamentary papers from 1836 to 1843 amounted to 30,189*l.* 7s. 2d.

Public Sales.

THE WILL OF THE LATE VENERABLE ARCHDEACON BATHURST, who died at Cheltenham, on the 11th September last, has lately been proved in the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury, by the widow, Mrs. Frances Bathurst, the sole executrix. He was Archdeacon of Norwich, and resided at Northcreak, in the county of Norfolk. The will is in his own handwriting, and made in May, 1844. It commences by imploring God's blessing on his own invaluable life, and of his exemplary children. He then gives his worldly goods—for instance, his household furniture, carriages, horses, arrears of tithes, and so forth, to his wife, leaving it with her to do as she thinks best for the family; but desires that his sons and daughters will select and accept of books as tokens of his sincere affection. To his son Henry, a lieutenant-colonel in the Guards, he expressly gives 'Todd's Milton,' which was presented to the Archdeacon by the present Earl Bathurst when a boy; to his son William he gives his 'Musæ Etonenses;' to his daughter, Mrs. Browne, 'Addison's Works,' bd. in morocco; and requests that his three daughters will each select a set of books. His sons-in-law, Lieutenant-Col. Phipps and J. T. G. Browne, esq. are likewise requested to make choice of such books as they may prefer, to be held as tokens of the respect he entertained for them. He most particularly requests that the Marquis of Normanby will receive, for the use of the library of Mulgrave Castle, the Great Testament, in two volumes, carefully interlined by the father of the Archdeacon: this he leaves to his lordship in remembrance of the kindness shewn by his lordship and Lady Normanby to his daughter, Mrs. Colonel Phipps, and goes on to state that he regrets to the last that his lordship did not separate from his late associates in power, rather than allow the interests of his family to be sacrificed by faithless and cruel colleagues, and finishes this paragraph in the following words:—"Lord Normanby is a lion of Judah, and will never suit the worshippers of Baal." By a power of appointment, which he enjoyed under the will of Lord Castlecute, he had made over 2,000l. to his (as he described) excellent son Henry, upon conditions favourable to his dear mother during her life. The personal estate sworn under 12,000l.

WILLS OF THE HON ROBERT OTWAY CAVE, M.P. SIR FRANCIS BURDETT, BART. AND DAME SOPHIA BURDETT.—Probate of the will of the Hon. R. Otway Cave, late member for Tipperary, has just been granted by the Perogative Court of Canterbury to Mrs. Sophia Cave, the relict and sole executrix, to whom the whole of the property is bequeathed, as well as that under settlement. The personal estate in England, sworn under 18,000l. Mrs. Otway Cave is the eldest daughter of the late Sir Francis Burdett, and received a marriage portion of 30,000l. from Sir Francis on the day of her marriage. The hon. member was in his 49th year, and died without issue. He was the only son of the late Admiral Otway and of the Baroness Braye, and heir to the Peerage, the patent of which had been lately revived after centuries of abeyance. The claimants for the Barony were the Duke of Bedford, the present Baroness, and Sir Percival Hart Dyke. The title descends to the eldest daughter of the present Baroness.—The will with two codicils of the late Sir Francis Burdett, Bart. was proved shortly after his decease, by the executors, E. Majoribanks, esq. Sir Edmund Antrobus, bart. W. M. Coulthurst, esq. and E. Majoribanks, esq. jun. all of the firm of Messars. Coutts and Co. bankers. The personal property was sworn under 160,000l. By the will, which is dated 6th February, 1840, a very liberal provision is made for the daughters of the deceased Baronet, particularly the eldest, now the widow of the late Hon. Mr. Otway Cave; and by the first codicil, made three months after his will, he leaves to her an additional sum of 20,000l. (in which she had an interest prior to her marriage, but had assigned all her claim therein to her father, Sir Francis, on receiving her marriage portion). The Baronet by his last codicil, executed three months before his death, has bequeathed to each of his servants a comfortable annuity. The original will and first codicil is on parchment, and occupies several large skins closely written. The Baronet only survived his wife twelve days; both died at their residence, James's place;—her ladyship on the 12th January, 1844, and Sir Francis on the 24th.—In the case of the will of Dame Sophia Burdett (wife of Sir Francis), a special grant of letters of administration with the will annexed was taken out (shortly after the probate of her husband's will) by John Parkinson, esq. her executor, with the consent of the executors under the will of Sir Francis. Her will is dated 31st July, 1843, is very short, and written on one sheet of paper; by it she disposes of the large box of autographs (the gift of her father) to Sir Francis. The box containing miniatures, with its contents, together with her portfolio of rare prints, she gives to her daughter, Mrs. Otway Cave; a portion of family plate she bequeaths to her daughter, Mrs. Trevanion; all her trinkets and jewellery she directs to be divided amongst her four daughters; all locked up boxes she gives to her daughter Angela Burdett Coutts; all her money savings she gives to the Right Hon. Baroness North and Lady Sandon, her nieces, and Mrs. Otway Cave and Mrs. Trevanion, her daughters. All her other pictures and prints she gives to her daughters, Mrs Trevanion, Joanna, and Clara. The effects were sworn under 10,000l.—Ibid.

AWARD OF THE TURNPIKE TRUST COMMISSIONERS.—The commissioners appointed under the act for consolidating turnpike trusts in South Wales have made their award to the different trusts in Carmarthenshire. In the Main Trust the sum of 90l. has been awarded for every 100l. of debt. The creditors of the Kidwelly and Loughor Bridge Trust are to have 100l. per cent. with all arrears of interest up to the 31st Dec. 1844. On the Newcastle Trust, 80l. per cent. has been awarded, without any arrears of interest. On the Three Commotts Trust only 30l. per cent. has been awarded; while on the Llandilo Rhynnws Trust the sum of 1,450l. has been given, which is to sweep off all the debts, amounting to upwards of 4,500l. We are given to understand that very great dissatisfaction exists amongst the majority of the creditors of the different trusts with respect to the commissioners' awards.—Welchman.

SALES OF LANDED PROPERTY.—John Gladstone, esq. of Fasque, has become the proprietor of the estate of Phesdo and Pitnamoon, at the price of 32,000*l.* This beautiful property lies nearly adjacent to Fasque, and will constitute Mr. Gladstone one of the principal heritors of the parish of Fordoun. The valuable estate of Rossie, in the parish of Craig, has also been disposed of by Mr. Ross. The purchasers, we understand, are the trustees of Mr. Macdonald, of St. Martin's, near Perth, and the price 115,000*l.*—Edinburgh Witness.

THE PRICES OF RAILWAY SHARES.—From the share table recently issued by Mr. Watson, of Glasgow, some curious particulars of fluctuations in the price of shares may be gathered. Thus, on the 8th of January, 1838, the shares of the Great Western Railway were at 12 premium; at the corresponding period of 1839 they were at 13 premium; in 1840 they had sunk to 1 premium; in 1841 they again rose to 31 premium; in 1842 they were 22½; 1843 26¼; 1844, 32; and this year, on the same day, they had advanced to 87 premium. The are now much higher. The Liverpool and Manchester have shewn the following fluctuations as to premium:—1838, 97; 1839, 104; 1840, 85; 1841, 86; 1842, 96; 1843, 91; 1844, 130; and 1845, 117. London and Birmingham fluctuated from the lowest point of 61 premium (in 1840) to the highest (in 1844) of 137. The most remarkable case is the York and North Midland, the shares of which in 1838 were at 2¾ discount, and rose by almost regular steps to 56 premium (on a 50*l.* share) in 1845. The South-Western have in the same period risen from 12 discount to about 47 premium on 39*l.* shares. The Great North of England were in 1838 marked "no price;" in 1840 they were at 25 discount; in 1843 at 41 discount; whereas in 1845 they were at 47 premium on 100*l.* paid. The Manchester and Leeds shares, on the 8th of January of the same seven years, have stood thus:—1 premium; 20½ premium; 10 premium; 12 premium; par; 2 premium; 31 premium; 55 premium. The largest advance during 1844 was in the Great North of England, 61*l.*; and the greatest decrease in Liverpool and Manchester, and York and North Midland, of 14*l.*—Railway Record.

ALTERATIONS IN THE COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—On Saturday Mr. Commissioner Goulburn presided in the court previously occupied by Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque, who in future will hold his sittings in the room where the late Sir C. F. Williams held his court. Mr. Commissioner Evans, as the senior commissioner, will be the Chief Commissioner.

COSTS OF UNCERTIFICATED ATTORNEYS.—An opinion has prevailed to some extent, that although an attorney who had not duly renewed his certificate could not recover costs against his client; yet that the client, as between party and party, might recover his costs. It has, however, been recently determined by the Masters of the Common Pleas, that the only costs which can be allowed between party and party, where the attorney is uncertificated, are the costs out of pocket, that is to say, payments made in carrying on the proceedings, and not any fees or emoluments to the uncertificated attorney himself, although really paid to him by the client. The Masters also require that proof should be given of the actual payment to the attorney, and it must appear that the disbursements were properly made by him. In the case in which this rule was laid down, an affidavit was made of payments to the attorney which exceeded the disbursements, but the Master allowed only the sums properly disbursed in the action.—Legal Observer.

A figure of Justice has been placed over the entrance of the new Bankruptcy Courts at Liverpool, whose right hand was to have held a pair of scales: but it is empty; for, after repeated trials, it was found that Justice would not hold the scales evenly! so, to avoid the ludicrous remarks of the passers-by, she has been deprived of them.

The Dublin Monitor publishes a document which shews how "a Monaghan County Jury" behave. Some time back, five persons swore informations against Smith, a sub-inspector of police, for having stabbed a man named M'Caffrey, in Clones, during a riot that took place at a Repeal meeting held in that town. The Grand Jury, on an indictment being sent up against Smith, ignored it; whereupon Smith preferred an indictment against the five persons who swore the informations against him. One of them, named Jordan, was tried at the last Assizes, and found guilty. Subsequently, however, James Thornton, one of the jury, made an affidavit, setting forth that the evidence had to his mind proved Jordan's innocence; that one of the jurors tried to persuade the others to convict the prisoner; that whisky was introduced into the jury-room and many of the jurors were made drunk, and "in consequence of his drinking such whisky, that this deponent agreed to the said verdict;" that he only did so upon the promise that the other jurors would join in a recommendation to mercy, which promise they afterwards broke! The Crown lawyers abandoned the conviction.

WILL OF FRANCIS BAILY, esq. F.R.S. and D.C.L. was lately proved in Doctors' Commons. The executors are John Baily, jun. the nephew, David Jardine, and Philip Martineau, esquires. After devising his several estates to relatives, he leaves to his numerous friends legacies of various amounts. To his sister he gives all manuscript letters and papers, and leaves her the house and furniture at Tavistock-place and 1,000*l.* a year; leaves to his executors his printed books and various instruments and apparatus, as assets in their hands; gives to Sir J. Herschel, the celebrated astronomer, and to Lieutenant Stratford, superintendent of the Nautical Almanack, 1,000*l.* each; to E. B. Airy, Astronomer Royal, Greenwich, 500*l.*; and to A. D. Morgan, esq. 200*l.*; some shares in the Stock Exchange to poor members; to his servants, legacies and mourning. To charitable institutions he bequeaths as follows:—the Dispensary, New-road, 300*l.*; the Dispensary, Burton crescent, the University College Hospital, the King's College Hospital, and the Seaman's Hospital at Greenwich, 200*l.* each; the Society of Foreigners in Distress, 100*l.*; to the several police courts, 20*l.* each for objects of charity. The will is in his own handwriting, dated 12th August last; he died on the 30th of the same month at his residence, Tavistock place, in his 71st year. The personal effects are sworn under 45,000*l.* He was President of the Royal Astronomical Society, Fellow of the Royal Society, and of the Linnean and Geological Societies, and member of the Royal Irish Academy.—Historical Register.

WILL OF THE LATE GEORGE WOODFALL, esq. of Great Dean Yard, Westminster, and Angel-court, London, dated 11th October, 1844, who died 22nd December, has been proved in Doctors' Commons by his sons, the executors. To his eldest son and partner he leaves all his manuscript correspondence and letters, including those from the author of "Junius;" rings to numerous friends (Sir Henry Ellis and others); legacies to his servants.—Ibid.

WILL OF THE LATE WILLIAM BRAME ELWYN, Doctor of Law, who was of York terrace, Regent's Park, has only this month been proved by the relict and sole executrix, now the wife of George Fitch, esq. The deceased died in June, 1841, without leaving any available property. Probate has now been applied for to procure a power of attorney for the purpose of endeavouring to recover the amount of some American securities. Effects sworn under 3,000*l.* Wills not proved within three years after the death of the testator, require an affidavit to be made by the executors, accounting for the delay, as in this case.—Ibid.

WILL OF THE LATE LIEUT.-GEN. THE HON. SIR ROBERT LAWRENCE DUNDAS, K.C.B. who died at Loftus, in the county of York, on 23rd November last, has just been proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, by the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, the nephew and sole executor, to whom the estate at Loftus is bequeathed, and other estates adjoining; also the alum-works and stock, the property of Sir Robert. He is also appointed the residuary legatee of both real and personal estate. The property at Longhull is bequeathed to his sister, the Hon. Frances Chaloner, for her absolute use. The will is very short, and dated 10th December, 1838. The personal estate within the province sworn under 5,000*l.*—Ibid.

THIS Office is provided with Tables specially calculated, by which it can ASSURE DISEASED LIVES on EQUITABLE TERMS.

MEMBERS OF CONSUMPTIVE FAMILIES ASSURED at Equitable Rates.

INCREASED ANNUITIES GRANTED on UNSOUND LIVES, the amount varying with the particular disease.

HEALTHY LIVES are Assured at LOWER RATES than at most other Offices.

Owing to the prevalence of disease, more than two-thirds of the population are not assurable in other offices (see Prospectus, &c.), and it is ascertained that in several of the leading assurance societies in London, 23 per cent., or more than one in five of the applicants, although ostensibly good lives, are rejected on medical examination.

Solicitors being much connected with life assurance, have experienced this difficulty to a considerable extent from the delay, and often permanent obstacles, occurring in loan and other money transactions on behalf of their clients; the legal profession has consequently freely patronized this society, as it affords facilities not hitherto available in assurance transactions.

The success that has attended the office during the FIRST THREE YEARS is highly satisfactory, and there is every reason to believe that, as its peculiar features and principles become more known and better understood, it will command an unusual amount of public patronage.

About THREE-FOURTHS of the POLICIES already issued by the society are on DISEASED LIVES, and a majority of those had been previously rejected by other offices, shewing the necessity which existed for an assurance society on the plan in question.

Medical referees are appointed in almost every town of any extent, no difficulty will therefore be experienced in procuring the examination of parties residing in the country, on whom proposals for assurance are made.

Prospectuses, and every other information, will be forwarded on application.

SURVEYOR.

Mr. Edwin Durrant, King's Lynn.

The object of the Promoters is, to recover from the sea a very extensive tract of land, which now constitutes a part of the great Estuary called THE WASH.

The measure now in contemplation was suggested by the success which has already attended several other works of a similar nature upon the adjoining coasts, by which many thousand acres have been rescued from the overflowing of the sea, and converted into arable and pasture lands of excellent quality

For the present, it is intended to limit the undertaking to the recovery of 30,000 acres. This will require an expenditure of about 500,000*l.* which, deducted from 1,050,000*l.* the value of the land, will leave to the shareholders a clear gain of 550,000*l.* subject only to the claims and compensations of frontage owners.

The capital of the Company will be 500,000*l.* which will be divided into 10,000 shares of 50*l* each, upon which a deposit of 2*l.* 10s. is to be made immediately; but no farther deposit will be required, until an Act of Parliament, for which application will be made in the approaching session, has been obtained for incorporating the Company, and conferring upon it the necessary powers.

But although it has been thought prudent to make provision for raising 500,000*l.* the estimated expense of completing the undertaking, it is confidently expected that it will not be necessary to call for more than 50 to 60 per cent. of that sum, as large tracts of land will be recovered shortly after the commencement and during the progress of the work, which may be made an available fund for prosecuting the undertaking, or be divided among the Shareholders, as may be deemed most expedient. Between 9,000 and 10,000 acres of the most valuable part of the land are fit for immediate embankment, and will be wholly recovered within two or three years after the commencement of the works.

Sealed application for shares to be made by letter (post paid) addressed to Frederick Lane, esq. King's Lynn, Norfolk; or Thomas Wing, esq. Gray's-inn-square, London, on or before the 17th February, when the shares will be allotted; and no further application will be received after that day

Interest at the rate of 4*l.* per cent. will be allowed on all paid-up capital, from the passing of the Act, until a sufficient quantity of land shall have been acquired to cover the expenses and declare a dividend.

January 30th, 1845.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

LEVEL OF THE WASH.

Sir,—I request you will allot to me shares of 50l. each in the above undertaking agreeably to the Prospectus, and I agree to accept such shares as may be allotted to me, and also to pay the deposit thereon, and to sign the Parliamentary Contract and Subscribers' agreement when required.

New and Cheap Issue of Bentham's Works. On the 1st of March will be published, in large 8vo. price 2s. 6d. No. 1. of under the direction of his Literary Executor, JOHN BOWRING.

The issue of a cheap edition of Bentham's Works has been suggested to his literary executor by the consideration that by no better means can he give effect to the instructions of the illustrious deceased; looking not merely to their letter, but to their spirit and intent. His object in providing that the posthumous publication of his works should be accomplished without pecuniary risk to those concerned in it, was, not that the project might be profitable to individuals or beneficial to one class of society, but that the reading portion of the public in general, and especially those members of the poorer classes whose self-taught knowledge constitutes the stamina of the political and social morality of the age, should be able to educate themselves at the fountain head of the utilitarian philosophy. Having therefore presented one edition of the work, at a price which, though cheap, when the quantity of letter-press is considered, is still such as can only be afforded by the comparatively wealthy, the author's literary executor thinks that he is justified in issuing a new edition at a price which will make it accessible to the less opulent classes, and at which very large numbers may be able to acquire an interest in a copy of the works, through the aid of book-clubs or other associations. On the Libraries of Mechanics' Institutes, and other establishments through which the elements of sound knowledge are freely dispensed among the working classes, this issue has strong claims. If there may not be much in the works to attract the attention of those whose literary taste has been unnerved by resigning itself to the allurements of light literature, they will be read with avidity by every man who seeks to have his mind trained to sound, wide, and practical views of morals, politics, and political economy; and no man, whether he have already drunk of the fountains of ancient learning, or be limited to the means of information provided by the language of his fathers, can rise from the perusal of the series of works now presented to the public without being "a wiser and a better man."

The new issue is to be in Monthly Numbers, each containing about 160 pages, large 8vo. closely printed in double columns, and containing as much letter-press as would fill an ordinary 8vo. volume. The works, with the introduction by Mr. Burton, Memoirs and Correspondence of Bentham, by Dr. Bowring, and the General Index, will be comprised in 44 numbers, which will be issued, with unfailing regularity, on the 1st of every month at the price of Half-a-Crown.

This Society has been established upwards of thirty-four years; all just demands upon its funds have been promptly and liberally settled; nearly two millions and a half have been thus paid away on expired policies; and to meet the existing engagements of the Institution, it possesses funds amounting to upwards of a million and three-quarters, almost wholly invested on real and Government securities.

The Rates of Premium are BELOW those of most other Offices, and, under the age of 45, not less so than ten per cent.—a benefit in itself equivalent to an annual bonus; whilst periodical additions are also made to the sums assured upon all policies for the whole duration of life, in proportion to the amount of premium paid; the full advantage of Life Assurance is thus enjoyed by the members of this Institution.

The subjoined List of some of the existing Policies of the Society exhibits the aggregate amount of Bonus assigned to each of those Policies, including that declared at the General Meeting held on the 9th of September, 1842.

SURVEYOR.
Mr. Edwin Durrant, King's Lynn.

The object of the Promoters is, to recover from the sea a very extensive tract of land, which now constitutes a part of the great Estuary called THE WASH.

The measure now in contemplation was suggested by the success which has already attended several other works of a similar nature upon the adjoining coasts, by which many thousand acres have been rescued from the overflowing of the sea, and converted into arable and pasture lands of excellent quality.

For the present, it is intended to limit the undertaking to the recovery of 30,000 acres. This will require an expenditure of about 500,000*l*. which, deducted from 1,050,000*l*. the value of the land, will leave to the shareholders a clear gain of 550,000*l*. subject only to the claims and compensations of frontage owners.

The capital of the Company will be 500,000*l*. which will be divided into 10,000 shares of 50*l*. each, upon which a deposit of 2*l*. 10s. is to be made immediately; but no farther deposit will be required, until an Act of Parliament, for which application will be made in the approaching session, has been obtained for incorporating the Company, and conferring upon it the necessary powers.

But although it has been thought prudent to make provision for raising 500,000*l*. the estimated expense of completing the undertaking, it is confidently expected that it will not be necessary to call for more than 50 to 60 per cent. of that sum, as large tracts of land will be recovered shortly after the commencement and during the progress of the work, which may be made an available fund for prosecuting the undertaking, or be divided among the Shareholders, as may be deemed most expedient. Between 9,000 and 10,000 acres of the most valuable part of the land are fit for immediate embankment, and will be wholly recovered within two or three years after the commencement of the works.

Sealed application for shares to be made by letter (post paid) addressed to Frederick Lane, esq. King's Lynn, Norfolk, or Thomas Wing, esq. Gray's-inn-square, London, on or before the 17th February, when the shares will be allotted; and no further application will be received after that day.

Interest at the rate of 4*l*. per cent. will be allowed on all paid-up capital, from the passing of the Act, until a sufficient quantity of land shall have been acquired to cover the expenses and declare a dividend.

January 20th, 1845.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

LEVEL OF THE WASH.

Sir,—I request you will allot to me shares of 50l. each in the above undertaking agreeably to the Prospectus, and I agree to accept such shares as may be allotted to me, and also to pay the deposit thereon, and to sign the Parliamentary Contract and Subscribers' agreement when required.

THIS Office is provided with Tables specially calculated, by which it can ASSURE DISEASED LIVES on EQUITABLE TERMS.

MEMBERS OF CONSUMPTIVE FAMILIES ASSURED at Equitable Rates.

INCREASED ANNUITIES GRANTED on UNSOUND LIVES, the amount varying with the particular disease.

HEALTHY LIVES are Assured at LOWER RATES than at most other Offices.

Owing to the prevalence of disease, more than two-thirds of the population are not assurable in other offices (see Prospectus, &c.), and it is ascertained that in several of the leading assurance societies in London, 23 per cent., or more than one in five of the applicants, although ostensibly good lives, are rejected on medical examination.

Solicitors being much connected with life assurance, have experienced this difficulty to a considerable extent from the delay, and often permanent obstacles, occurring in loan and other money transactions on behalf of their clients; the legal profession has consequently freely patronized this society, as it affords facilities not hitherto available in assurance transactions.

The success that has attended the office during the FIRST THREE YEARS is highly satisfactory, and there is every reason to believe that, as its peculiar features and principles become more known and better understood, it will command an unusual amount of public patronage.

About THREE-FOURTHS of the POLICIES already issued by the society are on DISEASED LIVES, and a majority of these had been previously rejected by other offices, shewing the necessity which existed for an assurance society on the plan in question.

Medical referees are appointed in almost every town of any extent, no difficulty will therefore be experienced in procuring the examination of parties residing in the country, on whom proposals for assurance are made.

Prospectuses, and every other information, will be forwarded on application.

F. G. P. NEISON, Actuary.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.

Price 4s. 6d. Patronized by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent.—Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, for stopping decayed teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Prepared by Mr. THOMAS, Surgeon Dentist, price 4s. 6d. Sold by Savory and Moore, 220, Regent-street, and 143, Bond-street; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Prout, 229, Strand; Johnston, 68, Cornhill; and all Medicine venders.

Mr. Thomas continues to supply the loss of Teeth on his new system of self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. At home from 11 till 4. 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

MR. CLARKE'S ENAMELLED SUCCEDANEUM, for stopping decayed Teeth, is far superior to any thing ever before used, as it is placed in the tooth without any pressure or pain, and becomes as hard as the enamel, immediately after application, and remains firm in the tooth for life, rendering extraction unnecessary, and renders them again useful for mastication. Prepared only by Mr. Clarke, Surgeon Dentist.

LOSS OF TEETH.

Mr. CLARKE still continues to supply the loss of teeth, from one to a complete set, upon his beautiful system of self-adhesion, which has procured him such universal approbation in some thousands of cases, and recommended by numerous physicians and surgeons, as being the most ingenious system of supplying artificial teeth hitherto invented. They are so contrived as to adapt themselves over the most tender gums or remaining stumps, without causing the least pain, rendering the operation of extraction quite unnecessary. They are so fixed as to fasten any loose teeth, by forming a new gum, where the gums have shrunk, from the use of mercury or other causes, without the aid of any wire or springs, and above all, are firmer in the mouth, and fixed with that attention to nature as to defy detection by the closest observer. He also begs to invite those not liking to undergo any painful operation, as practised by most members of the profession, to inspect his painless, yet effective, system, where numerous sets and partial sets, in all stages of progress, may be seen; and in order that his system may be within the reach of the most economical, he will continue the same moderate charges.

Mr. CLARKE, Surgeon-Dentist, at home from Ten till Five. 53, Harley-street, Cavendish-square.

Important Leasehold Investments, including 73 substantial private Residences and Dwelling-houses, situate in Frederick-street, Frederick-place, and Ampton-place, St. Pancras, and in College-place and King street, Camden town, producing a clear annual income of 3,227*l.*, each house being held under a separate lease, at a low ground rent, and the whole presenting an unusual opportunity for the secure investment of capital in large or small sums and the increase of income.

MESSRS. SHUTTLEWORTH and SONS have received instructions from the proprietor, Mr. William Cubitt, to submit to public AUCTION, at the Mart, early in April, in numerous lots, the following extensive and valuable ESTATES; and in announcing the sale of this important property, the auctioneers avail themselves of the opportunity it affords them of earnestly drawing the attention of trustees and private individuals desirous of improving income by a transfer from the Government Stocks to investments of an undeniable character, and by which their annuities may be at least doubled, independent of an accumulating surplus adequate to replace the amount of the purchase money at the expiration of the respective leases, a material consideration, usually unappreciated by the buyers of leasehold estates. This extensive property consists of the following superior premises, erected under the immediate direction of Messrs. Cubitt and Co., the whole being in the very best condition of repairs, substantial and ornamental, and not requiring any outlay thereon whatever. Each house is held under a separate lease for a long term unexpired, at a low ground rent, the gross rental being 3,661*l.* per annum, and the aggregate ground rents only 434*l.* most amply secured upon 73 private residences and dwelling-houses, eligibly situate, as follows— Eleven in Frederick-street, seven in Frederick-place, and eighteen in Ampton-place, Gray's-inn-road, in the parish of St. Pancras; and twenty-seven in College place, and ten in King-street, Camden-town. The principal portion let, under leases and agreements, to very respectable tenants (clear of sewers, rates and every other assessment without exception), and a small part, recently finished, remains in hand.

NECROLOGY.

SIR JAMES DOWLING.

Chief Justice of New South Wales.

It is with feelings of sincere regret we have to announce the death of Sir James Dowling, Chief Justice of New South Wales, which we collect from the following supplement to the Government Gazette of September last:—

Colonial Secretary's-office, Sydney,
Sept. 28, 1844.

His Excellency the Governor, with feelings of the deepest regret, announces to the public the death of his Honour Sir James Dowling, Chief Justice of the colony, which melancholy event took place at his residence at Darlinghurst, about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

His Excellency feels assured that the public in general will join with him in deeply regretting the loss which the colony has sustained by the death of his Honour, and in a desire to pay all possible respect to his memory.

It is the intention of the Governor to attend the funeral of the deceased Chief Justice, which will move from his late residence at Darlinghurst on Monday next, at 11 o'clock; and his Excellency invites all officers of the civil Government also to attend.

By his Excellency's command,
E. D. THOMSON.

It may be remembered that a few weeks back we stated that his Honour had obtained leave of absence for two years, in order that he might visit his native country, with a view to the restoration of his health, which had completely broken down under the pressure of excessive labour, occasioned by the withdrawal of Judge Burton to Madras. Sir James was then left to discharge all the multitudinous duties connected with the Court of Equity, Court of Common Law, Court of Admiralty, and the Criminal Court, with no other coadjutor than Judge Stephens, a gentleman of high talent, not long since appointed to that office from the bar of Van Diemen's Land. These duties completely broke him down, and he was thrown upon his bed incapable of further exertion. His medical attendants at once pronounced on the necessity of immediate withdrawal from all active employment, as well as the expediency of a change of climate. Under these circumstances, the Governor granted him permission to return to England; and he had taken his passage with Lady Dowling to come home, in the forlorn hope that he would be able to resume his duties hereafter. Unhappily, however, a temporary convalescence was succeeded by a relapse, which carried him off on the day stated in the Gazette, to the universal regret of all the inhabitants of the colony, by whom he was sincerely respected, not only on account of his great talent, integrity, and impartiality as a judge, but for his unceasing benevolence as a man, having been a liberal contributor to every institution calculated to promote the happiness or advantages of the colony. Previous to his death, the Legislative Assembly, impressed with the value of his past services, (having been 17 years on the bench), voted him the full amount of his official salary (2,000*l.* a-year) during his absence, although it is customary, on such occasions, to reduce that moderate stipend one-half. Farewell addresses of the most flattering description were presented to him by the corporation and every institution in Sydney; while the bar not only offered the strongest expressions of their sympathy, but handed to him a valuable piece of plate commemorative of the high regard which they entertained for him, and the deep sorrow they felt at the cause of his departure. It is a source of painful reflection to the family of the learned judge, that three years back, when labouring under ill-health, arising from his incessant application, he applied to the Governor (Sir G. Gipps) for permission to return to his native air to recruit his strength, but was refused on the ground of economy, and on the plea that his medical men would not certify that he was incapable of continuing his duties without danger to his life. The economy by this fatal determination secured was a saving of 500*l.* a-year, for two years. One-half of Sir James's salary would have been apportioned to some gentlemen of the bar who would have been placed on the bench, and this sum would have been increased to 1,500*l.* per annum, the salary of a puisne judge, out of the colonial funds. This refusal is the more extraordinary, as a similar license had been granted to his predecessor, Sir F. Forbes, and to Judge Burton, next in seniority to himself, without hesitation. Judge Burton, on his return to the colony, was appointed to a better post at Madras, and thus Sir James and Judge Stephens were left to perform the whole judicial duties of the colony, and the life of a valuable public functionary has been sacrificed. Sir James had long been a member of the English bar, and was well known, and his services universally appreciated as the reporter of cases under the title of "Dowling and Ryland's Reports." He was appointed to the office of puisne judge in New South Wales in June 1827; and in August 1837, on the retirement of Sir Francis Forbes, was elevated to the Chief Justice-ship, on which occasion he had the honour of receiving knighthood from her Gracious Majesty.

He has left behind him a widow, two daughters, and a son in the colony, to deplore his irreparable loss. Mr. James Dowling, his second son, is at the English bar, and was on the eve of his departure to the colony, hourly expecting the arrival of his father, when the melancholy intelligence we have thus announced, arrived. Sir James Dowling was in his 58th year, having been born in 1787. His family in this country is well known as members of the bar, and their connexion with the literature of the country.

THE MARQUIS OF WESTMINSTER.

It is our painful duty to record the demise of the above respected nobleman, who expired at Eaton Hall, on Monday, the 17th inst. at half-past ten, P.M.

The deceased Robert Grosvenor, Marquis of Westminster, Earl Grosvenor, Viscount Belgrave, county Chester; Baron Grosvenor, of Eaton, in the same county, in the peerage of the United Kingdom, and a baronet, was eldest son of the first Earl Grosvenor, by Miss Vernon, daughter of Mr. Henry Vernon, of Hilton-park, Stafford-hire, granddaughter maternally of Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Strafford. He was born 22d March, 1767, and married 28th April, 1794, Lady Eleanor Egerton, only surviving daughter and heir of Thomas, first Earl of Wilton, by whom, who survives the marquis, he leaves issue, Richard Earl Grosvenor (now Marquis of Westminster); the Earl of Wilton, born 30th December, 1799, who succeeded to the title on the death of his maternal grandfather in 1814, married to Lady Mary, fourth daughter of the Earl of Derby; and Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P. born 24th April, 1801, and married 17th May, 1831, the Hon. Charlotte Wellesley, eldest daughter of Lord Cowley, our ambassador at France.

The late Marquis succeeded to the title of Earl Grosvenor on the demise of his father, in 1802, and in September, 1831, he was created Marquis of Westminster. In 1841, he was elected a Knight of the Garter. His lordship was Lord Lieutenant, and Custos Rotulorum of Flintshire. When Viscount Belgrave, greater expectations were raised of his talents than were realized by his speeches in Parliament. He represented East Looe and Chester in several Parliaments. In 1789 he was made a Lord of the Admiralty, an office he held until 1791. In 1793 he was appointed one of the Commissioners of the Board of Control, and nominated a member of the Privy Council. He possessed considerable political influence in the county of Chester, and previous to the Reform Bill he returned no less than six members to the House of Commons. The late marquis was well known as one of the most distinguished patrons of the turf, his lordship for a long series of years having kept the largest and most successful racing stud in this country.

The deceased nobleman is succeeded in his honours and vast estates by Richard Earl Grosvenor, his eldest son, born January 27, 1795, and married September 16, 1819, Lady Elizabeth Mary Leveson Gower, second daughter of the late and sister of the present Duke of Sutherland, by whom he has a numerous family, his eldest son, Viscount Belgrave (now Earl Grosvenor), having been born on the 13th of October, 1825. The present Marquis represented the county of Chester in several Parliaments previous to the general election in 1835, since which period his lordship has retired from public affairs.

This noble family traces its descent from Gilbert le Grosvenor, who accompanied William the Conqueror to this country from Normandy, and was nephew of Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester, so that he was closely related to the Conqueror. The family settled in Cheshire. Sir Richard le Grosvenor, eldest son of Sir Thomas lord of Hulme, was created a baronet in 1621-2. Sir Thomas, his grandson, married, in 1676, Mary, sole daughter and heiress of Mr. Alexander Davies, of Ebury, in Middlesex, by which alliance all the vast real property possessed by the family in and about London was acquired. He died in 1700, and Sir Robert Grosvenor, who succeeded his father in the baronetcy, but died in 1755, left Sir Richard Grosvenor, who was cup-bearer to George II. at that sovereign's coronation. In April, 1761, he was created Lord Grosvenor, and subsequently, in July, 1784, Viscount Belgrave and Earl Grosvenor. He was considered in fashionable life one of its brilliant stars, and was, like the late Marquis, his son, a great supporter of racing. He died in August, 1802.

In politics, the late Marquis was a Whig, and for several years took rather an active part in the business of the House of Lords, advocating on all occasions the principles of civil and religious liberty, though he was not as an orator very commanding or successful. His lordship promoted the reform in Parliament, cheerfully sacrificing, in common with other Whig noblemen, his Parliamentary patronage for the public benefit.

In 1841, the Company declared an addition to the Shareholders of one-half of their Stock, and also added a Bonus of 2*l*. per cent. per annum on the sum insured to all policies of the participating class from the time they were effected.

THIS Office is provided with Tables specially calculated, by which it can ASSURE DISEASED LIVES on EQUITABLE TERMS.

MEMBERS OF CONSUMPTIVE FAMILIES ASSURED at Equitable Rates.

INCREASED ANNUITIES GRANTED on UNSOUND LIVES, the amount varying with the particular disease.

HEALTHY LIVES are Assured at LOWER RATES than at most other Offices.

Owing to the prevalence of disease, more than two-thirds of the population are not assurable in other offices (see Prospectus, &c.), and it is ascertained that in several of the leading assurance societies in London, 22 per cent., or more than one in five of the applicants, although ostensibly good lives, are rejected on medical examination.

Solicitors being much connected with life assurance, have experienced this difficulty to a considerable extent from the delay, and often permanent obstacles, occurring in loan and other money transactions on behalf of their clients; the legal profession has consequently freely patronized this society, as it affords facilities not hitherto available in assurance transactions.

The success that has attended the office during the FIRST THREE YEARS is highly satisfactory, and there is every reason to believe that, as its peculiar features and principles become more known and better understood, it will command an unusual amount of public patronage.

About THREE-FOURTHS of the POLICIES already issued by the society are on DISEASED LIVES, and a majority of these had been previously rejected by other offices, shewing the necessity which existed for an assurance society on the plan in question.

Medical referees are appointed in almost every town of any extent, no difficulty will therefore be experienced in procuring the examination of parties residing in the country, on whom proposals for assurance are made.

Prospectuses, and every other information, will be forwarded on application.

F. G. P. NEISON, Actuary.

(Copy of the Letter referred to.)

Welbeck, Feb. 13, 1845.

Sir,—I have seen in the newspaper my name as a Trustee and Director of the Wash Embankment.

I am not sure whether or not I authorized Lord George Bentinck to say I would subscribe 5,000*l.* which I believe is equivalent to saying I would take 100 shares in that scheme. However, whether I did so or not, I authorize you to put down my name for that number.

But I must desire that my name may be withdrawn from all advertisements as Trustee or Director.

It is quite impossible for me to take any share in the management of its concerns, and therefore I cannot allow my name to be used in a manner which might mislead people into the opinion that I made myself in any way responsible for its success; at the same time I have no doubt that it will succeed, and you may quote my opinion to that effect.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant.

Frederic Lane, Esq. SCOTT PORTLAND.

This day is published, price 8s. the Third Edition of the

JUSTICES' POCKET MANUAL; or, Guide to the ordinary Duties of a Justice of the Peace, with considerable additions and improvements, and an Appendix of Forms.

By SAMUEL STONE, Solicitor,
Clerk to the Justices, and Town Clerk for the Borough of Leicester.

This edition contains, in addition to a classified arrangement of the various other subjects which constitute the business of Courts of Petty Session, a copious analysis of the late Acts respecting Orders in Bastardy, Masters and Workmen in the Woollen and other Hosiery Manufactures, Mines, Theatres, Parish Constables, Poundbreach, and the Jurisdiction of the Quarter Sessions, distinguishing all the offences affected by the latter Statute. This information will be useful not only to Magistrates and their Clerks, but also to CLERKS OF THE PEACE. The Table of "Periodical Business for Town Clerks" has been prepared for the use of those who hold the office of TOWN CLERK in connection with that of Clerk to the Justices. The Table "Periodical Business for Justices" comprises all the business requiring attention at stated periods of the year.

Under the title "Practice" is given a full outline of the various stages of the proceedings before Justices from the application for a Summons or Warrant to the final adjudication, with the Law applicable thereto.

Opinions of the Press.

"Calculated to be of much service, by way of ready reference, and as a guide to the whole summary jurisdiction. We have heard it extremely well spoken of by magistrates and professional men. We do not hesitate to recommend it warmly."—The Justice of the Peace.

"In this new edition the author has adopted many improvements and additions, correcting it to the law as since altered in so many of the subjects treated of. The arrangement is admirable. We heartily commend it to magistrates, their clerks, and the attorneys who practise in their courts."—Law Times.

"In publishing this manual, the author has supplied a common want in every justice-room. He has furnished a concise, and from close observation, we may add, accurate summary of the different laws to be administered in petty sessions, and of the mode in which the cases are to be dealt with."—Morning Chronicle.

"This work contains a most excellent and practical summary of all the usual cases which come before a justice of the peace."—Gateshead Observer.

"We can hardly conceive a much more useful book for magistrates and their clerks. The author seems to have performed his task in an admirable manner."—Worcestershire Chronicle.

Also, by the same Author,

THE JUSTICES' HAND-BOOK, containing Precedents of Four Hundred Informations under Summary Convictions. Price 6s.

"The author's attempt is successful, and he has supplied what has long been a desideratum."—Law Times.

"In this new edition the author has adopted many improvements and additions, correcting it to the law as since altered in so many of the subjects treated of. The arrangement is admirable. We heartily commend it to magistrates, their clerks, and the attorneys who practise in their courts." —Law Times.

"In publishing this manual, the author has supplied a common want in every justice-room. He has furnished a concise, and from close observation, we may add, accurate summary of the different laws to be administered in petty sessions, and of the mode in which the cases are to be dealt with"—Morning Chronicle.

"This work contains a most excellent and practical summary of all the usual cases which come before a justice of the peace"—Gateshead Observer.

SELTERS WATER, in England called SELTZER WATER. The DUKE of NASSAU, to prevent any further fraudulent imitation of SELTERS WATER, the celebrated produce of his Territory, previously carried to such an enormous extent, that bottles with his name, arms, and marks, have been specially made for the purpose in this country, has, through THE DIRECTION GENERAL OF HIS DOMAINS, adopted the use of THE PATENT METALLIC CAPSULES, and has entered into an agreement with the Patentee, Mr. J. T. BETTS, of London, by which the exclusive right is given to him, of purchasing direct from the Springs for the United Kingdom, its Colonies, and Dependencies.

The nature and extent of this arrangement with the Nassau Government, will not only enable Mr. BETTS to supply the public at a moderate price, but every bottle being capsuled the instant it is filled in the same state of freshness and perfection as at the first moment of the waters being taken from the spring.

Particulars, with the Declaration of the Nassau Government, shewing the impossibility of adulteration, or of a spurious article being substituted for the genuine, will be published as soon as the navigation of the Rhine is opened, and supplies received.
